A $3 WASHING MACHINE FREE!
Last year we placed upon the market the greatest labor-saving invention of the 19th century. It was a self-operating Washing Machine. It washes the clothing clean WITHOUT THE WASHBOARD OR ANY RUBBING WHATSOEVER. We advertised a few hundred free to introduce them, and through these free samples sold over 80,000. One lady in Chicago (Mrs. M. M. Mott, 538 W. 15th St.) was so well pleased with her sample that she became an agent and sold over 1200 in four months. W. C. Hamill, Box 357, Toronto, Ont., ordered over 600 after testing his sample. We have scores of just such examples as this. It pays "to cast your bread upon the waters." OUR GREAT OFFER: This year we intend to sell less than ONE MILLION WASHERS, and to do this we will first start off by GIVING AWAY 1000 samples. All we ask of those who receive one is that they will give it a good trial, and if satisfactory recommend it to their friends. Agents are coming money. We have several who are making $100 per day and upwards. "First come, first served." So if you want one from the lot we are going to give away, send us your name and address at once. ## UNOCCUPIED FIELDS.

Discourse by Rev. Dr. Talmage at the Tabernacle.

The Churches Must Stop Bombarding the Old Ironclad Sinners—Why People Go Into Skepticism—Northern Nations Devastated by Alcoholism.

BROOKLYN, Oct. 21.—The audiences at the Brooklyn Tabernacle this autumn are larger than at any time during the history of this church, and greater numbers go away not able to get in. Led by cornet and organ the congregation sang with great power the hymn:

The morning light is breaking,
The darkness disappears,
The song of men are waking
To penitential tears.

The Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D., read and explained passages of Scripture concerning the dawn of universal righteousness. The subject of his sermon was "Unoccupied Fields," and the text from Romans ix. 20: "Lest I should build upon another man's foundation." Dr. Talmage said:

Stirring reports come from all parts of America showing what a great work the churches of God are doing, and I congratulate them and their pastors. Misapprehensions have been going the rounds, saying that the outside benevolence of this particular church are neglected, when the fact is that large sums of money are being raised in various ways by this church for all styles of good objects, not always through the boards of our own denomination. This church was built by all denominations of Christians, and by many sections of this land and other lands, and that obligation has led us to raise money for many objects not connected with our denomination, and this accounts for the fact that we have not regularly contributed to all the boards commended. But I rejoice in that you have done, as a church, a magnificent work, and am grateful that we have received during the year, by the confession of faith in Christ, 725 souls, which fact I mention, not in boasting, but in defense of this church, showing that it has been neither idle nor inefficient. The most of our accessions have been from the outside world, so that, taking the idea of my text, we have not been building on other people's foundations.

In laying out the plan of his missionary tour Paul sought out towns and cities which had not yet been preached to. He goes to Corinth, a city mentioned for splendor and vice, and Jerusalem, where the priesthood and the Sapherim were ready to leap with both feet upon the Christian religion. He feels he has special work to do, and he means to do it. What was the result? The grandest life of usefulness that a man ever lived. We modern Christian workers are not apt to imitate Paul. We build on another people's foundations. If we erect a church we prefer to have it filled with families all of whom have been pious. Do we gather a Sabbath-school class, we want good boys and girls, hair combed, faces washed, manners attractive. So a church in this day is apt to be built out of other churches. Some ministers spend all their time in fishing in other people's ponds, and they throw the line into that church pond and jerk out a Methodist, and throw the line into another church pond and bring out a Presbyterian, or there is a religious row in some neighboring church and a whole school of fish swim off from that pond, and we take them all in with one sweep of the net. What is gained? Absolutely nothing for the general cause of Christ. It is only as in an army, when a regiment is transferred from one division to another, from the Tennessee to the Potomac.

What strengthens the army is new recruits. What I have always desired is that while we are courteous to those coming from other flocks, we build our church not out of other churches, but out of the world, lest we build on another man's foundation. The fact is, this is a big world. When in our schoolboy days we learned the diameter and circumference of this planet, we did not learn half. It is the latitude and longitude and diameter and circumference of want and woe and sin that no figures can calculate. This one spiritual continent of wretchedness reaches, across all zones, and if I were called to give its geographical boundary, I would say it is bounded on the north and south and east and west by the great heart of God's sympathy and love. Oh, it is a great world. Since 6 o'clock this morning 60,000 persons have been born, and all these multiplied populations are to be reached of the Gospel. In England, or in our Eastern American cities, we are being much crowded, and an acre of ground is of great value, but out West 500 acres is a small farm and 20,000 acres is no unusual possession. There is a vast field here and everywhere unoccupied, plenty of room more, not building on another man's foundation.

We need as churches to stop bombarding the old ironclad sinners that have been proof against thirty years of Christian assault. Alas for that church which lacks the spirit of evangelism, spending on one chandelier enough to light 500 souls to glory, and in one carved pillar enough to have made a thousand men "pillars in the house of our God forever," and doing less good than many a log cabin meeting house with tallow candles stuck in wooden sockets, and a minister who has never seen college or known the difference between Greek and Choctaw. We need as churches to get into sympathy with the great outside world, and let them know that none are so broken-hearted or hardly bested that will not be welcomed. "No," says some fastidious Christian, "I don't like to be crowded in church. Don't put any one in my pew." My brother, what will you do in Heaven? When a great multitude that no man can number assemble they will put fifty in your pew. What are the select few to-day assembled in the Christian churches compared with the mightier millions outside of them—800,000 in Brooklyn, but less than 100,000 in the churches? Many of the churches are like a hospital that should advertise that its patients must have nothing worse than toothache "run-rounds," but no broken heads, no crushed ankles, no fractured thighs. Give us for treatment moderate sinners, velvet-coated sinners, and sinners with a gloss on. It is as though a man had a farm of 3,000 acres and put all his work on one acre. He may raise never so large ears of corn, never so big heads of wheat, he would remain poor. The church of God has bestowed its chief care on one acre and has raised splendid men and women in that small inclosure, but the field is the world. That means North and South America, Europe, Asia, and Africa, and all the islands of the sea. It is as though after a great battle there were left 50,000 wounded and dying on the field, and three surgeons gave all their time to three patients under their charge. The major general comes in and says to the doctors: "Come out here and look at the nearly 50,000 dying for lack of surgical attendance." "No," say the three doctors, standing there, fanning their patients, "we have three important cases here and we are attending to them; and when we are not positively busy with their wounds, it takes all our time to keep the flies off." In this awful battle of sin and sorrow, where millions have fallen on millions, do not let us spend all our time in taking care of a few people, and when the command comes: "Go into the world," say practically: "No, I cannot go; I have here a few choice cases, and I am busy keeping off the flies." There are multitudes to-day who have never had any Christian worker look them in the eye and with earnestness in the accentuation say, "Come!" or they would long ago have been in the kingdom. My friends, religion is either a sham or a tremendous reality. If it be a sham, let us disband our churches and Christian association. If it be a reality, then great populations are on the way to the bar of God unfitted for the ordeal, and what are we doing?

In order to reach the multitude of outsiders we must drop all technicalities out of our religion. When we talk to people about the hypostatic union and French Encyclopedianism, and Erastinianism and Complutensianism, we are as impolitic and little understood as if a physician should talk to an ordinary patient about the pericardium and intercostal muscle and scorbutic symptoms. Many of us come out of the theological seminaries so loaded up that we take the first ten years to show our people how much we know, and the next ten years get our people to know as much as we know, and at the end find that neither of us know anything as we ought to know. Here are hundreds and thousands of sinning, struggling and dying people, who need to realize just one thing—that Jesus Christ came to save them, and will save them now. But we go into a profound and elaborate definition of what justification is, and after all the work there are not, outside of the learned profession, 5,000 people in the United States who can tell what justification is. I will read you the definition: "Justification is purely a forensic act, the act of a judge sitting in the forum, in which the Supreme Ruler and Judge, who is accountable to none, and who alone knows the manner in which the ends of His universal government can best be obtained, reckons that which was done by the substitute in the same manner as if it had been done by those who believe in the substitute, and not on account of anything done by them, but purely on account of this gracious method of reckoning, grants them the full remission of their sins."

Now, what is justification? I will tell you what justification is—when a sinner believes God lets him off. One summer in Connecticut I went to a large factory, and I saw over the door written the words: "No Admittance." I entered and saw over the next door: "No Admittance." Of course I entered. I got inside and found it a pin factory, and they were making pins, very serviceable, fine, and useful pins. So the spirit of exclusiveness has practically written over the outside door of many a church: "No Admittance." And if the stranger enters he finds practically written over the second door: "No Admittance." And if he goes in, over all the pew doors seems written: "No Admittance;" while the minister stands in the pulpit, hammering out his little niceties of belief, pounding out the technicalities of religion, making pins. In the most practical, common sense way, and laying aside the non-essentials and the hard definitions of religion, go out on the God-given mission, telling the people what they need, and when and how they can get it.

Comparatively little effort as yet has been made to save that large class of persons in our midst called skeptics, and he who goes to work here will not be building upon another man's foundation. There is a great multitude of them. They are afraid of us and our churches, for the reason we don't know how to treat them. One of this class met Christ, and hear with what tenderness and pathos and beauty and success Christ dealt with him: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul and with all thy mind and with all thy strength. This is the first commandment; and the second is like to this, namely, thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. There is no other commandment greater than this. And the scribe said to Him: Well, Master, Thou has said the truth, for there is one God, and to love Him with all the heart and all the understanding and all the soul and all the strength is more than whole burnt offerings and sacrifices. And when Jesus saw that he answered discreetly He said unto him: "Thou art not far from the kingdom of God." So a skeptic was saved in one interview. But few Christian people treat the skeptic in that way. Instead of taking hold of him with the gentle hand of love we are apt to take him with the iron pincers of ecclesiasticism.

Remember skepticism always has some reason, good or bad, for existing. Goethe's irreligion started when the news came to Germany of the earthquake at Lisbon, Nov. 1, 1775. That 60,000 people should have perished in that earthquake and in the after rising of the Tagus River so stirred his sympathies that he threw up his belief in the goodness of God.

Others have gone into skepticism from a natural persistence in asking the reason why. They have been fearfully stabbed of the interrogation point. There are so many things they cannot get explained. They cannot understand the Trinity or how God can be sovereign and yet man a free agent. Neither can I. They say: "I don't understand why a good God should have let sin come into the world." Neither do I. You say: "Why was that child started in life with such disadvantages, while others have all physical and mental equipment?" I cannot tell. They go out of church on Easter morning and say: "That doctrine of the resurrection confounded me." So it is to me a mystery beyond unravelment. I understand all the processes by which men get into the dark. I know them all. I have traveled with burning feet that blistered way. The first word that children learn to utter is generally papa or mamma. I think the first word I ever uttered was "Why." I know what it is to have a hundred midnights pour their darkness into one hour. Such men are not to be scoffed at but helped. Turn your back upon a drowning man when you have a rope with which to pull him ashore, and let that woman in the third story of a house perish in the flames when you have a ladder with which to help her out and help her down; rather than turn your back scoffingly on a skeptic whose soul is in more peril than the bodies of those other endangered ones possibly can be. Oh, skepticism is a dark land. There are men in this house who would give a thousand worlds if they possessed them, to get back to the placid faith of their fathers and mothers, and it is our place to help them, and we may help them, never through their heads, but always through their hearts. These skeptics, when brought to Jesus, will be mightily affected, far more so than those who never examined the evidences of Christianity. Thomas a-halmers was once a skeptic, Robert Hall a skeptic, Robert Newton a skeptic, Christmas Evans a skeptic. But when once with strong hands they took hold of the chariot of the Gospel they rolled it on with what momentum! If I address such men and women to-day, I throw out no scoff. I implore them by the memory of the good old days when at their mother's knee they said: "Now I lay me down to sleep," and by those days and nights of scarlet fever in which she watched you, giving you the medicine at just the right time, and turning your pillow when it was hot, and with hands that many years ago turned to dust, soothed away your pain and with voice that you will never hear again, unless you join her in the better country, told you to never mind, for you would feel better by and by, and by that dying couch, where she looked so pale and talked so slowly, catching her breath between the words, and you felt an awful loneliness coming over your soul; by all that, I beg you to come back and take the same religion. It was good enough for her. It is good enough for you. Nay, I have a better plea than that. I plead by all the wounds and tears and blood and groans and agonies and death throes of the Son of God, who approaches you this moment with torn brow and lacerated hand, and whipped back, and saying: "Come unto me, all ye who are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

Again, there is a field of usefulness but little touched, occupied by those who are astray in their habits. All northern nations like those of North America and England and Scotland—that is, in the colder climates—are devastated by alcoholism. They take the fire to keep up the warmth. In southern countries, like Arabia and Spain, the blood is so they are not tempted to fiery liquids. The great Roman armies never drank anything stronger than water tinged with vinegar, but under our northern climate the temptation to heating stimulants is most mighty and millions succumb. When a man's habits go wrong the church drops him, the social circle drops him, good influences drop him, we all drop him. Of all the men who get off track but few ever get on again. Near my summer residence there is a life-saving station on the beach. There are all the ropes and rockets, the boats, the machinery for getting people off shipwrecks. Summer before last I saw there fifteen or twenty men who were breakfasting after having just escaped with their lives and nothing more. Up and down our coasts are built these useful structures, and the mariners know it, and they feel that if they are driven into the breakers there will be apt from shore to come a rescue. The churches of God ought to be so many life-saving stations, not so much to help those who are in smooth waters, but those who have been shipwrecked. Come, let us run out the life-boats? And who will man them? We do not preach enough to such men; we have not enough faith in their release? Alas! if when they come to hear us we are laboriously trying to show the difference between sublapsarianism and supralapsarianism, while they have a thousand vipers of remorse and despair coiling around and biting their immortal spirits. The church is not chiefly for goodish sort of men whose proclivities are all right and who could get to heaven praying and singing in their own homes. It is on the beach to help the drownings. Those bad cases are the cases that God likes to take hold of. He can save a big sinner as well as a small sinner, and when a man calls earnestly to God for help He will go out to deliver such a one. If it were necessary God would come down from the sky, followed by all the artillery of heaven and a million angels with drawn swords. Get 100 such redeemed men in each of your churches, and nothing could stand before them, for such men are generally warm-hearted and enthusiastic. No formal prayers then. No heartless singing then. No cold conventionalisms then.

Furthermore, the destitute children of the street offer a field of work comparatively unoccupied. The uncared-for children are in the majority in Brooklyn and in most of our cities. When they grow up, if unreformed, they will outvote your children, and they will govern your children. The whisky ring will hatch out other whisky rings, and grog shops will kill with their horrible stench public sobriety, unless the church of God rises up with outstretched arms and enfolds his dying population in her bosom. Public schools cannot do it. Blackwell's Island cannot do it. Almshouses cannot do it. New York Tombs and Raymond Street Jail cannot do it. Sing Sing cannot do it. Church of God, wake up to your magnificent mission! You can do it. Get somewhere, somehow, to work.

The Prussian cavalry mount by putting their right foot into the stirrup, while the American cavalry mount by putting their left foot into the stirrup. I don't care how you mount your war charger, if you only get into this battle for God and get there soon, right stirrup, or left stirrup, or no stirrup at all. The unoccupied fields are all around us, and why should we build on another man's foundation? That God has called this church to especial work no one can doubt. Its history has been miraculous. God has helped us at every step, and though the wheels of its history have made many revolutions, they have all been forward, and never backward, and now with our borders enlarged and with important re-enforcements, we start on a new campaign. At Sharon Springs, nineteen years ago, while in the park, I asked God if He had any particular work for me to do to make it plain and I would do it. He revealed to me the style of church we were to have, and He revealed to me the architecture, and He revealed to me the modes of worship, and He revealed to me my work, and as far as in my ignorance and weakness I have seen the right way I have tried to walk in it. We decided that we wanted it a soul-saving church, and it has been almost a constant outpouring of the Holy Ghost. Ye powers of darkness, ye devils in hell, we mean to snatch from your dominion other multitudes, if God will help us. I have heard of what was called the "thundering legion." It was in 179 a part of the Roman army to which some Christians belonged, and their prayers, it was said, were answered by thunder and lightning and hail and tempest, which overthrew an invading army and saved the empire. And I would to God that this church may be so mighty in prayer and work that it would become a thundering legion before which the forces of sin might be restored, and the gates of hell might tremble. Now that the autumn has come, and the Gospel ship has been repaired and enlarged, it is time to launch her for another voyage. Heave away now, lads! Shake out the reefs in the foretopsail! Come, O heavenly wind, and fill the canvas! Jesus aboard will assure our safety. Jesus on the sea will beckon us forward. Jesus on the shining shore will welcome us into harbor. And so it came to pass that they all escaped safe to land.

If there had been another woman and a lawyer in the garden of Eden Eve would have probably got a divorce and married the devil.

INDIANA STATE NEWS.

—The Louisville Times and other sensational papers compare Harrison County to the Kentucky counties of Bell and Rowan, and says that a reign of terror exists here on account of the depredations of the "White Caps." All such stuff is the sheerest nonsense, and is very ridiculous to those who are acquainted with the facts. It is true that there are "White Caps," and that they have done many things which were calculated to bring reproach upon the county; but it is not true that a reign of terror exists, and that men, women, and children are flogged until they fall from exhaustion and that men are frequently shot down in their door-yards. Harrison is one of the best counties in the State, and her people are industrious and happy. It has about 150 public schools, nearly that number of churches, and stands at the head in the Sunday-school cause. The people protest against being compared to the bloody counties of Kentucky, and know that they do not deserve any such censure.

Complications have arisen in the arrangement for the transfer of the gift of Elijah Hayes and wife, of Warsaw, who last month gave an estate valued at $130,000 to the Mission Board of the M. E. Church. The property consists of Hotel Hayes, a three-story brick structure, several business blocks and about forty town lots, and two or three farms. The gift was hedged in with several conditions, which proved objectionable to the Mission Board. Among the stipulations made by Mr. Hayes was that the income only on the property be used for fifty years, the estate remaining intact, after which time it is to be at the disposal of the Board. An annuity is to be paid Mr. and Mrs. Hayes during life. The income from the property amounts to $5,000 per year.

Peter Joyce, sentenced in 1884 to the Southern Prison from Switzerland County, for a nine years' term, on a charge of manslaughter, has been pardoned by the Governor. While returning from a hunting expedition with Squire Sanders, a friend, his gun was accidentally discharged, and he was killed. Joyce gave himself up, was tried and convicted. The judge who tried him, the county officers, and the G. A. R. post at Vevay, with all his neighbors, petitioned for his release. Joyce was in the army three years, and his reputation was that of a good citizen. He has served nearly four years, and is released on condition that he abstain from the use of intoxicants and lead a quiet and industrious life.

A carriage load of Reform School officers of Plainfield, started out recently to attempt the capture of an escaped inmate. Going east on the National road about two miles, all alighted except two officers. These two started to return to the institution with the carriage. When near town the horses became frightened and ran away. The officers remained in the carriage and kept the horses in the road until the bridge crossing White Lick, just west of town, was reached, when Joseph Fagin, one of the officers, thinking the carriage was going to upset, jumped, striking his head upon the ground, fracturing his skull and sustaining other injuries, from which he died.

Patents have been issued to the following named Indiana inventors: Macajah C. Henley, Richmond, machine for boring, drilling, driving, and withdrawing screws, etc.; James A. McCormick, Indianapolis, game; Henry D. Merrill, Columbus, flood-fence; Orlando Patricks, assignor of one-half to C. Ross, Shelbyville, washing machine; Benjamin Roberts, Indianapolis, smoke consumer; William E. Shaffer, Carlisle, machine for building fences; Anna M. Shirk, Anderson, garment-fastener.

—The agents of the drive-well monopoly are accused of resorting to many questionable plans for locating driven wells. It is said men are hired to go from house to house in Wabash County disguised as peddlers. While disposing of their wares they make an inspection of the premises, and if a driven well is found a report is made and the owner is soon notified to pay the royalty.

—Mrs. Harrison Posey came to Vincennes in September from Sweetwater, Texas. Her husband followed shortly after, but has not been heard from since. He had money and was 65 years old, and foul play is suspected. The old couple had been married but two years, and their union was the result of an early love romance, forty-six years before. The aged wife is grief-stricken.

—The most powerful gas well in the State is believed to be that at Greentown, Howard County. Owing to the noise made by the escaping gas it was found necessary to close the public schools, and no services could be held in the churches. The big well is generally voted a nuisance in its present condition. The roar of the well can be heard eight miles away.

—In August, Frank Fagan, Marshal of Marion, was attacked by a savage bull-dog belonging to Samuel Clannin, and seriously bitten. He sued Clannin for $1,000. The case was tried and the jury brought in a verdict for the plaintiff for $500.

—Thomas Sicklen, aged 19 years, was kicked near the temple by a mule at the residence of George Stearley, in Jackson Township, Clay County. His skull was crushed, and the brain is oozing from the fracture. He will die.

—Benjamin Washam, a bridge carpenter, residing at Connersville, while at work on the Hanna Creek railroad bridge, fell a distance of thirty feet, receiving internal injuries that it is feared will prove fatal.

—Thomas Wilkerson, the richest man in Jennings County, died of apoplexy, aged 88. He was worth about $1,000,000.

—A wreck near Koutz caused by the collision of a freight and passenger train, caused a terrible loss of life, about thirty persons being crushed or burned to death.

—The large barn of John K. Smith, one-half mile north of Brookfield, was set on fire and totally destroyed with contents. Loss, $2,000; insurance unknown.

All members of the Thirteenth Indiana Cavalry are requested to send their post-office address to O. D. Reeves, Secretary of the Association at Richmond.

—Lewis H. Farret was killed at Columbus City, by an old building falling on him.

—Mrs. Fromer has been convicted at Greengburg of murder in the first degree and sentenced to life imprisonment. She killed her husband.

—Charles Rutherford, a brakeman on the L. N. A. & C. Railway was so injured on his first trip that he died. His home is at Lafayette.

—The thirteenth natural-gas well sunk in Grant County was drilled in the Trenton rock at Marion, producing an immense flow of gas.

—Five thousand persons are wearing the blue ribbon at Greensburg, the result of Mr. Murphy's temperance work.

—At Marion while accompanying her husband to the house of a neighbor to visit a sick woman, Mrs. Evan Massey fell down in the road and instantly expired of heart disease.

"What have you to remark about my singing?" asked an irate vocalist. "Nothing," replied a spectator; "it is not remarkable."

"SARAH," said a wag "it's all over town." "What's all over town?" was the anxious inquiry. "Mud," Sarah's eyes dropped.

"TIRED OUT."

"Just tired out," the neighbor said, turning from the squalid bed, where the weary woman lay, panting life's last hours away. Save that sound of sobbing breath, all was still as coming death; for the frightened children cowered where, with heavy brows that lowered, 'neath the long enduring strain, the mute husband bore his pain.

Just tired out—far down below waves were fretting on the flow; and the full recurrent roar echoed upward from the shore; fainter grew the pulses' beat as the worn hands plucked the sheet, and the death-damps gathered, where ruffled all the tangled hair, said the watcher at her side, "She is waiting for the tide."

When the waves had ebbed anew the tired life was over too; gone from want and care and ill, very peacefully and still. After all she bore and wept, hard-worked wife and mother slept; very fair she looked, and meek, long dark lashes swept her cheek, worn hands crossed upon her breast, for the weary was at rest, all the year round.

THE SMITHS.

They were exclusive in Opal. Opal was a little village, I won't say where, but it stood at the foot of a hill, and it doubtless stands there still. A pretty river meanders in and out amongst the highways and by-ways, so that you never know when you have to cross a bridge; and what with big trees, handsome houses, and a Gothic church, it is as pretty a place as can well be imagined. Perhaps that is the reason why its inhabitants—those whose fathers and grandfathers before them have been Opalites—are so exclusive, and turn the cold shoulder to all the strangers not properly introduced—not vouched for by somebody who is somebody.

However, at the date of our story, there dwelt amongst these exclusive people two high and mighty personages to whom all bowed down. There were the Smiths. The Smiths, Smith, we all know, is the name by which, when Adam got tired of naming the heads of ancient families, he christened all the rest in a lump.

These particular Smiths were also named John and Mary, which proves that Romeo's inquiry, "What's in a name?" was an apt question, for it made no difference; they were still The Smiths.

The first Smith bought land. There was not only a grandfather, but a great grandfather's father to be talked of as having built just there; and the present Mrs. Smith's relatives were great people; and they were rich—no one knew how rich.

It was the custom in Opal to wait until Mrs. Smith took notice of strangers before taking them up. That set the seal on their position.

When little Mrs. Miller came to Opal, because she thought it a pretty place, and built a house there, and brought her two little boys and her old servant with her, she did not know the ways of the place. She was social, and used to being liked for herself. She had been even sought after.

But Opal did not know her "family;" thought her "too dressy for a widow;" too pretty, too. It was fashionable to be plain of face and costume in Opal. The best families were all like that.

Close watch was kept over the Smiths. They did not call. Therefore no one else called. But little Mrs. Miller, who was not apt to fancy herself likely to be slighted, laid all the primness of the manners of the Opalites to the fact that she had not been pleasant enough to them, and having arranged her tiny home to her satisfaction, sent out cards of invitation to a tea to all those to whom she had spoken at the church or who were very near her home, so that "pleasant mornings" or "good evenings" had been exchanged.

"Everybody is respectable in these small places," she thought, "and all acquainted, of course."

Mrs. Bright, the minister's wife, was the first to get her cards. Unfortunately, as she expressed it to Mrs. Miller, her husband was going to marry a couple that afternoon, and as they were friends, she was going to the wedding.

The rest simply looked at their cards contemptuously, and, without hesitation, penned "regrets" without apology.

"Does she expect to step into our society that way without our knowing who she is?" said Mrs. Doubledée Brick, with a sniff. "I shan't send any answer what-ever."

"When the Smiths have not called," added her mother-in-law.

And so the postman had a large parcel of small envelopes for Mrs. Miller one morning, and she, for the first time in her life, felt angry. She had not made a party of it, only an informal affair, with one day's notice, and everything was prepared. Her new dress, black lace, with a pale-pink bow in her black hair, and pale-pink roses for her belt, hung on a chair, and, for a while, the little woman was very angry; indeed—mortified, too.

The first dawn of such a feeling was very painful.

Was she cut by these unimportant people of Opal—she, who in London had been a beauty, and in Dublin had had so many invitations that to know which to accept for a certain night was rather difficult?

However, there was no antecedents of an unpleasant nature in her life—nothing to make her think "they have heard;" and after awhile she laughed over it.

She had never heard of The Smiths. They lived a distance away, and attended another church outside the village, where their nephew preached.

She had not to her knowledge, met either of them, for she did not know that the old gentleman who had helped her into her carriage one day at the station, when her horse would not stand still, was The Smith, and she had sent this good couple no cards.

She did not know that not to know them was to be yourself unknown in Opal best society.

Nor did she guess that Fate had her tea in hand.

It was 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

One or two of the Opalites had not condescended to reply at all, so though she guessed they were not coming, she had dressed and ordered the tea to be prepared.

"I have a fine appetite, and Charlie and Will can get through with a great deal of cake," she said to the old servant, who understood the situation as well as she did.

And then she wandered out into the garden, and walked amongst her flowers.

Just as she had reached the western fence, already gilded by the setting sun, she became aware of a cloud of dust along the road, and saw in a moment that two horses were running away with a little vehicle, in which sat an old lady and gentleman, and in a moment more, as they crossed a little bridge, the carriage overset, a wheel came off, and the old lady was thrown over the rail into the water.

The old gentleman fell into the mud, but regained his feet, and rescued the old lady.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Miller had called the man at work amongst her vegetables, and the horses, released from the conveyance, were standing quite still.

Mrs. Miller herself now ran down the road, and ushered the two old people into her house, congratulating them upon being alive, and minus broken bones. She led the old lady to her room, provided her with fresh garments and a warm, silk shawl, sent her other garments to the kitchen to dry, and, finally, amidst a multitude of thanks, invited them to take tea with her.

"After such a shock you ought to rest awhile," she said; "and if you will allow me to keep you all night, I shall be so glad. I have plenty of rooms."

The answer was peculiar.

"It is evident," said the old lady, "that you are of good family. Only such people are capable of offering hospitality in this way. The common run know nothing about it. We can return home quite well, I think; but we appreciate your kindness, and we will drink tea with you with pleasure."

It was a very solemn address.

"Has the Queen of England by any chance, come to this country place? Am I entertaining her unawares?" Mrs. Miller asked herself as she repressed her inclination to laugh.

But she felt that, at least, these people were polite, and she took the two cards bearing the inscriptions, "Mr. John Smith," "Mrs. John Smith," which the old people offered her, and returned her own, never guessing that these were The Smiths of Opal, and that her tea would be the talk of the place.

At the appointed time they were summoned.

Old Margaret waited; the two little boys put on their company manners. Mrs. Miller was a good hostess. The sturdy old couple had excellent appetites, and paid compliments at intervals, and it came to pass that in the course of the feast Mrs. Miller became confidential—told of her invitations, and of the general refusal of them, and said to Mrs. Smith, "Do you think they have some terrible idea about me, or have I outraged the customs of Opal by being uncereceremonious?"

Mrs. Smith looked at Mr. Smith. They understood the position. Mrs. Smith knew she had not called, but she only answered, "Country people are often odd, you know."

After this she took pains to discover Mrs. Miller's antecedents, and grew radiant when she learnt that she was a Miss Smith before her marriage—a Miss Smith whose grandfather was a second cousin of Mr. Smith's own father; and still Mrs. Miller did not guess at the great social importance of this afternoon tea-drinking.

But the Smiths did. As they drove home together, the old lady remarked, "That is a charming little lady. I will arrange things for her."

And passing Mrs. Doubledée Brick on the road, she called to her, "Such a charming afternoon at Mrs. Miller's! Sorry you were not there. A distant relation of our own."

The news soon spread over the place. The Smiths had been to Mrs. Miller's tea. She was related to them.

Mrs. Doubledée Brick rejoiced that she had sent no reply, and wrote at once to say that "the note had missed her."

Oh, Mrs. Opie! Did she ever read your "White Lies," I wonder?

Mrs. Miller was good-humored, but she was also bright. She soon understood the situation; and it took a great deal of courting to win her into Opal society. When once there, she became authority on all fashionable questions, and after the Smiths, her notice is the notice requisite to introduce new people. Remembering her own experiences, she is always very kind.

The Improvement of City Government.

If popular government and universal suffrage are to have any real meaning, the people must be placed in a position to know what is going on; whereas all our present arrangements, whether by the agency of committee-rooms, or by that of executive officials, who never appear before the public at all, are such that the people never know anything of that with respect to which they are yet to judge and to decide. In the New England town-meeting, the selectmen appear one or twice a year before the whole assembly of the inhabitants, and are cross-questioned by individuals. The test is so severe, and the judgment follows so swiftly at the elections, that corruption and even political intrigue are almost unknown. When a city becomes too large for such a meeting, the change is made to a city government, with one or two representative councils. In theory these councils should do the work of the town meeting—that is, watch the course of administration, enforce responsibility, and keep the people informed. In practice, they get possession of a large part of the administration, break up and destroy responsibility, and effectually conceal both their own doings and those of the executive. The offset and safeguard in entrusting extensive powers to a mayor is in providing a tribunal before which he and his agents may promptly, easily, and continuously be held to public account. If a body of one or two hundred men from all parts of New York were to assemble, say once a month, being debarred by law from any interference with administration, having no power to dictate any action or to vote any appropriation except upon proposal of the executive, but with full power of suggestion, of criticism, and of veto; if the mayor and his chief officials were to appear publicly before this body at each session to submit their plans, answer questions, and ask for votes of money, the people would be perfectly able to judge of the character and actions of their servants, and to express their opinions at the polls. Then, and not till then, can we hold universal suffrage responsible for failures of government.—Gamaliel Bradford, in Scribner's Magazine.

Do not wait for extraordinary opportunities for good actions, but make use of common situations.—Goethe.

IN FEAR OF IMMINENT DEATH.

A Great Russian Novelist's Description of a Dying Man's Thoughts.

(Exchange.)

Count Leo Tolstol in "Sebastopol" thus describes the fall of a shell: "To earth!" shouted a voice. Mikhailoff and Praskoukine obeyed. The latter, with shut eyes, heard the shell fall somewhere on the hard earth very near him. A second, which appears to him an hour, passed, and the shell did not burst. Praskoukine was frightened, then he asked himself what cause he had for fear. Perhaps it had fallen farther away and he wrongly imagined that he heard the fuse hissing near him. Opening his eyes he was satisfied to see Mikhailoff stretched motionless at his feet, but at the same time he perceived, a yard off, the lighted fuse of the shell spinning around like a top. A glacial terror, which stifled every thought, every sentiment, took possession of his soul. He hid his face in his hands. Another second passed, during which a whole world of thoughts, of hopes, of sensations and of souvenirs passed through his mind. "Whom will it kill? Me or Mikhailoff, or indeed both of us together? If it is I, where will it hit me? If in the head it will be all over; if on the foot they will cut it off. Then I shall insist that they give me chloroform and I may get well. Perhaps Mikhailoff alone will be killed and later I will tell how we were close together and how I was covered with his blood. No, no; it is nearer me; it will be I!" Then he remembered the twelve rubles he owed Mikhailoff and another debt left at Petersburg, which ought to have been paid long ago. "A Bohemian air that he sang the evening before came to his mind. He also saw in his imagination the lady he was in love with in her lilac trimmed bonnet; the man who had insulted him five years before, and whom he had never taken vengeance on. But in the midst of these and many other souvenirs the present feeling—the expectation of death—did not leave him. "Perhaps it isn't going to explode!" he thought, and was on the point of opening his eyes with desperate boldness. But at this instant a red fire struck his eyeballs through the closed lids, something hit him in the middle of the chest with a terrible crash. He ran forward at random, entangled his feet in his sword, stumbled, and fell on his side. "God be praised, I am only bruised." This was his first thought, and he wanted to feel of his breast, but his hands seemed as if they were tied. A vise gripped his head, soldiers ran before his eyes, and he mechanically counted them: "One, two, three soldiers, and, besides, an officer who is losing his cloak!" A new light flashed; he wondered what had fired. Was it a mortar or a cannon? Doubtless a cannon. Another shot, more soldiers—five, six, seven. They passed in front of him, and suddenly he became terribly afraid of being crushed by them. He wanted to cry out, to say that he was bruised, but his lips were dry, his tongue was glued to the roof of his mouth. He had a burning thirst. He felt that his breast was damp, and the sensation of this moisture made him think of water. He would have liked to drink that which drenched him. "I must have knocked the skin off in falling," he said to himself, more and more frightened at the idea of being crushed by the soldiers who were running in crowds before him. He tried again to cry out "Take me!" but instead of that he uttered a groan so terrible that he was frightened at it himself. Then red sparks danced before his eyes—it seemed as if the soldiers were piling stones on him. The sparks danced more rapidly, the stones piled on him stifled him more and more. He stretched himself out; he ceased to see, to hear, to think, to feel. He had been killed instantly by a piece of shell striking him full in the breast.

Cow-Boy Dialect.

It becomes, indeed, a familiar and useful addition to your conversational stock of the vernacular. Nay, you even find the field of its usefulness enlarging, for the terms of the "round-up" and the "branding" and sheep-shearing are more or less piquant, and lend themselves easily to applications remote from their primitive usage. Transposed to the ordinary business or social concerns of modern life; they reveal new sources of humor; they place old saws and old customs in a sharp light, a fresh illumination; but always by that undercurrent of suggestion, contrast, or association with original pursuits, which the words described. So I heard, last year, a politician speak of a bolter of the Republican ticket as a "bucker." A "bucking horse" is one that "jumps sidewise or forward, up and down, with his legs stiffened into an unrelaxed perpendicular," and the image certainly has a kind of affinity with the moral action of a refractory voter.—Scribner's Magazine.

Medieval Method of Banishing Vermin.

In 1749 appeared in the Canton of Berne, Switzerland, an enormous number of grubs, and it was feared that the whole crop would be destroyed, therefore the council of the commonwealth sent a deputation to the Archbishop of Lausanne, with the petition to banish the obnoxious creatures from the canton. Of course it is not stated that the neighboring cantons had agreed to receive the grubs, but the Archbishop seems not to have considered the incongruity of said petition. He gave an affirmative answer and authorized the priest at Berne to impose the banishment of the grubs, providing for strict observance of customs and laws. After a prayer an advocate for the people was chosen. He notified the court of his appointment, and proposed the citation of the grubs. On a certain day some of the grubs were brought before the court and their advocates chosen. The priest, followed by a large crowd of pious people in a solemn procession, went to the cemetery, to the fields, to the vineyards, and to the banks of the river to serve the summons on the defendant. He delivered the following—at that time probably courteous—address as a warning and as a citation to the felons:

"Ye hideous and degraded creatures, ye grubs! There was nothing like ye in the ark of Noah. By order of my august superior, the Archbishop of Lausanne, and in obedience to the holy church, I command ye all and every one to disappear, during the next six days, from every place where food grows for man or beast. If not obedient, I enjoin ye to appear on the sixth day, at 1 o'clock, afternoon, at Willisburg, before the Archbishop of Lausanne."

As some righteous people objected because citation was not exactly made in the manner provided by law, the case was postponed, and after a lawful citation, another day was named. Then the process began. The advocate chosen for the defendant was Joad Perrodet, a well-known dogmatical and obstinate disputant. Perhaps it will appear somewhat doubtful if the nomination of the advocate fulfilled exactly the demands of the law and custom of time, as it is stated that Mr. Perrodet died a short time before his nomination. Nevertheless, the case and the complaint were read, and, as no defender appeared, the judgment was given for the plaintiff.

"We, Benedictus, of Monferrand, Archbishop of Lausanne, condemn and excommunicate ye obnoxious worms and grubs, that nothing shall be left of ye, except such parts as can be useful to man."—The Swiss Cross.

The Noble Boston Man.

A Boston broker lost a wallet containing $15,000 on the street and a newsboy found it and brought it to the owner. The man struggled with a terrible temptation to be mean and sordid for a moment, and then, forgetting self and casting to the winds his greed of gain as he trampled the temptation under his feet, gave the honest boy permission to go on the Common and play every day. "We can trust you," sobbed the grateful man; "we know that you will keep off the grass." O how often this opportunity to make others happy by a kind word, a gentle smile, or some little act of kindness knocks at our door and we heed it not, until it is too late. O that more people were like the Boston man. (P. S.—They are.)—Burdette, in Brooklyn Eagle.

Aluminium Alloys.

Of the alloys of aluminium, the series formed with copper, and known as aluminium bronze, are the most important. The alloy containing 90 per cent of copper and 10 of aluminium is the most prominent of these, and was discovered as long ago as 1856 by Dr. John Percy. It has a deep golden color, a specific gravity of 7.7, and can be shaped at a red heat and hammered until cold without cracking. The alloys change to white in color when the proportion of aluminium reaches about 20 per cent.—Arkansas Traveler.

A Ghost in Tennessee.

From the time of the first settlement of the country there were ghost stories connected with the old stone fort on the Duck River, which about 1834 culminated in a remarkable episode, says the Nashville American. In 1833 six gentlemen, men of high standing, who lived in Murfreesborough, went out in the neighborhood of the old fort to have a fox hunt. The country was thinly settled, and there were many deer. After having camped out for several days one night they saw strange sights, which caused them to leave next day. They were not communicative, but the story got out and was much talked of. The next fall these same six gentlemen, with nine others, went back and camped upon the same spot. It was said they were quite anxious to see the same sights that had been seen before. But a week passed and they saw nothing, though they were quite successful in killing deer.

At the end of about a week a man named Latimer got two small boys in the neighborhood, and fixing up a dumb bull, went out to see how they would stand a strange noise. It was in the fall, a frosty night, the hunters had a big fire and were in great glee. For three hours the dumb bull was made to do work from different points of the woods at a safe distance. At first the hunters were disposed to laugh, then they got quiet, finally they commenced shooting. Many guns were fired. This was kept up until the man and two boys left, which was about midnight. Between midnight and day the whole fifteen men left the camp, leaving their meat and other things, and went to a farmhouse, the house where the two boys who had been in the mischief were sleeping. Next morning the hunters told wonderful stories about what they saw, how it came close up to the fire, and how impervious it was to their bullets, how it changed about from an animal to a woman, and what it would say. The two boys were as still as mice, for they had stolen off from their father by the persuasion of Latimer, who was himself a hunter and wanted to drive these hunters away.

The fifteen men left that morning and went back to Murfreesborough to verify and make good the ghost story of the year before. The story got into the newspapers, and was the biggest sensation that had turned up for many years. But it got out that two boys and a hunter had scared them away. This was denied, and the ghost theory was maintained with heroic verity. One of the gentlemen, Jack Fletcher, was often a member of the Legislature afterward, but this ghost story always stuck to him. Another one of them, Len Sims, was a member of Congress from Missouri and was a war Democrat in 1847. After making a war speech, a Whig, who was not for the war, told the Tennessee ghost story, with much coloring, on Sims. It was said to modify his war spirit very much.

This knighthood service in the land of ghosts took place fifty-three years ago. All the participants are dead but one of the boys who lives to write this story and verify its truth.

The Highest Church in Europe.

The very highest church in Europe is the pilgrimage chapel of the St. Maria de Ziteit, above Salux, in the canton of Graubunden. It lies 2,431 meters above the sea level—nearly 8,000 feet high above the forest, near the limits of perpetual snow. It is only open during the summer time of that region—or, as the folk thereabouts reckon, from St. John the Baptist's day to St. Michael's day—and is used only by the Alp herders, who remain there through the summer with their cows and goats, and occasionally by hunters in search of the chamois and marmot. All the inhabitants of Salux, climb up thither on midsummer days to assist at the first mass and to hear the first sermon of the year, and there is also a crowded congregation on Michael-mass day, at the last service of the year. From time to time a few stray pilgrims from the Graubunden Oberland and the Tyrol find their way there. The second highest church probably in Europe, that of Monstein, also open in the summer, belongs to Graubunden. At our visit the hale old preacher had five foreign tourists for his congregation.—Bundner Tagblatt.

Though color be the lowest of all the constituent parts of beauty, yet it is vulgarly the most striking.—Joseph Spence.

FRIDAY OCTOBER 21, 1887.

There was a good deal of "mist" in some of our exchanges last week.

Dr. Matheny of Auburn was called here Wednesday as council in the case of Curt Washler's sick child.

Mrs. Jones of Garrett is president of the county W. C. T. U., which meets here to-morrow. She will be present and have charge of the meeting.

It is said that Edgerton has really struck a paying vein of gas, and it was also reported on our streets yesterday that Auburn had run into a good flow of that valuable article. We hope both reports may prove true.

Miss White will arrive here from Pennsylvania to-morrow, and will attend the convention at the Methodist church in the evening, and on Sunday evening will deliver her lecture. She is a speaker of acknowledged ability, and none should fail to hear her.

The schools at this place will open one week from Monday, with Prof. Frank Coughanour as principal. Miss Emma Curie in charge of the intermediate department, and Miss Murray as primary teacher. The indications are that St. Joe will have the best school this winter that has ever been held here.

The county convention of the W. C. T. U. will be held in the Methodist church in this place to-morrow. Delegates from all parts of the county will be present. A good program has been prepared and an interesting time is expected. The morning session will begin at 10 o'clock, the afternoon session at 1:30, and the evening session at 7:30 o'clock. All are invited to attend.

The much-talked-of wooden wedding occurred in this place last Saturday. Justice Hines of Jackson township, occupied one end of the judicial bench, while our own good natured Justice Ables held down the other end. After a couple of hours spent in arguing the pro's and con's, and the whyfore's and wherefore's in the case, a judgment of $9.50 was rendered in favor of Chris Curie. Lawing don't pay, for no doubt each of the parties concerned, have spent more than that amount in time and money, besides the vexation and bad feeling that is always engendered on such occasions.

THE VERDICT UNANIMOUS.—W. D. Sult, Druggist, Bippus, Ind., testifies: "I can recommend Electric Bitters as the very best remedy. Every bottle sold has given relief in every case. One man took six bottles, and was cured of Rheumatism of 10 years' standing." Abraham Hare, Druggist Bellville, O., allrms: "The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my 20 years' experience, is Electric Bitters." Thousands of others have added their testimony, so that the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters do cure all diseases of the liver, Kidneys or Blood. Only a dollar a bottle at W. C. Patterson Drug Store.

Shilling shipped a car load of hogs Tuesday.

O. H. Widney was in Fort Wayne Tuesday.

Byron Hadsett will teach the normal Coburntown school this winter.

Mrs. Grosh of Leo, visited with Jake Sechler's over last Sunday.

Another cheap excursion to Chicago next Tuesday. Only $3.15 for the round trip.

Our railroad time card and market report are crowded out this week, to make room for local matter.

"Buckskin Joe" will lecture at Spencerville. We understand that he gave general satisfaction here.

The members of the Rehebeth congregation surprised Rev. Langley with a donation party on Thursday.

Samuel Widney and wife left this week for a visit among friends in the west. They will be absent two or three weeks.

Frank Coughanour was in town Wednesday, looking up a house to move into. He found vacant houses very scarce in this place.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Ooder and little daughter, Ida, of Norvell, Michigan, are visiting friends here and at Spencerville, this week.

C. C. Walter was in town Wednesday, looking after the sale of the Hart and Reed ditches. The contract for digging same was sold mostly to the parties interested.

There was a chicken-pie social at Newville last evening. It strikes us, that that is a pretty good kind of a social, especially if there was plenty of chicken in the pie.

Burglaries are being committed all around us but as yet St. Joe has not been molested. Since the shooting of Thompson last year, they seem to be afraid to tackle this place.

J. D. Leighty has been at Cleveland this week, buying new goods. St. Joe merchants are constantly buying new goods in order to supply the demands of the trade in our thriving little town.

Isaac Meek of Lima, visited in this place this week, with his son Harry.

Misses Mattie White and Leona Tustison visited in Garrett over last Sunday.

C. P. Houser is putting blackboards in the addition to the school house this week.

Emmett Bratton the newly elected prosecutor will take his office on the 23rd of this month.

Mervin Widney killed two blue racers this week, one of them being nearly five feet long.

Miss Prudie Lounsberry has been visiting friends at Bristol for the past two weeks. She also in company with friends visited Chicago during her absence.

Owing to the temperance lecture in the evening at the Methodist church, Rev. Fryberger will preach Sunday afternoon at half past two o'clock. You are invited.

Two persons in Ohio received a prize of $100.00 last week for collecting the largest number of Arbuckle coffee wrappers in 3 months. They had collected 3,552 wrappers.

Monday was Nena Leighty's 10th birthday and quite a number of her young friends were invited in to celebrate the occasion. Mrs. Leighty had prepared an excellent dinner for them, and they enjoyed it as children only can. Nena was the recipient of a number of little presents.

Squire Ables ought to pay us a royalty on weddings. We've been advertising him a good deal lately as being a tip-top hand to marry folks, and his business in that direction seems to be on the increase. Last Sunday he married Henry Bice and Julia Brown, both of Hall's Corners.

We heard a man remark the other day that he was ready to put up a grist mill at this place, as soon as he can find a partner who will take an equal share with him. He is one of our best citizens, has the cash and means what he says. Now trot out a partner for him, and St. Joe will have a good roller flouring mill.

"Buckskin Joe," from the wild woolly west, entertaining the people of this place the fore part of the week. On Monday night the entertainment was free and of course he had a full house, but on Tuesday evening an admittance of ten cents was charged, and most everybody wasn't feeling well enough to go out.

A. Krabill, who lives north of here about three miles has a sister visiting him from Ohio. Last Sunday evening she in company with Jake Krabill, came to this place to visit Mrs. Frank Hart. They started home at about nine o'clock and on the way, the horses ran off, throwing her out and breaking her limb just below the knee in a very bad manner. Dr. Bowman was called, and dressed the fractured limb. He reports it as being quite a serious case.

A WOMAN'S DISCOVERY. "Another wonderful discovery has been made and that to by a lady in this county. Disease fastened its clutches upon her and for seven years she withstood its severest tests, but her vital organs were undermined and death seemed imminent. For three months she coughed incessantly and could not sleep. She bought of us a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption and was so much relieved on taking first dose that she slept all night and with one bottle has been miraculously cured. Her name is Mrs. Luther Lutz." Thus writes W. C. Hamrick & Co., of Shelby, N. C.—Get a trial bottle at W. C. Patterson's Drug Store.

BURGLARS.

Last Sunday morning thieves entered the clothing store of Straus & Hecht at Hicksville, by way of the rear door from which they removed a pane of glass. They took nearly one thousand dollars worth of goods, among which was 20 pairs of pants, 10 overcoats, fine underwear, shoes, neckwear, 15 dozen gloves, 3 dozen silk handkerchiefs and many other articles. No clue has yet been obtained to the rascals. A reward of $100 is offered for their arrest.

OBITUARY.

Mrs. Alvira Ulm was born in Burlington, Vt., June 20th, 1818, and died at her residence near St. Joe, Ind., Oct. 11th, 1897, age 69 years, 3 months and 21 days. She was the daughter of Levi and Elizabeth Lockwood, who moved to the state of N. J., thence to Ohio and finally to Ind. in 1834, where she was married to Nelson Ulm in June 1836. This being the first marriage in DeKalb Co. Father Ulm with three daughters and five sons are left to mourn their loss, two children having previously past away. Mother Ulm joined the M. E. church in 1850, and has remained a christian since that time, being loved and respected by neighbors and friends alike. Thus another pioneer mother has past away.

REUNION.

It is the custom of the Jones and Chanoy families to have a reunion once a year. This year it fell to the lot of Mr. and Mrs. Dr. Bowman of this place to entertain the company. There were upwards of fifty persons present; several of them coming from different parts of Ohio, but most of them were residents of the county. The time was pleasantly spent in greeting and meeting each other, talking over the events and changes of the past year and exchanging good wishes for the year to come. At dinner time the company were invited to partake of a fine repast, to which all done ample justice. Mrs. Bowman knows just how to get up a good meal, and on this occasion she fully established her reputation to that effect. Besides the doctor claims that he assisted in preparing the dinner, and everybody who is acquainted with him, knows that he is the greatest hand in the world to help around the house. The reunion was said to have been a very enjoyable one, and all departed to their homes, feeling that another pleasant mile-stone in life's journey had been passed. The News was kindly remembered with a liberal supply of cake and chicken, and oh! how it does gladden the heart of the poor printer to get a clean bite once in a while.

EVENTS OF A WEEK.

THE OLD WORLD.

—The meeting at Woodford, which was proclaimed by the Government, was held on Sunday, says a Dublin dispatch, the proceedings being conducted by Messrs. O'Brien, Gill, and others. The telegraph wires were cut, thus preventing communication with Dublin. Mr. O'Brien was received at Woodford by a great crowd, which greeted him with rousing cheers, while hundreds of torches were waved in the air. In the course of his speech he burned a copy of the proclamation forbidding the holding of the meetings. This act aroused the wildest enthusiasm. Five other members of Parliament made addresses. It was 3 o'clock in the morning when the gathering broke up. At that hour the police, who had been completely baffled, made their appearance only to find that the meeting was at an end. The officers were greeted with good-humored laughter by the crowd.

—The relations between Germany and Russia are becoming more embittered. No mask is now worn on either side. The press of St. Petersburg and Moscow is now permitted to indulge in its natural disposition to abuse the Germans. The inspired press is not backward in responding in kind. Diplomatic intercourse between the two governments is limited to unavoidable communications, which are exchanged with frigid civilities.

—Sir Charles Tupper has just been appointed one of the British Fishery Commissioners. It is believed the Commission is now completed, consisting of Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, Sir Lionel Sackville-West, and Sir Charles Tupper.

PERSONAL NOTES.

—The President and party reached Memphis, Tenn., Friday evening. The reception they received in the South was very hearty. At the stations on the way from Kansas City to the objective point, crowds gathered to cheer the visitors, and, if possible, to grasp the Presidential hand. Memphis was thronged, as it never was before. Over 30,000 people gathered to greet the President. When the President and Mrs. Cleveland had been seated in their carriage, the throngs in their enthusiasm broke over all bounds, carrying away the colored militia guards stationed to keep the way open. Indeed, some of the guards seemed to have joined the moving irregular masses themselves, and followed on behind the President's carriage. In the evening there was a reception and a grand display of fireworks.

—Memphis was beautifully decorated in honor of the President's visit, and there were more people in the streets of the town than were ever seen there before. After a formal speech of welcome delivered by Judge H. T. Ellett and responded to by the President, a public reception was held at the Cotton Exchange. A distressing event happened just after the President left the stand where the speeches were made. Judge Ellett, who had stood for some time with his hat off and with his head exposed to the sun, was overcome by the heat, and expired within five minutes. The people began to move away, and the Presidential party left the square for the Exchange Building. There Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland received the greetings of thousands, and when the reception was over left for Nashville. The President and Mrs. Cleveland, with their traveling companions, spent Sunday at Belle Meade farm, six miles from Nashville. This is one of the most magnificent estates in the South, and is the home of General W. F. Jackson, a brother of Judge Jackson, who was formerly United States Senator.

FINANCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL.

—The Niobrara Land and Cattle Company, of East St. Louis, has made an assignment, their liabilities amounting to $350,000. Their nominal assets are $250,000, but they will not realize more than from 25 to 50 per cent. of that sum.

—The banking house of Morton E. Post & Co., of Cheyenne, Wyoming, has suspended.

—There was a large number of stockholders present at the Western Union meeting in New York, and much interest was shown in the reading of the annual report. The main facts concerned in it are as follows:

The gross earnings for the year ending June 30 were $17,101,900; operating expenses, $13,154,628; net earnings, $4,037,271; interest and sinking fund, $533,065; balance, $3,504,206; dividends, $11,864; surplus from the year's business, $2,692,352. The last feature is the vital one, as it compares with a deficit in meeting charges last year of $11,109. The number of messages handled reached the enormous total of 47,304,530. The average receipts per message were reduced to 3.04 cents, against 3.09 in the previous year, with a reduction in the cost of handling to 2.31 cents, against 2.4 cents the previous year.

—The report of the Legislative Committee to the Knights of Labor Assembly, as adopted at Minneapolis, approves the Blair educational bill, the eight hours a day bill, and the bill in relation to homesteads, and demands that the Government building contracts provide for weekly payment of workmen, and approves the recommendations of the General Master Workman's address in favor of Government control of the telegraph and telephone systems of the country.

—Some of the proceedings of the "Knights" convention at Minneapolis have been stormy and exciting. Friday last the Assembly was the scene of a fierce discussion in secret session over the Chicago Stock Yards strike. At times it was believed that a hand-to-hand fight would occur between the Powderly and anti-Powderly delegates, the point being whether Powderly be censured or not for ordering the strike off. The speeches were very bitter, and finally Powderly spoke with tremendous force in his own behalf, and carried the day by a majority of 116 to 49.

POLITICAL POINTS.

—The Democratic State Convention at Omaha endorsed Cleveland's administration and nominated Thomas O'Day for Justice of the Supreme Court. The National Democratic Committee was requested to designate Omaha as the place for holding the next National Democratic Convention.

RAILROAD ITEMS.

—Eastern railroad managers have decided that traveling theatrical companies are not "families," and are not therefore entitled to travel upon family mileage tickets.

—At the meeting of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad directors, at Baltimore, Mr. Robert Garrett tendered, by letter, his resignation of the Presidency, and it was accepted. William F. Burns will act as President of the company until the annual meeting.

FIRES AND ACCIDENTS.

—From the testimony taken before the Coroner at Huntington, Ind., with regard to the Kouts disaster, it appears that the list of fatalities will not exceed nine. The railroad men claim that the night was so foggy that danger signals could not be seen in time to prevent the accident.

—A portable sawmill exploded eight miles from Jackson, Ohio. Kent Evans and James Ewin were blown to pieces, and the engine and mill were utterly ruined.

—Contrary to the general impression, the Coroner's jury in the Kouts disaster has found a verdict which severely censures the train-dispatcher of the Chicago and Atlantic Road for negligence, the engineer of the fast freight for carelessness in running his train at a high rate of speed, knowing that the passenger was so near him, and the company for allowing a passenger train to be drawn by a crippled engine. The verdict is in accordance with the facts as they have been stated.

—A monster saw-mill boiler exploded at Centerville, W. Va., tearing everything loose in the neighborhood and killing three men.

—The Baltic cotton mill, at Baltic, Conn., has been destroyed by fire. The loss is placed at $1,250,000, with insurance of $257,000. The works were operated by H. & L. Aldrich & Co., and 900 hands are thrown out of employment.

THE CRIMINAL RECORD.

—John B. Owens, who was arrested for participation in a recent robbery of the Pacific Express on the Iron Mountain Railway, admits that he took the money, but claims that he does not know what has become of it, and that he was drunk when the act was committed.

—A gang of counterfeiters that has been operating extensively for some time past in the vicinity of Mitchell, Ind., was run down the other night by Federal marshals, and taken to Indianapolis.

—Five bandits who recently abducted Senor Berrera in Starr County, Texas, and held him until ransomed by the payment of $15,000, are reported to have been caught and lynched.

—R. S. Hicks, cashier of the Stafford (Ok.) National Bank, is a defaulter to a large amount, and the bank has closed its doors pending an investigation. The total loss to the institution will be over $100,000, and of this amount the cashier confesses to having taken $73,000.

—Train robbers attacked the mail car attached to the Galveston, Harrisburg and San Antonio express, near El Paso, Texas, with dynamite bombs. The car was broken to pieces, and the agent was for a moment stunned. His senses returned, however, and he filled one of the robbers with bullets, killing him instantly. The others of the gang fled.

—Stephen W. Rawson, a well-known Chicago banker, was shot on Sunday last by his step-son, William Maymister, as he was leaving the Third Presbyterian Church, where he had been attending divine services. His assailant, a boy 17 years old, was taken to jail, and the wounded man was carried to his home on Monroe street in a critical condition. The shooting grew out of the troubles between Mr. Rawson and his wife that have been so thoroughly ventilated in the courts for some time past.

—Charles Edwards, a negro, was hanged at Clarkesville, Ga., for the murder of William Echols.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

—The report that Robert Garrett is insane is not credited in Wall street. It is styled a "Jay Gould chestnut" by a New York paper.

—A St. Louis dispatch says: "The Missouri Grand Lodge of Masons has taken action on the question of the eligibility of saloonkeepers and liquor dealers to become members of the order." Several months ago the State Grand Master issued an order calling upon the lodges under his jurisdiction to expel all members who were in any way connected with the liquor traffic. The Naphthali Lodge of this city, of which a dozen prominent liquor men were members, many of them being charter members, refused to obey the order and the charter of the lodge was arrested. The Grand Lodge has sustained the order of the Grand Master. This order was based on a law passed by the lodge a number of years ago, which set forth that thereafter no saloonkeepers should become members of the order. This order is now affirmed and it is further decided that saloonkeepers who were members of the order before the adoption of the law will have to give up their business or their good standing. The action will create a great breach in the order in Missouri.

—Chicago special: "George Francis Train did not speak last night, as he had intended to, because the police prevented the meeting. Mayor Roche instructed Chief Ebersold and Inspector Bonfield to suppress the erratic orator, and not to permit him to make any more harangues in this city."

—An English land syndicate that purchased a tract in the Texas Panhandle consisting of 237 sections, is now engaged in an attempt to drive a colony of settlers from it. The latter propose to remain where they are, and they have sent an appeal to Governor Ross, in which they set forth their claims.

—In the third game for the world's championship, played at Detroit, the latter club beat St. Louis in thirteen innings, 2 to 1.

—Serious trouble is threatened in the Cherokee Nation, and bloodshed is feared. Says a dispatch from Tahlequah:

When the late election was over, on the face of the returns, as certified by the nine national clerks, Joel Mayer was declared elected as Chief by 143 majority. Since then the returns have been so changed as to count in Robert Bunch, the opposition candidate. Both parties are gathering in force, and declare their respective candidates will be seated. The only way to settle this question is by force, there being no court to appeal to. It will be a fight between corrupt men and peace-loving citizens. In case of trouble it is stated it will result in opening up the country and destroying tribal relations. Both sides are armed for a pitched battle.

—While an experimental well was being sunk in South Hutchinson, Kansas, at a depth of 470 feet, says a dispatch from that place, a deposit of rock salt was struck which for thickness of the principal vein and purity of the product may be classed among the richest mines in the world. A number of veins were drilled through, varying in thickness from seven to forty feet, and separated by thin strata of shale. At a depth of 665 feet a vein was struck which has been penetrated to a depth of 100 feet. An official analysis of the product shows it to be over 96 per cent. pure, and absolutely free from the principal impurities which make rock salt unfit for domestic purposes.

—A special correspondent at Austin, Texas, telegraphs this gratifying bit of news:

A foreign corporation, the Matador Land, and Cattle Company, incorporated in Scotland, with a capital of £100,000, having applied for the filing of its charter to do business in the State, the Secretary of State refers it to the opinion of Attorney General Hogg, who holds, in an elaborate ruling, that the State cannot do so far that a State will allow a foreign corporation to exercise any extraordinary franchise or to do an act contrary to the laws or the public policy of the State as indicated by its legislation. He thinks this company proposes to exercise extraordinary franchises not compatible with the public policy of the State.

—A Washington dispatch says that Secretary Lamar is certain to take the place left vacant on the Supreme bench by the death of Justice Woods, and that he will be appointed immediately after handing in his report as Secretary of the Interior.

—The cotton crop of the United States this year is estimated at 6,550,000 bales, against 6,505,000 bales last season.

—In his annual report to the Secretary of the Interior, Land Commissioner Sparks speaks of the "present wasteful and fraud-inspiring system of disposal" of the public lands, and intimates that there is much room for improvement in the laws upon the subject.

FORBIDDEN HONEY.

Sermon by Rev. Dr. Talmage in the Tabernacle.

Depleting and Injurious Books of the Period—The Popular Taste for Pure Literature is Poisoned by the Scum of the Publishing House.

BROOKLYN, Oct. 16.—"Seven hundred and eighty-one thousand three hundred and sixteen dollars and twenty-four cents have been paid cash down in this church for religious uses and Christian work during the nineteen years of my ministry," said the Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D., in answer to the misrepresentations that have been going through some of the religious papers depreciating the work of the Brooklyn Tabernacle. After giving out the hymn:

Our God, our help in ages past,
Our hope for years to come.

Dr. Talmage preached a sermon, the subject of which was "Forbidden Honey," the text being I. Samuel xiv, 43: "I did but taste a little honey with the end of the rod that was in my hand, and, lo, I must die."

Dr. Talmage said:

The honey bee is a most ingenious architect, a Christopher Wren among insects, a geometer drawing hexagons and pentagons, a freebooter robbing the fields of pollen and aroma, a wondrous creature of God whose biography, written by Huber and Swammerdam, is an enchantment for any lover of nature. Virgil celebrated the bee in his fable of Aristaeus, and Moses, and Samuel, and David, and Solomon, and Jeremiah, and Ezekiel, and St. John used the delicacies of bee manufacture as a Bible symbol. A miracle of formation is the bee; five eyes, two tongues, the outer having a sheath of protection, hairs on all sides of its tiny body to brush up the particles of flowers, its flight so straight that all the world knows of the bee line. The honey-comb is a palace such as no one but God could plan, and the honey bee constructs; its cells sometimes a dormitory and sometimes a storehouse and sometimes a cemetery. These winged toilers first make eight strips of wax, and by their antennae, which are to them hammer and chisel, and square, and plumb line, fashion them for use. Two and two, these workers shape the wall. If an accident happens they put up buttresses or extra beams to remedy the damage. When about the year 1776 an insect, before unknown, in the night time attacked the bee hives all over Europe, and the men who owned them were in vain trying to plan something to keep out the invader that was the terror of the bee hives of the continent, it was found that everywhere the bees had arranged for their own protection, and built before their honey-combs an especial wall of wax with port hole through which the bees might go to and fro, but not large enough to admit the winged combatant, called the Sphinx Atropos.

Plenty of this luscious product was hanging in the woods of Beth-aven during the time of Saul and Jonathan. Their army was in pursuit of an enemy that by God's command must be exterminated. The soldiery were positively forbidden to stop to eat anything until the work was done. If they disobeyed they were accursed. Coming through the woods they found a place where the bees had been busy, a great honey manufactory. Honey gathered in the hollow of the trees until it had overflowed upon the ground in great profusion of sweetness. All the army obeyed orders and touched it not save Jonathan, and he not knowing the military order about abstinence dipped the end of a stick he had in his hand into the candied liquid, and as, yellow, and brown, and tempting, it glowed on the end of the stick he put it to his mouth and ate the honey. Judgment fell upon him, and but for special intervention he would have been slain. In my text Jonathan announces his awful mistake: "I did but taste a little honey with the end of the rod that was in my hand, and, lo, I must die." Alas, what multitudes of people in all ages have been damaged by forbidden honey, by which I mean temptation, delicious and attractive, but damaging and destructive.

Literature fascinating but healthful comes in this category. Where one good, honest, healthful book is read now there are 100 made up of rhetorical trash consumed with avidity. When the boy on the cars comes through with a pile of publications look over the titles and notice that nine out of ten of the books are depleting and injurious. All the way from New York to Chicago or New Orleans notice that objectionable books dominate. Taste for pure literature is poisoned by this scum of the publishing house. Every book in which sin triumphs over virtue, or in which a glamour is thrown over dissipation, or which leaves you at its last line with less respect for the marriage institution and less abhorrence for the parricide, is a depression of your own moral character. That book-binding may be attractive, and the plot dramatic and startling, and the style of writing sweet as the honey that Jonathan dipped up with his rod, but your best interests forbid it, your moral safety forbids it, your God forbids it, and one taste of it may lead to such bad results that you may have to say at the close of the experiment or at the close of a misimproved lifetime: "I did but taste a little honey with the rod that was in my hand, and, lo, I must die."

Corrupt literature is doing more to-day for the disruption of domestic life than any other cause. Elopements, marital intrigues, sly correspondence, fictitious names given at postoffice windows, clandestine meetings in parks, and at ferry gates, and in hotel parlors, and conjugal perjuries are among the damnable results. When a woman, young or old, gets her head thoroughly stuffed with the modern novel, she is in appalling peril. But some one will say: "The heroes are so adroitly knavish, and the persons so bewitchingly untrue, and the turn of the story so exquisite, and all the characters so enrapturing, I cannot quit them." My brother, my sister, you can find styles of literature just as charming that will elevate and purify, and ennoble, and Christianize while they please. The devil does not own all the honey. There is a wealth of good books coming forth from our publishing houses that leaves no excuse for the choice of that which is debauching to body, mind, and soul. Go to some intelligent men or women, and ask for a list of books that will be strengthening to your mental and moral condition. Life is so short, and your time for improvement so abbreviated that you cannot afford to fill up with husks, and cinders, and debris. In the interstices of business that young man is reading that which will prepare him to be a merchant prince, and that young woman is filling her mind with an intelligence that will yet either make her the chief attraction of a good man's home or give her an independence of character that will qualify her to build her own home and maintain in it a happiness that requires no augmentation from any of our rougher sex. That young man or young woman can by the right literary and moral improvement of the spare ten minutes here or there in every day raise head and shoulders in prosperity, and character, and influence above the loungers who read nothing or read that which beclouds. See all the forests of good American literature dripping with honey. Why pick up the honeycombs that have in them the fiery bees which will sting you with an eternal poison while you taste it? One book may for you or me decide everything for this world or the next. It was a turning point with me when in Wynkoop's bookstore, Syracuse, one day I picked up a book called "The Beauties of Ruskin." It was only a book of extracts, but it was all pure honey, and I was not satisfied until I had purchased all his works, at that time expensive beyond an easy capacity to own them, and what a heaven I went through in reading his "Seven Lamps of Architecture" and his "Stones of Venice," it is impossible for me to describe except by saying that it gave me a rapture for good books, and an everlasting disgust for decrepit or immoral books that will last me while my immortal soul lasts. All around the church and the world to-day there are busy hives of intelligence occupied by authors and authoresses from whose pens drip a distillation which is the very nectar of heaven, and why will you thrust your rod of inquisitiveness into the deathful saccharine of perdition?

Stimulating liquids also come into the category of temptations delicious but deathful. You say: "I cannot bear the taste of intoxicating liquors, and how any man can like it is to me an amazement." Well, then, it is no credit to you that you do not take it. Do not brag about your total abstinence, because it is not from any principle that you reject alcoholism, but for the same reason that you reject certain kinds of food—you simply don't like the taste of them. But multitudes of people have a natural fondness for all kinds of intoxicants. They like it so much that it makes them smack their lips to look at it. They are dyspeptic and they take it to aid digestion, or they are annoyed by insomnia and they take it to produce sleep, or they are troubled and they take it to make them oblivious, or they feel good and they must celebrate their hilarity. They begin with mint julep sucked through two straws on the Long Branch piazza and end in the ditch, taking from a jug a liquid half kerosene and half whisky. They not only like it, but it is an all-consuming passion of body, mind, and soul, and after a while have it they will, though one wine glass of it should cost the temporal and eternal destruction of themselves and all their families, and the whole human race. They would say: "I am sorry it is going to cost me and my family and all the world's population so very much, but here it goes to my lips, and now let it roll over my parched tongue and down my heated throat, the sweetest, the most inspiring, the most rapturous thing that ever thrilled mortal or immortal." To cure the habit before it comes to its last stages, various plans were tried in olden times. This plan was recommended in the books: When a man wanted to reform he put shot or bullets into the cup or glass of strong drink—one additional shot each day—that displaced so much liquor. Bullet after bullet added day by day, of course, the liquor became less and less until the bullets would entirely fill up the glass and there was no room for the liquid, and by that time it was said the inebriate would be cured. Whether any one ever was cured in that way I know not, but by long experiment it is found that the only way is to stop short off, and when a man does that he needs God to help him. And there have been more cases than you can count when God has so helped the man that he quit forever, and I could count a score of them here to-day, some of them pillars in the house of God.

One would suppose that men would take warning from some of the ominous names given to the intoxicants and stand off from the devastating influence. You have noticed, for instance, that some of the restaurants are called "The Shades," typical of the fact that it puts a man's reputation in the shade and his morals in the shade and his prosperity in the shade and his wife and children in the shade and his immortal destiny in the shade.

Now, I find on some of the liquor signs in all our cities the words "Old Crow," mightily suggestive of a carcass and the filthy raven that swoops down upon it. "Old Crow!" Men and women without numbers slain of rum but unburied, and this evil in pecking at their glazed eyes and pecking at their bloated cheek, and pecking at their destroyed manhood and womanhood, thrusting beak and claw into the mortal remains of what was once gloriously alive but now morally dead. "Old Crow!" But alas, how many take no warning! They make me think of Caesar on his way to assassination fearing nothing; though his statue in the hall crashed into fragments at his feet, and a scroll containing the names of the conspirators was thrust into his hands, yet walking right on to meet the dagger that was to take his life. This infatuation of strong drink is so mighty in many a man that though his fortunes are crashing, and his health is crashing, and his domestic interests are crashing, and we hand him a long scroll containing the names of perils that await him, he goes straight on to physical, and mental, and moral assassination. In proportion as any style of alcoholism is pleasant to your taste, and stimulating to your nerves, and for a time delightful to all your physical and mental constitution, is the peril awful. Remember Jonathan and the forbidden honey in the woods of Beth-aven.

Furthermore, the gamester's indulgence must be put in the list of temptations delicious but destructive. I have crossed the ocean eight times, and always one of the best rooms has, from morning till late at night, been given up to gambling practices. I heard of many men who went on board with enough money for European excursion who landed without enough money to get their baggage up to the hotel or railroad station. To many there is a complete fascination in games of hazard or the risking of money on possibilities. It seems as natural for them to bet as to eat. Indeed, the hunger for food is often overpowered with the hunger for wagers, as in the case of Lord Sandwich, a persistent gambler, who not being willing to leave the dice table long enough for the taking of food, invented a preparation of food that he could take without stopping the game; namely, a slice of beef between two slices of bread, which was named after Lord Sandwich. It is absurd for those of us who have never felt the fascination of the wager to speak slightly of the temptation. It has slain a multitude of intellectual and moral giants, men and women stronger than you or I. Down under its power went glorious Oliver Goldsmith, and Gibbon, the historian, and Charles Fox, the statesman, and in olden times famous Senators of the United States, who used to be as regularly at the gambling house all night as they were in the halls of legislation by day. Oh, the tragedies of the faro table! I know persons who began with a slight stake in a lady's parlor and ended with the suicide's pistol at Monte Carlo. They played with the square pieces of bone with black marks on them, not knowing that Satan was playing for their bones at the same time and was sure to sweep all the stakes off on his side of the table. The last New York Legislature sanctioned the mighty evil last spring by passing a law for its defense at the race tracks, and many young men in these cities lost all their wages at Coney Island this summer, and this fall are borrowing from the money tills of their employers or arranging by means of false entry to adjust their demoralized finances. Every man who voted for the Ives pool bill has on his hands and forehead the blood of these souls.

But in this connection some young converts say to me: "Is it right to play cards? Is there any harm in a game of whist or euchre?" Well, I know good men who play whist and euchre and other styles of games without any wagers. I had a friend who played cards with his wife and children, and then at the close said: "Come, now, let us have prayers." I will not judge other men's consciences, but I tell you that cards are, in my mind, so associated with the temporal and eternal damnation of splendid young men that I should no sooner say to my family: "Come, let us have a game of cards," than I would go into a menagerie and say: "Come, let us have a game of rattlesnakes," or into a cemetery, and sitting down by a marble slab, say to the gravediggers: "Come, let us have a game of skulls." Conscientious young ladies are silently saying to me while I speak: "Do you think card playing will do us any harm?" Perhaps not, but how will you feel if in the great day of eternity, when we are asked to give an account of our influence, some man shall say to you: "I was introduced to games of chance in the year 1887, in Brooklyn, at your house, and I went on from that sport to something more exciting, and went on down until I lost my business and lost my morals and lost my soul, and these chains that you see on my wrists and feet are the chains of a gambler's doom, and I am on my way to the gambler's hell." Honey at the start, eternal catastrophe at the last.

Stock gambling comes into the same catalogue. It must be very exhilarating to go into Wall street, New York, or State street, Boston, or Third street, Philadelphia, and depositing a small sum of money run the risk of taking out a fortune. Many men are doing an honest and safe business in the stock market, and you are in ignorance if you do not know that it is just as legitimate to deal in stocks as to deal in coffee, or sugar, or flour. But nearly all the outsiders who go there on a little financial excursion lose all. The old spiders eat up the unsuspecting flies. I had a friend who put his hand on his hip pocket and said to me in substance, "I have there the value of $150,000." His home is to-day penniless. What was the matter? Wall street. Of the vast majority who are victimized you hear not one word. One great stock firm goes down, and whole columns of newspapers discuss their fraud, or their disaster, and we are presented with their features and their biography. But where one such famous firm sinks 500 unknown men sink with them. The great steamer goes down and all the little boats are swallowed in the same engulfment. Gambling is gambling whether in stocks or breadstuffs, or dice, or race-track betting. Exhilaration at the start and a raving brain, and a shattered nervous system, and a sacrificed property, and a destroyed soul at last. Young man, buy no lottery tickets, purchase no prize packages, bet on no baseball games or yacht racing, have no faith in luck, answer no mysterious circulars proposing great income for small investment, shoo away the buzzards that hover around our hotels trying to entrap strangers. Go out and make an honest living. Have God on your side and be a candidate for Heaven. Remember all the paths of sin are banked with flowers at the start, and there are plenty of helpful hands to fetch the gay charger to your door and hold the stirrup while you mount. But further on the horse plunges to the bit in a slough inextricable. The best honey is not like that which Jonathan took on the end of the rod and brought to his lips, but that which God puts on the banquet table of Mercy, at which we are all invited to sit. I was reading of a boy among the mountains of Switzerland ascending a dangerous place with his father and the guide. The boy stopped on the edge of the cliff and said: "There is a flower I mean to get." "Come away from there," said the father; "you will fall off." "No," said he, "I must get that beautiful flower," and the guides rushed toward him to pull him back, when they heard him say, "I almost have it," as he fell 2,000 feet. Birds of prey were seen a few days after circling through the air and lowering gradually to the place where the corpse lay. Why seek flowers off the edge of a precipice when you may walk knee deep amid the blooms of the very paradise of God? When a man may sit at a king's banquet why will he go down the steps and contend for the gristle and bones of a hound's kennel? "Sweet-er than honey and the honey-comb," says David, "is the truth of God." "With honey out of the rock would I have satisfied thee," says God to the recreant. Here is honey gathered from the blossoms of trees of life, and with a rod made out of the wood of the cross I dip it up for all your souls.

The poet Hesiod tells of an ambrosia and nectar, the drinking of which would make men live forever, and one sip of this honey from the Eternal Rock will give you immortal life with God. Come off of the malarial levels of a sinful life. Come and live on the uplands of grace where the vineyards sun themselves. Oh, taste and see that the Lord is gracious. Be happy now and happy forever. For those who take a different course the honey will turn to gall. For many things I have admired Percy Shelley, the great English poet, but I deplore the fact that it was a great sweetness to him to dishonor God. The poem, "Queen Mab," has in it the maligning of the Deity. The infidel poet was impious enough to ask for Rowland Hill's Surrey Chapel, that he might denounce the Christian religion. He was in great glee against God and the truth. But he visited Italy, and one day on the Mediterranean with two friends, in a boat which was twenty-four feet long, he was coming toward shore, when an hour's squall struck the water. A gentleman standing on shore, through a glass, saw many boats tossed in this squall, but all outrode the terror except this one, that in which Shelley, the infidel poet, and his two friends were sailing. That never came ashore, but the bodies of two of the occupants were washed upon the beach, one of them the poet. A funeral pyre was built on the sea shore by some classic friends, and the two bodies were consumed. Poor Shelley! He would have no God while he lived, and he probably had no God when he died. "The Lord knoweth the way of the righteous, but the way of the ungodly shall perish."

INDIANA STATE NEWS.

Macey Warner is a convict in the Michigan City penitentiary from Vincennes for murder. Warner is a tough citizen. Not long ago he took offense at a man named Harris in the penitentiary and cut his throat. Warner had a hearing in Clark County Court, and made the following speech: "Your Honor and gentlemen of the jury, when I was 15 years of age I was sent to the House of Refuge. From there I escaped and returned to Indianapolis. When a policeman attempted to arrest me I shot him. For this I served five years at Michigan City. When I was released I was employed by a commission house in Indianapolis and was sent to Vincennes to assist in shipping poultry. While there a saloon-keeper put me out of his house, followed me to the street and struck me. I shot him dead, and was sent to the prison in this city for twenty-one years. Frank Harris insulted me and I cut his throat with a shoe knife. I do not want to go to the prison for life, and desire you to either acquit me or bring in a verdict of death."

The warden of the Northern Prison has filed his report for July, August, and September with the Auditor of State. The receipts and earnings are as follows: For July, $8,597.03; August, $9,421.77; September, $8,233.32; total, $26,252.12. The expenditures are: For July, $9,849.11; August, $7,646.51; September, $6,466.08; total, $23,961. There was on hand at the beginning of the quarter $15,728.51, of which $8,000 was remitted to the Treasurer of State. The balance on hand October 1, 1887, was $10,018.93. The excess of receipts and earnings over expenditures for the quarter is $2,290.

At Muncie, while George Ludlow, an employe of the Indiana Bridge Company's works, was oiling the machinery his clothes caught in the line-shaft, which was making several hundred revolutions per minute, and before he could extricate himself his body was torn to pieces. One arm was torn from its socket, and both feet were entirely broken off by being whipped against a beam. He never knew what hurt him, as no sound was heard by any of his fellow-workmen. He married the daughter of Dr. F. M. Ricks about one month ago.

The proprietors of the immense brick-yards at Chestertown and Porter Station, in Porter County, are highly elated by the finding at the former place of a large bed of a peculiar sand used in the making of brick. This sand has heretofore been shipped clear from Portsmouth, Ohio, and Elizabeth, N. Y., at a cost of $185 per car. It can now be had at 50 cents a load, and will greatly lessen the cost to manufacturers and consumers, the latter being principally Chicago parties.

Charles Shirley, of Crawfordsville, was found in a corn-field at St. Joseph, unable to help himself, with blood oozing from a large gash in his head and face; he also had bruises on his body. His story is that he was riding on top of a freight train on the Indiana, Bloomington and Western road, and went to sleep. When he became conscious he was lying in a ditch near the track, unable to move, but after several hours he crawled into the field.

What is pronounced by physicians as the most remarkable case of tuberculosis of the system to be found in medical records is reported from Montpelier. A post-mortem held on the body of a man named Jackson revealed the fact that all the organs of the deceased were full of tubercles, and that the heart had almost entirely wasted away. He had been sick less than a year.

Caleb Poynter, a prominent and well-known farmer of Washington County, died recently from blood-poisoning. A few weeks ago a carbuncle made its appearance on his hand, and at one time healed, but an apple dropped from a tree, struck him on the hand, and from the soreness came poison that in a few days went all through his system and resulted in death.

Workmen engaged in sinking an artesian well on the farm of James De Wolf, near La Porte, struck a strong flow of gas at a depth of 250 feet. When ignited the flames shot up several feet, and severely burned some of the men who were induced to apply a match by the discovery of a peculiar hissing sound emanating from the well's casing.

The wife of Fred Govenette stole jewelry from the house of Mrs. Alice Lewis, at Evansville, where she had been employed to do washing. The articles were recovered from the Govenette residence on search warrant. Govenette then got drunk, went to Mrs. Lewis' house and shot her three times. She died, and Govenette is under arrest.

The State Bureau of Statistics has received and tabulated returns from all the counties in the State, regarding the indebtedness and expenses for the year ending June 30, 1887. The bonded debt for the year was $4,228,825; floating debt, $701,121; gross debt, $4,929,946; sinking fund, $382,123. Leaving a net debt of $4,547,823.

Burglars entered the residence of Geo. Ream, at Larwill, and robbed him of $300. He awoke just as they were leaving, and gave chase, when they turned and fired at him. He had drawn $800 from the Farmers' Bank at Columbia City to buy hogs and gave his partner $500 to keep over night, and thereby saved it.

Chas. Blue committed suicide at Mentone, Wabash County, by shooting himself through the head. He was 28 years of age. Cause unknown. He was comfortably well off and had no good reason, although he has for some time been in ill health.

Moses Carter, of Jeffersonville, was shot in the face by an unknown man who called him to the door of his residence.

While hauling coal a horse of William Powers, a farmer of Parke County, balked, and he commenced whipping the animal, and fell dead in the road. He was 43 years old, married, and leaves six children. Death resulted from heart disease.

Michael Fenton, jr., son of Michael Fenton, of Logansport, was fatally injured in the Wabash yards at Detroit. It is supposed that he attempted to alight from a passenger train while going to his work.

The physicians of Indianapolis and the Health Board are considerably disturbed over the rapid spread of typhoid fever.

The safe of J. J. Puttman in the post-office at Newport was blown open and about $18 taken. Several citizens heard the explosion, but there is no trace of the culprit.

Parties are about to lease the Wyandotte cave, in Crawford County, for fifty years, and then build a railroad to the mouth of the cave.

Marion, by popular vote, defeats an assessment to aid in the construction of the Marion and Indianapolis Railroad.

Joseph Plew goes to penitentiary for life for the murder at Warsaw in February last of Henry Dunham and child.

John Turner was accidentally killed while working at a saw-mill at Marengo, Crawford County. He had a wife and four children, and was a sober and industrious man.

A large section of the stalls at the grounds of the Seymour District Fair Association, known as Cyclone Park, were destroyed by fire.

Fair directors at Vincennes were fined for permitting gambling on the fair-grounds.

"HAVEN'T you finished scaling the fish yet, Sam?" "No, master; 'tis a very large one." "Why, you have had time to scale a mountain."

THE SAWMILL'S SONG.

BY L. EDGAR JONES.

With tireless voice and fiery breath
Intoning labor's song,
I bare the hearts of forest pines;
My steel arms, swift and strong,
More tireless blades, which, to and fro,
Through fragrant timber come and go.

In constant streams the giant pines
Are clutched within my grasp;
My metal servants, swift and true,
Their mighty bodies clasp.
Then, held in iron paws, they feel
The thrusts of my swift, flashing steel.

Fast whirling, like revolving light,
The saws go round and round,
And buzz like swarms of giant bees,
Where wheels and shafts resound
In chorus with the clash and clang
Of modern toil's obedient "gangs."

All day, all night, the giants come
From forests far and near,
And march in files, brown, dark, and dun,
Emerging clean and clear,
In ranks of purest white and gold,
Increased in worth a hundredfold.

High up aloft, in carven wreaths,
My smoky banners fly;
While tongues of flame from lofty towers
Glow redly in the sky,
Or paint the clouds with crimson light,
Reflected by the waves at night.

The fragrant product of my toil,
My busy whels and bands,
Is borne by white-winged ships and stream
To distant, treeless lands,
To rise again in cottage homes,
Or lofty piles with stately domes.

And so, untiring, still I toil,
Converting into gold
The trees ordained to be my spoil;
Through days and years untold;
Obeying still, as best I can,
The mandate of my master, man.

So shall resound through passing years
The tune of busy mills,
Their labor chorus echoed from Pine-plumed eagle's wing bills;
Industrial anthems, grand and strong,
Led by the deep-lunged saw-mill's song.

AN OLD-TIME LOVE STORY.

BY JAMES GRANT.

One morning, more than two hundred years ago, a painter stood before his easel, in a garret in Naples, absorbed in earnest contemplation of a work he had just completed.

"I know well enough," said he, with his hand to his brow, "that there is no lack of genius here. I might even lay me down at once and die, and my name would be rescued forever from oblivion."

Ribera had tasted the full bitterness of genius unrewarded, and stern poverty had been his lot. Had he chosen to lower his ideal and paint for the taste of those whose only idea of a picture consisted in that it should be of great size and contain plenty of bright paint, he might have coined money. But scorning this Ribera remained poor and proud.

He was still in the full glow of enthusiasm, when the door of his studio opened, and a little, shriveled old dame shuffled in, bearing a wooden trencher with a very spare meal upon it, and laid it down upon one side. But finding that the painter took no sort of notice of her, she at last tried to make him conscious of her presence.

"When I heard you talking so loudly as I came upstairs," she said, "I thought I should find a real customer here. But I don't wonder no one will buy such a picture as that," she continued, pointing disdainfully at the canvas on the easel; for it must be remarked that old Beatrix shared the prejudices of many of her master's critics.

"It is truly lamentable, good Beatrix, that it does not please thee," said Ribera, patting her gently on the shoulder.

"It is much more lamentable to think that you are minded to die of hunger," replied the old dame. "Scanty as your dinner is to-day, I only hope you may have as good to-morrow; but before that can happen you must give me the means, for mine are all gone. And yet you will always be saying that you could be rich if you liked!—Why have you not finished that portrait for the Countess of Verona? a lady who would fairly have covered the canvas with gold for you, and secured for you the patronage of the viceroy himself. It might have been the making of you!"

"Don't talk to me of that woman, Beatrix, said Ribera, with a gesture of contempt, "with her modish face and her lack-luster eye. Ah, if I had the young girl to copy whom I met awhile ago, I would have painted her with ecstasy!"

"You are a fool," said the serving-woman; "happily for you, your friends have not lost their wits, but have been thinking far more of your welfare than you yourself have. Come, dress yourself now, and go and find out Christopher Panolfo; he is waiting for you."

"Who is this man?"
"One of the richest merchants in Naples."

"I know him not."

"But he knows you well. They have been talking to him about you; he has an excellent opinion of your talents, and wants to order a picture of you. This is as good as ready money; will you reject this too, as well as the rest?"

"No, certainly not," said Ribera. "If this Panolfo is a judge, and will take the trouble to come to me, he will, beyond all doubt, set a respectable price on this masterpiece before us."

"What! you will not even call upon him?"

Ribera coolly turned to the window and shrugged his shoulders.

"No? This is past all bearing," cried Beatrix, with the greatest indignation, as she planted herself before him with an almost threatening air. "I tell you plainly, you must go to Panolfo."

Ribera shook his head.

"Ah, I see," continued she, "I must coax you to obedience. This shows a bad heart, Ribera. Though I made you angry at first by speaking ill of your painting, you must forgive me, and go to Panolfo. Here is your sword, and here your hat, which becomes you immensely when you just perch it a little on one side, so. You may hide your jerkin beneath your mantle; for it is a little too shabby to be seen in open daylight."

Still chattering on, as if she would never cease, Beatrix waited only till the artist had finished attiring himself, and then, thrusting him out of the room, she gave him one more volley of encouragement as he descended the stairs.

"When you arrive at the other end of the town ask for the merchant Panolfo. Mind you do not forget his name; he lives in the grand square nearly opposite the palace of the viceroy. Fare ye well, fare ye well, and bring me back all the good news you can."

Arrived at Panolfo's house, two of the servants conducted Ribera into a richly furnished apartment, which afforded a superb view of the spacious garden adjoining it, and of the blue Mediterranean in the distance. A middle-aged grudge; corpulent, with a dull vulgar cast of countenance, paced, yawning, up and down the room. At an open window sat a young girl, her head resting on her hand, eagerly drinking in the delicious perfume of the orange grove and the breezy aroma of the sea. Ribera made his salutation on entering, but the moment his eyes rested on the maiden's face he became agitated and lost his usual calm self-possession; for at once he recognized the beautiful being of whom not long since he had been speaking to Beatrix. So confused was he at this sudden encounter, that he had hardly voice left to utter his name in response to the inquiring look of the pompous merchant Panolfo. The latter, at Ribera's entrance, had checked his perambulation of the room, attributing the artist's confusion to awe of his own presence and ignorance of the world, and brusquely enough endeavored to reassure the diffident painter. So clumsily was it managed, and with such an air of condescension, moreover, that Ribera was immediately roused from his abstraction; rising to his full height he replied, all his old pride visible in flashing eye and curled lip:

"Neither wealth nor power, nor aught that is wont to inspire others with awe, could humble me or cause me to lower my gaze; and if you beheld me in embarrassment, it was from no other cause than my intense admiration of one of the Creator's most beautiful masterpieces."

His eye met that of the lovely Laura, and in her blushing cheeks and drooping lashes it could not escape him that Panolfo's daughter participated in his feelings. The spell of enchantment was upon them, and before either had exchanged speech the mute language of the eye assured each that they were loved. Unconsciously Panolfo fed the flame; for the more condescendingly he played the patron to the artist, the more sympathetic grew Laura's glances, and the more anxious she appeared to atone for the pain of humiliation occasioned by her father's manner.

"They tell me, sir," began the merchant, "that you are not wanting in talent, but that you are poor and in need of work. I have always taken pleasure in fostering the arts, so we will see whether you deserve one's patronage."

Ribera bit his lip and bowed—it was all he could trust himself to do. Laura noticed the scarcely hidden play of his features, and to soothe the rising storm, said sweetly:

"You are a stranger here, sir?"

Her voice seemed to touch every chord in the painter's heart. His brow grew smooth again as he replied:

"I was born in Spain, signora, near Valencia. I have been in Rome, Venice, Florence, and Parma; in every place I have visited I have left traces of my work behind me; wherever the divine art of painting flourishes there I have gathered honey as a bee from summer flowers. I am now settled at Naples, and never intend to leave it," with a meaning glance at Laura.

"What induces you, sir painter, to give this city your gracious preference?" asked Panolfo, with a sneering smile.

Although Ribera felt the blood slowly rising to his face, he managed to answer calmly, "That is a secret, signor."

"You are too curious, father," said Laura, throwing a little oil on this incipient conflagration. "Signor Ribera doubtless wishes you to infer that he loves."

"Yes, signor," said Ribera, "I love, and with an ardor that will last for my life!"

"A truce to this fencing," impatiently said Panolfo. "Let us come to business. Come, my good sir, are you minded to earn five-and-twenty ducats? But you have not yet informed me what branch of your art you pursue?"

"Tell me only," said Ribera, "what you think of ordering."

"I sign for my wareroom."

This was too much. Ribera moved as if to rise, but an imploring gesture from Laura restrained him; his anger, however, was so great that he could not find words to say whether or not he accepted this proposal.

"Are you not inclined for it?" said Panolfo. "Why, it would be the finest possible opportunity of making yourself known, and if you have any talent you could have no better way of showing it to the public. Do something decent for me, and all my fellow merchants will give you commissions forthwith."

"Will you trust the choice of a subject to me?" said Ribera, with sudden animation. "On no other condition will I undertake your commission."

"Well," replied the merchant, "I have confidence in your taste; do what you like for me."

"And what price do you stipulate for?" asked Ribera, with a smile of bitterness.

"As I told you before, five and twenty ducats; and that, according to my notion, is paying the thing well. You need only make a beginning, and, if I am satisfied, I will let you paint my portrait too, and double the amount. You see, I know how to do things."

"My thanks to you," cried Ribera, rising to his majestic height. "Had you left it to me, I should have said five hundred ducats as the price; but I only ask to fix the picture I shall paint for you for one single day over the door of your house and it shall not cost you so much as a breath. You are in the right. I must make myself known, and I seize the opportunity that presents itself. You may give it out publicly, signor, that you have concluded a good bargain with the first painter in Naples. In a short time we shall meet again. Adieu, signor. Farewell, signora."

Ribera slowly withdrew. As he lingered a moment beneath the window of the room he had just quitted, a purse fell at his feet. It contained 500 ducats, and a slip of paper on which was written in delicate characters: "My hand and fortune for the first painter in Naples."

A few days after the occurrences narrated above, a large crowd was assembled in front of Panolfo's house. Every one was pointing toward it or clapping his hands, and asking the name of the artist who, during the preceding night, had erected as a sign the magnificent picture of the Martyrdom of St. Bartholomew. The enthusiasm of the throng soon manifested itself in vehement clamor. Never till then had such a subject found such an interpreter; never till then had the pencil of mortal man soared to so high a degree of expression and power.

The news soon spread over the town, and the crowd in the grand square grew so large at last that the viceroy himself became anxious to know the reason. Accompanied, therefore, by his favorites, he repaired to the spot opposite the house of Panolfo, and, seized with astonishment and admiration at the sight, cried aloud:

"Who painted this masterpiece?"

There was no reply.

"Why does the artist conceal himself?" continued he. "Let him come forward and rely on my protection. All the painters of Naples shall be schooled by him. Once more, whose masterpiece is this?"

"It is mine, signor," cried Ribera, stepping forth from the crowd.

"Who art thou?"

"My name is Ribera. I am here unknown, and only wait to become that which your highness shall make me!"

"What reward dost thou ask?"

"The title of First Painter to the Viceroy of Naples."

"Thy wish is granted. How much hast thou received for this picture?"

"Sire, the merchant Panolfo offered me twenty-five ducats for it, but I spurned his offer. However, he can content me another way. His daughter Laura and I love one another fondly, devotedly."

"To-morrow ye shall be united."

Sure to his promise the viceroy caused the union of Ribera and Laura to be solemnized the following week. In a short time Ribera la Espagnioletta became the most renowned painter in Naples. But Panolfo, who had most cordially assented to his daughter's union with Ribera, never let a day pass without boasting that he had been the first to recognize the genius of the illustrious sign painter.

An Eccentric Drug.

Among the standard medicines quoted in the medical books of Nuremberg of 200 years ago are "portions of the embalmed bodies of man's flesh, brought from the neighborhood of Memphis, where there are many bodies that have been buried for more than one thousand years, called mummies, which have been embalmed with costly salves and balsams, and smell strongly of myrrh, aloes, and other fragrant things."

The learned doctors of France, Germany, and Italy all made great use of this eccentric drug, and in the seventeenth century grievous complaints arose of its adulteration. M. Poinet, chief apothecary to the French King, records that the King's physician went to Alexandria to judge for himself in this matter, and, having made friends with a Jewish dealer in mummies, was admitted to his storehouse, where he saw piles of bodies. He asked what kind of bodies were used and how they were prepared. The Jew informed him that he took such bodies as he could get, whether they died of some disease or of some contagion. He embalmed them with the sweepings of various old drugs, myrrh, aloes, pitch, and gums; wound them about with a cere cloth, and then dried them in an oven, after which he sent them to Europe, and marveled to see the Christians were lovers of such filthiness. But even this revelation did not suffice to put mummy physic out of fashion, and we know that Francis I. of France always carried with him a well-filled medicine chest, of which this was the principal ingredient.

A traveler also records how one of his friends found in the tomb at Ghizeh a jar carefully sealed, which he opened and found to contain such excellent honey that he could not resist eating a good deal of it, and was only checked in his feast by drawing out a hair, whereupon he investigated further and found the body of an ancient Egyptian baby in good condition and adorned with jewels. He does not record how he enjoyed that meal in retrospect. Imagine dining off the honeyed essence of a baby Pharaoh!—Nineteenth Century.

Though electrical storage batteries have attracted attention only within the past seven years, the discovery of the principle is as old as the century, Gaitherot having first noticed in 1801 that platinum or silver wires gave off a current after being disconnected from a voltaic battery with which they had been used for decomposing saline water. The first secondary cell of Plante was made in 1860.

TURKISH POWER IN CRETE.

The Christians Are Waiting for a Chance to Throw Off the Modern Yoke.

Our return journey to Candia was across a wild and bleak spur of Mount Jukta, says a writer in the Cornhill Magazine. For some time we picked our way through an upland valley in which there was not a particle of shade from the sun. The side of the mountain stood up scarlet and precipitous to our left and our tired mules had to traverse broad surfaces of bare rock spurred from the crag itself. But Cretan scenery is full of surprises, and soon, by an awkward and abrupt descent apparently in the heart of the wilderness, we came to as sweet an oasis of water and vegetation as a wanderer could wish to see. In the midst of a profusion of fig, almond, plantain, and cypress trees was a white house surrounded by a walled and battlemented inclosure, and by its side perled a brook of clear, cool water. The house was that of a young Turk, very rich, but with neither father nor mother. "It has been war already many times," remarked the Arnaut, pointing to the loop-holes of the towers which rose above its walls. "And it will see more war!" he added. While we sat by the side of a fountain in this little paradise, under a natural arbor of yellow pea blossoms, vines, and clematis the man told me a long story about the fortunes of this house in 1866, when the Christians besieged it. This was in the time of the father of the present occupier. Since then the native Turks have lost weight in the land in an extraordinary manner. Two-thirds of the population in Crete is now reckoned to be Christian, and many of the others, from fear or policy, are professing Christians to the Mohammedans. "You have had your day!" says the Christians to the Turks, and the latter acknowledged the truth of their words, and their implication, by a dry hitch of the shoulders and an outspreading of the palms of their hands. There is no denying it. And nowadays, when the Christians go with their guns into the olive woods and shoot small birds for hours at a time it is not the mere pleasure of such paltry sport that satisfies them. Reasoning from analogy shows them that if they can hit a sparrow at twenty paces it is probable that a Turk at fifty paces will be in jeopardy of his life when the time comes. And that the time will come ere long, no patriot who inscribes "Cretois" on his visiting card, and can afford an occasional trip to Athens, "for political purposes," doubts for one moment. If England or some other great power would but help them, they say. Since, however, they are gradually grasping the maxim that self-help is the herald of true and laudable success one may hope after all the Cretans will postpone their next insurrection indefinitely—or, at least, until a long course of unbroken industry has enabled them to put by a good store of drama. Turkish rule in Crete is not now a tyranny, but the Cretans look back and ask of the past: "Was not that a tyranny?" And only too many of them have the most natural reasons for being unforgiving. "He will see some trouble, that young man!" said the Arnaut, alluding once more to the Turk in his farm citadel, and the Arnaut no doubt spoke the truth.

The Fierce Soldier of Chili.

As a soldier the Chillano is brave to recklessness, and a sense of fear is unknown to him. He will not endure a siege, says W. E. Curtis, in Harper's Magazine, nor can he be made to fight at long range; but as soon as he sees the enemy he fires one volley, drops his gun, and rushes in with his "carvo." His endurance is as great as his courage and no North American Indian can travel so far without rest or go so long without food or water as the Chillano peon, or "Roto," as the mixed race is called. As the "Cholo" in Peru is the descendant of the Spaniards and the Incas, so is the "Roto" in Chili the child of the Spaniard and the Araucanian Indians, the race of giants with which the early explorers reported that Patagonia was peopled—"menne of that big-giness," as Sir Francis Drake reported, "that it seemed the trees of the forest were uprooted and were moving away." They have the Spanish tenacity of purpose, the Indian endurance, and the cruelty of both. Each soldier, in the mountains or the desert, carries on his breast two buckskin bags. In one are the leaves of the coca plant, in the other powdered lime made of the ashes of potato-skins. The coca is the strongest sort of a tonic, and by chewing it the Chillano soldier can abstain from food or drink for a week or ten days at a stretch. The Chillano soldier is not easily subjected to discipline, and out-vandals the vandals in the destruction of property, as the present condition of Peru will prove. He burns and destroys everything within his reach that has sheltered an enemy. No authority can restrain his hand. The awful scenes of devastation that took place in Peru have nothing to parallel them in the annals of modern warfare. On the battle-fields nine-tenths of the dead were found with their throats cut, and the Chillano took no prisoners, except when a whole army capitulated. They ask no quarter and give none. The knowledge of this characteristic and the fear of the Chillano knife were a powerful factor in the subjugation of the more humane Peruvians.

The Medieval Materia Medica.

A ring made of the hinge of a coffin was credited with the power of relieving cramps, which also received solace when a rusty old sword was hung up by the patient's bed-side. Nails driven into an oak tree were not a cure, but a preventive against toothache. A halter which had served to hang a criminal withal when found round the temples was found an infallible remedy for headache. A dead man's hand could dispel tumors of the glands by stroking the parts nine times, but the hand of a man who had been cut down from a gallows-tree was, we need not say, a remedy infinitely more efficacious. Some of these remedies still exist among the superstitious poor of the provinces, although the formula, of course, is not now strictly adhered to, the game being emphatically hardly worth the candle. To cure warts, for instance, the best thing was to steal a piece of beef from the butcher, with which the warts were to be rubbed, after which it was to be interred, and as the process of decomposition went on the warts would wither and disappear.

The chips of a gallows on which several persons had been hanged, when worn in a bag round the neck, were pronounced an infallible cure for the ague. The nightmare, supposed, of course, to be caused by supernatural agency, was banished by means of a stone with a hole in it being suspended at the head of the sufferer's bed. This last remedy went by the name of a hag-stone, because it prevented the witches, who, of course, wrought the mischief, from sitting on the patient's stomach. Its effects upon these mischievous old crones was singularly deterrent. The poor old creatures, who could not have sat a horse the moment he began to walk, were credited with riding these animals over the moorland at headlong speed in the dead of the night, when better disposed and less frisky people were wrapped in slumber. A hag-stone tied to the key of a stable door at once put a stop to these heathenish vagaries.—London Times.

Lifelong Disappointment.

Even if one acquiesces in the loss of liberty the deprivation is always a sad one. A visitor at the Convent of Turgina, in Italy, describes the disappointed longing of one of its inmates, an aged woman, who had been brought up in a convent, and when her education was complete, at the request of her friends—no dowry, and therefore no husband, having been found—had taken the veil.

She could not remember having walked in a street in all her life, and with this fact was connected her greatest earthly disappointment.

Some three years before I met her she had been sent from Dijon to this convent at Turgina. The journey occupied about forty hours, and she was joyfully animated by the hope of just once traversing the streets on foot.

But, alas for the frailty of human hopes! The lady superior, knowing nothing of this secret longing, and deciding that a woman of more than 80 years of age would be glad to drive, sent a close carriage to meet her at the railway station.

There were tears in the poor old woman's eyes as she said to me: "And now I shall never walk in a street!"—Youth's Companion.

YOUNG Man (to sexton at church door)—Isn't the sermon nearly done? Sexton—About an hour yet. He is only on his 'lastly.' Young Man—Will it take him an hour to get through his 'lastly?' Sexton—No. But there's the 'one word and I am done,' and the 'finally,' and the 'in conclusion' to come yet.

MEN will hurry, and rush, and risk their lives to get across the street in front of a passing horse-car and then stand five minutes idly on the curbstone vainly trying to impress a pretty girl, who was married five years ago, and who wouldn't look at them even if they were gold-plated and set with diamonds.—Somerville Journal.

"PAPA," said a precocious Chicago youth, "does the store man milk goats when he gets buttermilk?" "No, my son; what put that into your head?" "Well, anyhow, folks milk goats, don't they?" "Certainly, my son." "Ain't a goat a butter?" "Yes." "Then why ain't a goat's milk buttermilk?" "Here is ten cents, my son; just go over to the corner grocery and tell the man you want to exchange it for a nice, large, ripe watermelon."—Carl Pretzel's National.

Snap Judgment.

"What is your business?" asked the census marshal.

"Bartender," replied the citizen.

"And where do you tend bar?"

"Down at the United States Court building," replied the Judge.

And the census marshal slapped his book shut, and as he went away said he would come down that way some morning and wet himself with a cocktail. He heard the Judge say he would be more likely to get a lentail; but thought it was just one of the bartender's jokes.

Purity and Strength

The former in the blood, and the latter throughout the system, are necessary to the enjoyment of perfect health. The best way to secure both is to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, which expels all impurities from the blood, rouses the kidneys and liver, overcomes that tired feeling, and imparts that freshness to the whole body which makes one feel perfectly well.

"I have taken not quite a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and must say it is one of the best medicines for giving an appetite, purifying the blood, and regulating the digestive organs that I ever heard of." Miss N. A. STANLEY, Canastota, N. Y.

W. C. T. U. Portraits.

MEMBERS of the W. C. T. U. will be delighted to learn that DEMOREST'S MONTHLY MAGAZINE, the greatest of all family magazines, has commenced a series of finely executed portraits of the Presidents of the W. C. T. U., each accompanied by a short biographical sketch. The November number (now ready) contains a life-like picture of Miss Francis E. Willard, President of the National Organization. This will be followed by that of Mrs. Mary Towne Burr, President of the New York State Organization, after which will appear, each month, one of the other State Presidents, until the list is completed. The series will be a most valuable one, and every lady should possess this collection of portraits of some of the brightest women of our country.

Buy in your vicinity, or send to the publisher for the November number, and you will be surprised at its contents. Besides its many other attractions, it contains a finely executed portrait of the late Hon. John B. Finch.

Many suppose DEMOREST'S MONTHLY to be a fashion magazine. This is a great mistake. It undoubtedly contains the finest FASHION DEPARTMENT of any magazine published, but this is the case from the fact that great enterprise and experience are shown, so that each department is equal to a magazine in itself. By subscribing for DEMOREST'S you really get a dozen magazines in one, and secure amusement and instruction for the whole family. It contains Stories, Poems, and other Literary attractions, including Artistic Science, and Household matters, and is illustrated with original Steel Engravings, Photographs, Oil Pictures, and fine Woodcuts, making it the Model Magazine of America.

Each copy of DEMOREST'S MONTHLY MAGAZINE contains a COUPON ORDER entitling the holder to the selection of ANY PATTERN illustrated in any number of the Magazine, and IN ANY OF THE SIZES manufactured, making during the year Twelve Patterns, valued at from 20 cents to 30 cents each.

This is a most liberal offer, and ladies are learning that, besides having the best literary and household Magazine that is published, they can save between $3.00 and $4.00 per year by subscribing for DEMOREST'S MONTHLY. Single copies (containing Pattern Coupon) 25 cts. W. JENNINGS DEMOREST, Publisher, 15 East 14th Street, New York. Sold by all Newsdealers and Postmasters.

The near approach of Thanksgiving has a tendency to make the turkeys roost on the top-most branches.

Sam Baker, wife and daughter, Esau, were at Hicksville, Wednesday getting their pictures "took."

Jonathan Burr has put a canvass cover on his back. Uncle Jonathan is bound to keep up with the times.

Sam J. M. Langley, and daughter, Mary, have been visiting friends and acquaintances at Muncie, this week.

Mart Tustison and his sister Emma, went to Chicago Monday night, and are taking in the sights of that great city this week.

A. M. Richards of Hicksville was in town this week. A. M. had better move over here, and that will save coming so often.

The Pigeon Observer says the paper will be full twice this month. Person would almost conclude from reading that paper last week, that the editor was full all the time. Full of gas, we mean.

The Waterloo Press got it onto us last week, and it didn't take us three seconds to see the joke, either. Alright, Bro. Willis, if you can't send us any humming birds, we'll try and be satisfied with moths.

Probably no one thing has caused such a general revival of trade at W. O. Patterson's Drug Store as their giving away to their customers of so many free trial bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. Their trade is simply enormous in this very valuable article from the fact that it always cures and never fails. Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Croup, and all throat and lung diseases quickly cured. You can test it before buying by getting a trial bottle free, large size $1. Every bottle warranted.

Considering the very inclement weather, a good sized audience gathered at the Methodist church, last Sunday evening, to listen to the lecture by Miss White, entitled "Save the Boys." She began her lecture by saying that temperance was on the side of right, of the bible and of God, and that it must and would prevail. She gave an analysis of the various kinds of drinks, and showed that they were not only harmful, but that they contained the rankest kind of poisons. She spoke for an hour and a half, and closed with an earnest and pathetic appeal to the audience to help save the boys of this nation, by prohibiting the manufacture and sale of strong drinks.

OUR CORRESPONDENTS.

SPENCERVILLE.

P. Bishop was in Chicago this week.

The schools at this place will open on next Monday.

Jake Baltz Jr. was at Maysville last Wednesday.

Eli Fales is moving into his new house this week.

Several of our ladies were at Auburn Friday visiting with Mrs. Geo. Baltz.

Mr. and Mrs. Eli Bishop, of Van Wert, Ohio are visiting relatives at and near this place this week.

Prof. Wedan's singing class are making preparations to give the cantata, "Queen Esther," at the close of his singing school.

Ben Zimmerman took a fine picture of the new Lutheran church at this place recently. Ben is a good artist and is putting out some fine work.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, will be entertained by Mrs. Dr. Hull, Saturday afternoon, Nov. 5th 1887. All are cordially invited to attend.

The entertainment given at the school, last Monday evening, by the Wilcox family, was well attended and gave good satisfaction. They went to Maysville from here.

PIGEON'S RETREAT.

Martin Kline is able to be around again.

Ben Wasson took a load of cider to Fort Wayne on Friday.

Mr. Meek, the Hicksville book-agent, is boarding at L. A. Lake's this week.

Miss Ida Koch is staying with Mrs. W. Koch during the absence of her husband.

James Draggoo and wife are, in Kansas visiting with a brother of Mrs. Draggoo.

Ugh Winland was in this part of the country on a collecting tour one day last week.

Jack Morcy has his new cellar completed, and for convenience, it is hard to beat.

"Buckeye" and Johnnie Shilling, Tom Kirstand Sam Shutt, went to a sale at Moersville on Friday. B. Shilling and S. Shutt invested in some stock.

Low Lake started for Michigan last Thursday, in a wagon. He was accompanied by his brother-in-law, who will remain there this winter. His family will remain in Ind., until he selects their future home.

Wouldn't it be a good idea to have gas piped from Auburn to this Retreat to illuminate the school house, and then get a good literary society started? It would 'waken Pigeon's Retreat up immensely, and for one we vote for the literary, if we have't any thing but kerosine for illumination.

George Dilley has promised some of his neighbor's daughters a sleigh-ride, behind his yoke of white oxen this winter, providing, of course, there is sleighing. George is for reviving the olden times that our grandfathers tell about. The question that puzzles George is: "Which did our grandfathers have cow-bells or sleigh-bells, on their oxen when they took their girls sleigh-riding."

Mrs. Robert Culbertson met with quite an accident one day last week. While on her way to Auburn, some one ran into her buggy, upsetting it and throwing her out. When taken up it was thought she was dead, but in a short time she revived and is now slowly improving.

"Come Charley it is about time we were going home." "Oh! rats, pa, I am not going home." And Charley did not go home, but went across the river to see Anna, and she was not at home, and he had to go home after all.

Charley Koch gave himself away beautifully one evening last week, while taking Vill a buggy ride in the big wagon. He said, "I think those pictures of Orange's and Ida's are splendid. I saw them up at George Morris last Saturday evening." How innocent. We would not have known that he was up there, if he had not told us, for Emma would never have said a word about it. Oh! no.

It seems that horse-back riding is the style this fall. At least a couple of young men took their girls home on horse-back, from the party at Mr. White's in the evening. Now this is a secret we want the News readers to help us to keep, for we do not dare tell it. If you should say any thing about it, do not tell it so that Vill and Belle will get to hear it, and I would not for any thing, tell who rode Alice's horse.

Charley, son of James Rickett, died last Friday at eleven P. M. age, nine years and two months. He has been afflicted all summer, but was not dangerously ill until about three weeks ago, and has been a great sufferer during that time. He was a bright little boy and loved by all who knew him. He was a regular attendant in the Sabbath school, until his health began to fail, and he was unable to get there. The family have the sympathies of a host of friends, who have "passed under the red," in similar afflictions. Funeral services were conducted by Rev. Langley.

TRUTH IS MIGHTY AND WILL PREVAIL.

Ellis Sanders has a position in a railroad office at Deshler, Ohio.

"Buckskin Joe" has been talking to the people of Newville this week.

A. Kinsey, undertaker at this place, has had charge of six funerals within the past week.

Mrs. James Ables has so far recovered her health, as to be able to visit friends at Hicksville this week.

The W. C. T. U. will meet at the residence of A. B. Filley, on Thursday afternoon, Nov. 3rd. All are cordially invited to attend.

St. Joe will experience a young moon next spring, if the improvements which are now being talked of are made, and they probably will be. There is no gas about this.

The pairing rain last Sunday didn't keep Bert Patterson from going to see his best girl at Hicksville. Oh! no. They say love is blind, and Bert probably could not see the rain.

We issue a two page supplement this week, which contains a full report of the W. C. T. U. convention held at this place last Saturday, besides other interesting local matter. Read it.

The News acknowledges the receipt of an invitation to the sixth annual reception and ball, given by the B. & O. apprentice boys, at Garrett. Thank you, boys, but we never hop.

M. T. Bishop now has the largest stock of shingles on hand that he has ever had since he has been in business. Mell has a big trade, though, and will soon dispose of them. Persons who are in need of shingles will do well to give him a call.

Farmers are having splendid weather in which to do fall work.

Million Baker will have a cozy little home when he gets his new house completed.

J. D. Leighty and Frank Barney, drove to Fort Wayne on Wednesday, to attend a meeting of the Knight Templars.

J. H. Conrad done a job of sporting for S. S. Shutt this week. He has not done any thing but sport for the last few weeks.

Lyman Knight is in very poor health, and unless he should get better, will hardly be able to teach the coming winter.

All who are interested in procuring a deed for the cemetery at Jenkins' school house, are requested to meet at that place on Saturday, Oct. 29, 1887.

Those who attended the reunion at Waterloo last week, report having a very pleasant time. There were about 165 of the boys in blue present.

Al Coburn thought the News was hungry for a mess of turnips, and so he brought us in a couple of whopping big ones, this week. Thanks, we're quite fond of turnips.

Vester Widney is breaking in a new dog. "Fau" is getting old, and with the exception of one or two runaway shermishes, has been a good faithful servant, and well deserves a rest.

We received some correspondence this week from Sedan, with the request that it be published. We should like to comply with the request, but we have more matter here at home each week, than we have space for.

Little Lillie, a five year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Curt Washler, died at their home in this place on Monday. The funeral services took place on Wednesday, and were conducted by Rev. Albright, pastor of the M. P. church at Maysville. The body was interred in the Spencerville cemetery.

Squire Ables has entered suit against the News for libel. We understand that he has employed O. H. Widney as counsel in the case, and we feel confident that we can induce Oliver to "holdover" until we can file a schedule, or put our property in our wife's name, and then James can sue, if wants to; but he'll get right badly left.

Miss White had expected to leave St. Joe on Monday, but owing to some misunderstanding as to her future engagements, she did not get away, and so consented to lecture again in the evening. Only a few hours notice of the lecture was given and yet the Lutheran church, in which it was held, was well filled, and all were well repaid for coming out. Her lectures were all good, but we are of the opinion that we had the best of the wine at the last of the feast.

We understand that Demorest's Monthly has been making extensive changes in its editorial staff. If parallel results could always be obtained, we would advise every publisher to go and do likewise; for the November number, which has just arrived, is certainly a grand success. Demorest's Monthly has always been in the front rank of family magazines, but the new blood that has now been infused into it puts it ahead of all rivals. Before subscribing for your family magazine for the coming year, you should see Demorest's, for they say with truth that it contains a dozen magazines in one, and furnishes information and amusement for the whole family. Published by W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th Street, N. Y.

EVENTS OF A WEEK.

THE OLD WORLD.

—The French Government has determined to put General Boulanger under arrest for thirty days, says a Paris dispatch. During that time his conduct will be further inquired into, and it will be decided whether he shall be deprived of his command or not.

—The relations between Germany and Russia are becoming more embittered. No mask is now worn on either side. The press of St. Petersburg and Moscow is now permitted to indulge in its natural disposition to abuse the Germans. The inspired press is not backward in responding in kind. Diplomatic intercourse between the two governments is limited to unavoidable communications, which are exchanged with frigid civilities.

—The conflicts between the police and the Trafalgar Square mob still continue, says a London dispatch, several fights having occurred yesterday and many arrests having been made. The rioters intended to make a demonstration at Hyde Park, but the police locked the park gates. This action infuriated the crowd, and a sharp conflict occurred. In their efforts to get out of the park many of the crowd were thrown down and trampled upon.

—A Paris correspondent of a London paper claims to know that General Boulanger was in close communication with the late M. Katkoff, and that the latter advised him to proclaim himself Dictator. One of Katkoff's letters was intercepted and sent to the Emperor William, who notified the Czar of its contents, and the imperial favorite was disgraced in consequence.

PERSONAL NOTES.

—The President met with the same enthusiastic reception at Nashville and Chattanooga that has been accorded him all along the route. During the reception at Nashville, while many poorly dressed people, evidently farmers and working men and women, were passing before him, Mr. Cleveland administered a stinging rebuke to a number of well-dressed people, who, having been presented, had stepped back of him and were making unkind remarks touching the personal appearance of those passing along in front. Hearing the remarks and the laughter, the President said: "These good people are here out of respect to me. I am not willing for you to make sport of them. It is not right." The laughter and comment ceased. At Chattanooga the train was greeted by a mass of humanity that filled the large depot to overflowing. Cannons boomed, bands played, and the vast multitude shouted. The city was thronged with people from East Tennessee, North Georgia, North Alabama, and fully 30,000 visitors were in the city in spite of the drizzling rain. The Presidential party reached Atlanta at midnight Monday. There were at a close estimate 100,000 strangers in the city, and such a jam was never known.

—The President and his party were received by Governor Gordon at the Capitol in Atlanta, Ga., on Tuesday, and were then driven to the Exposition grounds at Piedmont Park, where an address of welcome was delivered by H. W. Grady, to which the President responded. He sketched the rapid growth and prosperity of Atlanta, and in conclusion said:

Every man at all concerned in what is here exhibited will return to his home with new plans and purposes, which will result in his increased prosperity; and the aggregate of this will make a rich and prosperous neighborhood; its contagion makes a rich and prosperous State. We often hear of a State noted for its excellent products. This is not always the result of fertility of the soil, or of its adaptability, but of the enterprise of its people inaugurating such expositions as this, where they may meet and take counsel and learn of each other. All of Georgia's neighboring States still feel the impulse of the cotton exposition of 1881, and the commercial convention of 1883, and I trust that the Piedmont exhibition may prove of as great benefit as these to the material welfare of the large section of country which has contributed to its success.

At the conclusion of the Presidential speech repeated calls were made for Governor Gordon. In response, the Governor arose and proposed "three cheers for Mrs. Cleveland," which were given with wild enthusiasm.

FINANCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL.

—John F. Henry and Henry E. Brown, wholesale druggists of New York, have made an assignment. They also failed in 1878, owing about $60,000. H. Webster & Co., the insolvent wholesale liquor dealers of New York, have actual assets of $381,000, with liabilities of $785,000. Charles S. Bryce, wholesale liquor dealer at No. 31 Front street, New York, is a small Ohio stock, valued at $118,000, he obtained loans aggregating $118,000.

—The Eleventh General Assembly of the Knights of Labor, after a continuous session at Minneapolis of over two weeks, adjourned on Wednesday, the 19th inst. The session was a busy one, and has the record of accomplishing more than any of its predecessors. An enormous amount of work was disposed of in the last two days, the most important of which is thus summarized:

The Anarchistic element received another back-set when the assembly resolved by a vote of 112 to 29 that Knights of Labor in parades shall carry nothing but the State or National colors. There can be no more red flags in Knights of Labor parades. An attempt to prevent Mr. Powderly's further activity in the order in the event of his resignation was frustrated when the assembly refused to accept a proposition to strike out the section of the rules which provides, "A Past General Master Workman shall have all the rights and privileges of a representative." The rule prohibiting the sale of liquors at picnics was sustained against a motion to change by a vote of 104 to 39. Hereafter organizers must pay dues in advance for the time of their commissions, and locals must not propose and initiate candidates for membership the same night. A week must intervene. The Committee on Appeals and Grievances reported the charges against General Secretary Litchman as groundless. It was moved to provide for granting charters to Chinese assemblies, but the measure was lost, it being regarded as detrimental to the order in the West. A report from the Committee on Finance recommended economy for the coming year.

—The invitation from Indianapolis was accepted, and the convention will be held in that city next year.

—The arrangements for the formation of a sugar trust are said to be practically completed, says a New York dispatch. Bonds will be issued to the amount of $15,000,000, and $50,000,000 in stock will be distributed. Mr. Henry Havemeyer will be President, and John E. Seales, now Treasurer of the Havemeyer & Elder Sugar-refining Company, will be the General Manager of the concern.

—A Philadelphia dispatch says that by order of Shoe-Makers' District Assembly No. 70, Knights of Labor, 5,000 hands engaged in the manufacture of shoes in that city quit work Wednesday, and twenty-four factories paid off their hands and closed their doors.

FIRES AND ACCIDENTS.

—The walls of the four-story brick parochial school-house in course of erection for the Church of Our Lady of Mount Carmel, at 443 East One Hundred and Fifteenth street, New York, fell in, burying twenty-one men who were in the building. Four men are known to have been killed, and many were injured, among the latter being Father Krueger, who was superintending the work on the building. A number of workmen were seriously injured, and other deaths may follow.

—A skiff containing six men was capsized in the Allegheny River, at Foxburg, Pa., and two brothers, J. and H. Neville, were drowned.

—Rear Admiral Braine, commanding the South Atlantic Squadron, reports to the Navy Department that on Sept. 8 the Brazilian cruiser Imperial Marinho was lost by running upon a bar at Rio de Janeiro. One officer and fourteen seamen were lost and 126 persons saved.

—By the fall of a derrick at Louisville, Ky., one man was killed and another fatally injured.

—Three explosions of natural gas at Pittsburgh, occurring almost simultaneously, partly wrecked the Hotel Albemarle and Bijou Theater Block, and shattered every window in the vicinity. Fire also broke out, but was soon extinguished. A score of persons were wounded, two of whom cannot recover, while a half dozen others are in a precarious condition.

—The fishing-schooner Rebecca Nickerson, which sailed from Provincetown, Mass., last May, has been given up for lost. She is supposed to have been wrecked during the hurricane of Sept. 3. Her crew consisted of nineteen men.

THE CRIMINAL RECORD.

—Attorney General Ayers and the other imprisoned State officers of Virginia were committed to the custody of a United States Marshal on Monday by order of Chief Justice Waite. Their counsel renewed the motion that they be admitted to bail pending the argument of the question at issue.

—Wheeling (W. Va.) dispatch: "In Roane County, West Virginia, Jake Coon and Robert Duff were identified as having participated in the murder of the Rev. Thomas F. Ryan, and were lynched. Vigilantes also captured and killed George Duff, Jr., brother of Robert. William Drake was taken by a mob to Spencer, but it is not known whether he was lynched. Drake confessed that Dan Cunningham, a detective, planned the robbery and that his gang carried out the scheme." —A Charleston (W. Va.) dispatch states that Cunningham has been caught and lynched, and that the vigilantes will not let up until half a dozen or so more outlaws have been strung up.

—Mrs. Annie Lacey, the St. Louis woman who threw a pancake into Mrs. Cleveland's lap, has been fined $50 and costs. She admitted to the officer who arrested her that she threw the pancake, as she wanted Mrs. Cleveland to see what St. Louis pancakes were like.

—In the United States Supreme Court, at Washington, Chief Justice Waite announced that argument upon the questions raised by the habeas corpus cases of Attorney General Ayers and other imprisoned State officers of Virginia will be set down for the second Monday in November, and that meanwhile the prisoners will be set at liberty in their own recognizances in the sum of $1,000 each to answer the summons of this court when their presence shall be required.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

—A Washington dispatch says that Secretary Lamar is certain to take the place left vacant on the Supreme bench by the death of Justice Woods, and that he will be appointed immediately after handing in his report as Secretary of the Interior.

—The cotton crop of the United States this year is estimated at 6,550,000 bales, against 6,505,000 bales last season.

—In his annual report to the Secretary of the Interior, Land Commissioner Sparks speaks of the "present wasteful and fraudulent system of disposal" of the public lands, and intimates that there is much room for improvement in the laws upon the subject.

—The Roman Catholic Sisters of Charity, who were applicants for positions as public school teachers, says a Pittsburgh dispatch, have withdrawn their applications, because, it is claimed, the examination they were subjected to was too vigorous. Superintendent Lackey, of the Central Board of Education, has received scores of letters and papers, all of them denouncing the action of the Thirty-third Ward School in electing a priest to the position of Principal. These papers come from all parts of the country.

—About seven thousand people saw the Detroit Base-Ball Club administer another drubbing to the St. Louis Browns at Boston on Tuesday. The Wolverines took the lead in the second inning and held it to the end. Caruthers was hit safely seventeen times, and when the Detroit didn't hit safe the Browns banded and the man was safe. Getzen, on the other hand, held the St. Louis batsmen at his mercy. Score—Detroit, 9; St. Louis, 2. Eight games have thus far been played, of which Detroit has won six.

—Civil Service Commissioner Edgerton says a Washington telegram—

Is not slow in arraying himself against the sentiments expressed by Commissioner Edgerton in his recent letter about the legality of Government clerks organizing State associations and taking part in political affairs. Judge Edgerton doesn't believe in extreme or strained constructions of the law, which would accomplish its full purpose without irritating the public mind by extreme constructions. "These State organizations," said Judge Edgerton, "have as much right to exist as they ever had. There is nothing in the law to prohibit it. A man is not deprived of the privileges of citizenship because he assumes public office, and I think the idea that a man should abandon his residence in a State—his citizenship when he takes office in Washington is preposterous. If the law is to be construed in this extreme manner, it will array the public against it."

—The St. Louis Base-Ball Club was defeated by the Detroit at Philadelphia, Wednesday, by a score of 4 to 2, making seven out of nine games the Wolverines have captured.

GENERAL MEADE IN BRONZE.

—A Philadelphia dispatch of Wednesday says that—

In the presence of a large concourse of people, among whom were numbered many of Philadelphia's most prominent citizens and distinguished public men of the State and nation, the bronze equestrian statue of General George Gordon Meade, erected in Girard Park, was unveiled with appropriate pomp and ceremony. A grand military parade which proved one of the most imposing demonstrations of the kind ever given in this city, formed at STATUE OF GEN. MEADE.

Broad and Spring Garden streets and marched to the monument in the park where the unveiling ceremonies took place. The memorial, which takes the shape of a bronze equestrian statue, is the work of the sculptor Calder. It is of heroic size, and is mounted on a pedestal of rough granite, about twenty feet in height. The statue represents General Meade reining in his horse sharply on the slope of a hill, while, hat in hand, he is returning a salute. The design is a spirited one, and the likeness is king.

The Best Ideal of a Family Medicine.

A remedy which promptly and completely relieves ailments of such common occurrence as indigestion, constipation, biliousness, and disorders of a malarial type, is assuredly the best ideal of a family medicine. Such is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which is not only capable of eradicating these complaints, but also counteracting a tendency to kidney troubles, rheumatism, and premature decadence of stamina. Taking it "all round," as the phrase is, there is probably not in existence so useful, effective, and agreeable a household panacea as the Bitters. Nor is it less highly esteemed by the medical profession than by the families of America. Numberless testimonials from professional sources of irrefragable authenticity avow its merit. The demand for it abroad, no less than in the land of its discovery, is certainly increasing, time and experience of its beneficial effects confirming the high opinion originally formed of it.

"Half Our Knowledge We Must Snatch, Not Take."

"Yes, sir," remarked Mr. Roundtrip, "I am a poor man, and the only fortune I can give my children is an education, and that they have. Edward is entitled to write D. D. after his name, Alfred and Clara each write M. A. after theirs, and little Timothy is an A. B., all my children are university bred."

"Is it possible?" exclaimed the new minister, looking at the children in amazement.

"Yes, indeed," replied the father proudly.

"Harvard, Mr. Roundtrip?" suggested the new minister.

"No," said the father, "they took the four weeks' course at Chautauqua."—Burdette.

$500 Reward.

If you suffer from dull, heavy headache, obstruction of the nasal passages, discharges falling from the head into the throat, sometimes profuse, watery, and acid, at others thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody, and putrid; if the eyes are weak, watery, and inflamed, and there is ringing in the ears, deafness, hacking or coughing to clear the throat, expectoration of offensive matter, together with scabs from ulcers; the voice being changed and having a nasal twang; the breath offensive; smell and taste impaired; experience a sensation of dizziness, with mental depression, a hacking cough, and general debility, then you are suffering from chronic nasal catarrh. Only a few of the above-named symptoms are likely to be present in any one case at one time, or in one stage of the disease. Thousands of cases annually, without manifesting half of the above symptoms, result in consumption and end in the grave. No disease is so common, more deceptive, and dangerous, less understood, or more successfully treated by physicians. The manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy offer, in good faith, $500 reward for a case of catarrh which they cannot cure. The remedy is sold by druggists at only 50 cents.

An Italian physician who has given close attention to causes and remedies of malaria recommends a decoction of lemon as especially useful. The rind and pulp of a fresh lemon cut in thin slices is boiled in three cupfuls of water in an earthen vessel and boiled down to one cupful, then strained with pressure through linen and set aside over night. The whole is to be drank in the morning before breakfast.—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

The Popular Thoroughfare.

The Wisconsin Central Line, although a comparatively new factor in the railroad systems of the Northwest, has acquired and enviable popularity. Through careful attention to details, its service is as near perfection as can be looked for. The train attendants seem to regard their trusts as individual property and as a result the public is served par-excellence. The road now runs solid through fast trains between Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul, and Minneapolis with Pullman's best and unequalled dining-cars; it also runs through, solid sleepers between Chicago, Ashland, Duluth, and the famous mining regions of Northern Wisconsin and Michigan.

A PHYSICIAN who has tried living in Albuquerque, New Mexico, considers that it is favored with a climate peculiarly fitted for consumptives. He says that it possesses a dry, pure atmosphere, that there is but little rain and an abundance of sunshine, and that while it is situated 5,000 feet above the level of the sea, it is yet sheltered on the east by a high range of mountains. Furthermore, it has railroad facilities and can provide the necessities and comforts of life.—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Improper digestion of food necessarily produces bad blood, resulting in a feeling of fullness in the stomach, acidity, heartburn, sick-headache, and other dyspeptic symptoms. A closely-confined life causes indigestion, constipation, biliousness, and loss of appetite. To remove these troubles there is no remedy equal to Prickly Ash Bitters. It has been tried and proven to be a specific.

AT PEACE WITH ENEMIES.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon at the Brooklyn Tabernacle.

Why We Should Forgive—Ill-Humor Exhausting to Physical and Mental Health—Those Who Preserve Their Temper in Debate Generally Come Out Ahead.

BROOKLYN, Oct. 23.—The Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D., preached in the Brooklyn Tabernacle this morning on the subject: "Forgiveness before sundown." After explaining some passages concerning Hezekiah, Dr. Talmage gave out the following hymn, which was sung by the congregation:

This glorious hope revives
Our courage by the way,
While each in expectation lives
And longs to see the day.

Prof. Henry Eyre Browne rendered on the organ an aria with variations, by Cramer. The text of the sermon was from Ephesians iv, 26: "Let not the sun go down upon your wrath." Dr. Talmage said:

What a pillow embroidered of all colors hath the dying day. The cradle of clouds from which the sun rises is beautiful enough, but it is surpassed by the many colored mausoleum in which at evening it is buried. Sunset among the mountains! It almost takes one's breath away to recall the scene. The long shadows stretching over the plain make the glory of the departing light on the tiptop crags and struck aslant through the foliage the more transpicuous. Saffron and gold, purple and crimson commingled. All the castles of cloud in conflagration. Burning Moscovs on the sky. Hanging gardens of roses at their deepest blush. Banners of vapors, red as if from carnage, in the battle of the elements. The hunter among the Adirondacks and the Swiss villager among the Alps know what is a sunset among the mountains. After a storm at sea the rolling grandeur into which the sun goes down to bathe the nightfall is something to make weird and splendid dreams out of for a lifetime. Alexander Smith in his poem compares the sunset to "the barren beach of hell," but this wonderful spectacle of nature makes me think of the burnished wall of Heaven. Paul in prison writing my text remembers some of the gorgeous sunsets among the mountains of Asia Minor, and how he had often seen the towers of Damascus blaze in the close of the Oriental days, and he flashed out that memory in the text when he says: "Let not the sun go down upon your wrath."

Sublime and all suggestive duty for people then and people now. Forgiveness before sundown. He who never feels the throb of indignation is imbecile. He who can walk among the injustices of the world, inflicted upon himself and others, without flush of cheek or flash of eyes or agitation of nature, is either in sympathy with wrong or semi-idiotic. When Ananias, the high priest ordered the constables of the courtroom to smite Paul in the mouth, Paul fired up, and said: "God will smite thee, thou whited wall." In the sentence immediately before my text Paul commands the Ephesians: "Be ye angry and sin not." It all depends on what you are mad at and how long the feeling lasts whether anger is right or wrong. Life is full of exasperations. Saul after David, Succoth after Gideon, Korah after Moses, the Parquins after Augustus, the Pharisees after Christ, and every one has had his pursuers, and we are swindled or belied or misrepresented or persecuted or in some way wronged; and the danger is that healthful indignation shall become baleful spite, and that our feelings settle down into a prolonged outpouring of temper displeasing to God and ruinous to ourselves, and hence the important injunction of the text: "Let not the sun go down upon your wrath."

Why that limitation to one's anger? Why that period of flaming vapor set to punctuate a flaming disposition? What has the sunset got to do with one's resentful emotions? Was it a haphazard sentiment written by Paul without special significance? No, no; I think of five reasons why we should not let the sun set before our temper sets.

First, because twelve hours is long enough to be cross about any wrong inflicted upon us. Nothing is so exhausting to physical health or mental faculty as a protracted indulgence of ill humor. It racks the nervous system. It hurts the digestion, it heats the blood in brain and heart until the whole body is first overheated and then depressed. Besides that, it sours the disposition, turns one aside from his legitimate work, expends energies that ought to be better employed, and does us more harm than it does our antagonist. Paul gives us a good, wide allowance of time for legitimate denunciation, from 6 o'clock to 8 o'clock, but says: "Stop there!" Watch the descending orb of day, and when it reaches the horizon take a reef in your disposition. Unloose your collar and cool off. Change the subject to something delightfully pleasant. Unroll your tight fist and shake hands with some one. Bank up the fires at the curfew bell. Drive the growling dog of enmity back to its kennel. The hours of this morning will pass by, and the afternoon will arrive, and the sun will begin to set, and I beg you on its blazing hearth throw all your feuds, invectives, and satires.

Other things being equal, the man who preserves good temper will come out ahead. An old essayist says that the celebrated John Henderson, of Bristol, England, was at a dining party where political excitement ran high and the debate got angry, and while Henderson was speaking his opponent, unable to answer his argument, dashed a glass of wine in his face, when the speaker deliberately wiped the liquid from his face and said:

"This, sir, is a digression; now, if you please, for the main argument." While worldly philosophy could help but very few to such equipoise of spirit the grace of God could help any man to such a triumph. "Impossible," you say. "I would have either left the table in anger or have knocked the man down." But I have come to believe that nothing is impossible, if God help, since what I saw at Beth-Shan faith cure in London, England, two summers ago. While the religious service was going on Rev. Dr. Boardman, glorious man, since gone to his heavenly rest, was telling the scores of sick people present that Christ was there as of old to heal all diseases, and that, if they would only believe, their sickness would depart. I saw a woman near me, with hand and arm twisted of rheumatism, and her wrist was fiery with inflammation, and it looked like those cases of chronic rheumatism which we have all seen and sympathized with, cases beyond all human healing. At the preacher's reiteration of the words: "Will you believe? Do you believe? Do you believe now?" I heard this poor sick woman say, with an emphasis which sounded through the building: "I do believe." And then she laid her twisted arm and hand out as straight as your arm and hand, or mine. If I had seen one rise from the dead I would not have been much more thrilled. Since then I believe that God will do anything in answer to our prayer and in answer to our faith, and He can heal our bodies, and if our soul is all twisted and misshapen of revenge and hate and inflamed with sinful proclivity, he can straighten that also and make it well and clean. Aye, you will not postpone till sundown forgiveness of enemies if you can realize that their behavior toward you may be put into the catalogue of the "all things" that "work together for good to those that love God." I have had multitudes of friends, but I have found in my own experience that God so arranged it that the greatest opportunities of usefulness that have been opened before me were opened by enemies. And when, years ago, they conspired against me, that opened all Christendom to me as a field in which to preach the Gospel. So you may harness your antagonists to your best interests and compel them to draw you on to better work and higher character. Suppose, instead of waiting until six minutes past 5 o'clock this evening, when the sun will set, you transact this glorious work of forgiveness before meridian.

Again, we ought not to let the sun go down on our wrath, because we will sleep better if we are at peace with everybody. Insomnia is getting to be one of the most prevalent of disorders. How few people retire at 10 o'clock at night and sleep clear through to 6 in the morning! To relieve this disorder all narcotics, and sedatives, and chloral, and bromide of potassium, and cocaine, and intoxicants are used, but nothing is more important than a quiet spirit if we would win somnolence. How is a man going to sleep when he is in mind pursuing an enemy? With what nervous twitch he will start out of a dream! That new plan for cornering his foe will keep him wide awake while the clock strikes 11, 12, 1, 2, 3, 4. I give you an an ailing prescription for wakefulness: spend the evening hours rehearsing your wrongs and the best way of avenging them. Hold a convention of friends on this subject in your parlor or office at 8 or 9 o'clock. Close the evening by writing a bitter letter, expressing your sentiments. Take from the desk or pigeon-hole the papers in the case to refresh your mind with your evening's meanness. Then lie down and wait for the coming of day, and it will come before sleep comes, or your sleep will be a worried quiescence, and, if you take the precaution to lie flat on your back a frightful nightmare. Why not put a bound to your animosity? Why let your foes come into the sanctities of your dormitory? Why let those slanderers who have already torn your reputation to pieces or injured your business, bend over your midnight pillow and drive from you one of the greatest blessings that God can offer—sweet, refreshing, all invigorating sleep? Why not fence out your enemies by the golden bars of the sunset? Why not stand behind the barricade of evening cloud and say to them: "Thus far and no farther?" Many a man and many a woman is having the health of body as well as the health of soul eaten away by a malevolent spirit. I have in time of religious awakening had persons night after night come into the inquiry room and get no peace of soul. After a while I have bluntly asked her: "Is there not some one against whom you have a hatred that you are not willing to give up?" After a little confusion she has slightly whispered, "Yes." Then I said to her: "You will never find peace with God as long as you retain that virulence."

A boy in Sparta, having stolen a fox, kept him under his coat, and, though the fox was gnawing his vitals, he submitted to it rather than expose his misdeed. Many a man with a smiling face has under his jacket an animal that is gnawing away the strength of his body and the integrity of his soul. Better get rid of that hidden fox as soon as possible. There are hundreds of domestic circles where that which most is needed is the spirit of forgiveness. Brothers apart, and sisters apart, and parents and children apart. Solomon says a brother offended is harder to be won than a strong city. Are there not enough sacred memories of your childhood to bring you together? The rabbins recount how that Nebuchadnezzar's son had such spite against his father that a ter he was dead he had his father burned to ashes, and then put the ashes into four sacks, and tied them to four eagles' necks which flew away in opposite directions. And there are now domestic antipathies which seem forever to have scattered all parental memories to the four winds of Heaven. How far the eagles fly with sacred ashes! The hour of sundown makes to that family no practical suggestion. Thomas Carlyle, in his biography of Frederick the Great, says the old King was told by his confessor he must be at peace with his enemies if he wanted to enter Heaven. Then he said to his wife, the Queen: "Write to your brother after I am dead that I forgive him." Roloff, the confessor, said: "Her majesty had better write him immediately." "No," said the King, "after I am dead; that will be safer." So he let the sun of his earthly existence go down upon his wrath.

Again: We ought not to allow the sun set before forgiveness takes place, because we might not live to see another day. And what if we should be ushered into the presence of our Maker with a grudge upon our soul? The majority of people depart this life in the night. Between 11 o'clock p. m. and 3 o'clock a. m. there is something in the atmosphere which relaxes the grip which the body has on the soul, and most of the people enter the next world through the shadows of this world. Perhaps God may have arranged it in that way so as to make the contrast the more glorious. I have seen sunshiny days in this world that must have been almost like the radiance of Heaven. But as most people leave the earth between sundown and sunrise, they quit this world at its darkest, and Heaven, always bright, will be the brighter for that contrast. Out of blackness into irradiation. Shall we then leap over the roseate bank of sunset into the favorite hunting ground of disease and death, carrying our animosities with us? Who would want to confront his God, against whom we have all done meaner things than anybody has ever done against us, carrying old grudges? How can we expect his forgiveness for the greater when we are not willing to forgive others the less? Napoleon was encouraged to undertake the crossing of the Alps because Charlemagne had previously crossed them. And all this rugged path of forgiveness bears the bleeding footsteps of Him who conquered through suffering, and we ought to be willing to follow. On the night of our departure from this life into the next, our one plea will have to be offered in the presence of Him who has said: "If you forgive not men their trespasses neither will your Heavenly Father forgive your trespasses." What a sorry plight if we stand there hating this one, and hating that one, and wishing this one a damage, and wishing some one else a calamity, and we ourselves needing forgiveness for 10,000 times 10,000 obliquities of heart and life. When our last hour comes, we want it to find us all right. Hardly anything affects me so much in the uncovering of ancient Pompeii as the account of the soldier who, after the city had for many centuries been covered with the ashes and scoria of Vesuvius, was found standing in his place on guard, hand on spear and helmet on head. Others fled at the awful submergence, but the explorer, 1700 years after, found the body of that brave fellow in right position. And it will be a grand thing if, when our last moment comes, we are found in right position toward God, on guard and unafraid by the ashes from the mountain of death. I do not suppose that I am any more of a coward than most people, but I declare to you that I would not dare to sleep to-night if there were any being in all the earth with whom I would not gladly shake hands, lest, during the night hours, my spirit dismissed to other realms, I should, because of my unforgiving spirit, be denied divine forgiveness.

"But," says some woman, "there is a horrid creature that has so injured me that rather than make up with her I would die first." Well, sister, you may take your choice—for one or the other it will be—your complete pardon of her or God's eternal banishment of you. "But," says some man, "that fellow who cheated me out of those goods, or damaged my business credit, or started that lie about me in the newspapers, or by his perfidy broke up my domestic happiness, forgive him I cannot—forgive him I will not." Well, brother, take your choice. You will never be at peace with God till you are at peace with man. Feeling as you now do, you would not get so near the harbor of Heaven as to see the light-ship. Better leave that man with the God who said: "Vengeance is mine, I will repay." You may say: "I will make him sweat for that yet, I will make him squirm, I mean to pursue him to the death," but you are damaging yourself more than you damage him and you are making Heaven for your own soul an impossibility. If he will not be reconciled to you, be reconciled to him. In five or six hours it will be sundown. The dahlias will bloom against the western sky. Somewhere between this and that take a shovel and bury the old quarrel at least six feet deep. "Let not the sun go down on your wrath."

"But," you say, "I have more than I can bear; too much is put upon me, and I am not to blame if I am somewhat revengeful and unrelenting." Then I think of the little child at the moving of some goods from a store. The father was putting some rolls of goods on the child's arm, package after package, and some one said: "That child is being over-loaded and as much ought not to be put upon her." When the child responded, "Father knows how much I can carry," and God, our Father, will not allow to much imposition on his children. In the day of eternity it will be found you had not one annoyance too many, not one aspiration too many, not one outrage too many. Your Heavenly Father knows how much you can carry.

Again: We should not let the sun go down on our wrath because it is of little importance what the world says of you or does to you when you have the almighty God of the sunset as your provider and defender. People talk as though it were a fixed spectacle of nature and always the same. But no one ever saw two sunsets alike, and if the world has existed 6,000 years there have been about 2,100,000 sunsets, each of them as distinct from all the other pictures in the gallery of the sky as Titian's "Last Supper," Rubens' "Descent from the Cross," Raphael's "Transfiguration" and Michael Angelo's "Last Judgment" are distinct from each other. If that God of such infinite resources that He can put on the wall of the sky each night more than the Louvre, and the Luxembourg, and the Vatican, and Dresden and Venetian galleries all in one is my God and your God, our provider and protector, what is the use of our worrying about any human antagonism? If we are misinterpreted, the God of the many-colored sunset can put the right color on our action. If he can afford to hang such masterpieces over the outside wall of Heaven and have them obliterated in an hour, he must be very rich in resources and can put us through in safety. If all the garniture of the western heavens at eventide is but the upholstery of one of the windows of our future home, what small business for us to be chasing enemies! Let not this Sabbath's sun go down upon your wrath.

Mahomet said: "The sword is the key of Heaven and hell, a drop of blood shed is better than fasting, and wounds in the day of judgment resplendent as vermillion, and odoriferous as musk." But, my hearers, in the last day we will find just the opposite of that to be true, and that the sword never unlocks Heaven; and that He who heals wounds is greater than he who makes them, and that on the same ring are two keys: God's forgiveness of us and our forgiveness of enemies; and these two keys unlock Paradise.

And now I wish for all of you a beautiful sunset in your earthly existence. With some of you it has been a long day of trouble, and with others of you it will be far from calm. When the sun rose at 6 o'clock it was the morning of youth, and a fair day was prophesied, but by the time the noonday of middle age had come and the clock of your earthly existence had struck 12, cloud racks gathered and tempests belled in the track of tempest. But as the evening of old age approaches I pray God the skies may brighten and the clouds be piled up into pillars as of celestial temples to which you go, or move as with mounted cohorts come to take you home. And as you sink out of sight below the horizon may there be a radiance of Christian example lingering long after you are gone, and on the heavens be written in letters of sapphire, and on the waters in letters of opal, and on the hills in letters of emerald: "Thy sun shall no more go down, neither shall thy moon withdraw itself, for the Lord shall be thine everlasting light and the days of thy mourning shall be ended." So shall the sunset of earth become the sunrise of Heaven.

THE WAY OF THE WORLD

Laugh, and the world laughs with you;
Weep, and you weep alone;
For this brave old earth must borrow its mirth,
It has troubles enough of its own.
Sing, and the hills will answer,
Sigh, and 'tis lost on the air;
The echoes rebound to a joyful sound,
But shrink from moaning care.
Rejoice, and men will seek you,
Grieve, and they will turn and go;
They want full measure of all your pleasure,
But they do not want your woe.
Be glad, and your friends are many,
Be sad, and you lose them all;
There are none to decline your proffered wine,
But alone you must drink life's gall.
Feast, and your hall is crowded,
Fast, and the world goes by;
Succeed and give, and it helps you live,
But no one can help you die.
There is room in the halls of pleasure
For a long and lordly train,
But one by one we must all file on Through the narrow aisles of pain.

INDIANA STATE NEWS.

—Patents have been issued to Indiana inventors as follows: Nevada F. Ardery, New Cumberland, bustle; Stephen J. Austin, Terre Haute, platform scale; Sylvanus F. and A. Bowser, said Sylvanus F. Bowser assignor by mesne assignment to S. F. Bowser, Fort Wayne, storage and measuring tank for volatile liquids; John P. Carr, Sr., Brookston, threshing machine; Geo. W. Coons, Indianapolis, adjustable boring machine; Joseph F. Gent, Columbus, preserving cereals; Robert Hartman and J. P. Frowe, Connersville, foot warmer; Alva T. Hoadley, Tilden, fence-weaving machine; Hugh T. Hogan, Albion, assignor of one-half to W. D. Gleason, Park Manor, Ill., locomotive headlight; John T. Stansbury, Elkhart, hair-curler.

—Six boys of Crawfordsville went hunting recently, and three of them were brought back with shot in their faces and heads. The boys thought they had something in a log, and John Harris went to one end to shoot the animal as it would run out. The other boys went to the other end of the log to frighten it out. In some manner the gun of John Harris was discharged, and Frank Birchfield lost one eye and is not expected to recover from the wounds. Also, a brother of Harris, and Pat O'Neal, an Irish lad, were shot in the neck. The Harris boy having the gun does not seem to know just how the gun happened to go off, but thinks he must have discharged it with his foot after he laid the gun on the ground.

—The Board of Missions of the M. E. Church has just formally accepted the gift of the estate of Elijah Hayes, of Warsaw. The donation of the property, valued at $100,000, to Chaplain McCabe, Secretary of the Board, occurred in September, but a clause in the bequest provided that the property should remain intact for fifty years, and to this the Board declined to accede, fearing depreciation in value after Mr. Hayes' death. The conditions were accordingly altered so that the real estate becomes the Board's at the death of the donor, and the terms are accepted.

—The fires that have prevailed in the Kankakee marsh recently, extended over a larger territory and have been much more destructive than was first supposed. In a number of places the farmers were compelled to haul water to quench the fire when it had communicated to the turf. The burnt district comprises an area of about nine miles square, reaching from Grovertown to nearly the Kankakee river, and extending north from the Pittsburgh Railroad to the Baltimore and Ohio road. Over 5,000 tons of hay have been destroyed, valued at about $16,000.

—Prof. Collett, late State Geologist, is authority for the statement that eagles yet roost along the Wabash in Indiana. Parke County farmers a year ago were annoyed by depredations of the king of the air, being losers of lambs, chickens, etc. One or more of their number was killed, and a hunt was talked of. A few days ago a Sullivan County farmer named Eaton killed a fine specimen of the bald or gray species near Walker's Chapel, which measured seven feet between wing tips.

—Thomas Fox, a farmer, who lived seven miles east of Columbia City, was found lying near the track of the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad, dead. His shoes and stockings were off, lying near him. He was probably asleep on the track and struck by a train. He was 41 years of age, and leaves a large family destitute.

—Suits have been brought in the Montgomery County Court to enjoin the Commissioners and County Treasurer from placing upon the tax-duplicate, and collecting it, a donation voted fifteen years ago toward the present Midland Railroad.

The suits are brought by the citizens of Clark and Scott Townships.

—Henry Brookman's daughter, 11 years of age, was burned to death at Kiana, on the Air-line Railroad. During the temporary absence of the family, the little girl's clothing was ignited from an open fire. She was burned so badly that death resulted in a few hours.

—Wesley Addison, a prominent farmer and stock-trader, living one mile southeast of Greenfield, was found on the railroad track, near his farm, with his head, legs, and one arm cut off, and his whole frame horribly mangled, three or four trains having run over him.

—At Carthage, five miles south of Knightstown, gas was struck at a depth of 820 feet and six feet in Trenton rock. The gas increases as the drill goes down. When lighted, the flame was about fifteen feet high from a two-inch pipe.

—While responding to a fire-alarm, at Madison, James King, aged 31, was thrown from a hose-cart and instantly killed, his neck and skull being broken. He leaves a widow and three children.

—The Farmers' Association, of Charleston, will bring suit against the Adams Express Company for transporting a small box of quail that were shot out of the season fixed by the game law.

—The barn of Mr. Israel Taylor, a wealthy farmer living about two miles south of Argos, was consumed by fire, burning four valuable horses. Loss, $3,500; no insurance.

—Judge W. P. Britton, of Crawfordsville, had an arm broken in two places by a mare, which he was trying to break, jumping upon him. He also received other injuries.

—Wm. Emmons, an 8-year-old boy, living four miles from Vincennes, was struck on the head by a limb blown from a tree in a high wind and killed.

—The miners' strike, at Washington, grows more serious each day, and fully one-half of the miners have left the place.

—William Hall, a farmer, drove off a fifteen foot embankment, near Jackville, and was crushed to death beneath his buggy. He leaves a widow and three children.

—Michael Sullivan, a freight brakeman on the Fort Wayne road, was run over at Piercetown and so badly injured that he died four hours after.

—The 18-year-old son of Isiah Moore, a farmer living near Madison, was fatally wounded by accidental discharge of a gun while hunting.

—Fort Wayne is overrun with burglars. Macy Warner was sentenced at Jeffersonville to be hanged April 15, for the murder of Jacob Mandry in 1883.

—While playing around a burning stump, the little son of G. W. Moore, living near Brazil, was burned to death.

—A movement has been inaugurated at Evansville for the suppression of violations of the liquor laws.

—Charles Baldwin, living near Kokomo, was accidentally shot and killed by his son Frank while out hunting.

THERE is said to be a great similarity between a vain young lady and a confirmed drunkard, in that neither of them can ever get enough of the glass.

EVENTS OF A WEEK.

PERSONAL NOTES.

The funeral of ex-Minister Washburne, at Galena, Ill., called to the city many prominent people from a distance and a large number of the early settlers of Jo Daviess County, former friends and associates of the deceased.

J. E. Smith, the express-messenger who recently killed two train-robbers near E. Paso, has been paid $2,000 as a reward by the Governor of Texas.

A dispatch from Mill Grove, Ind., says that John Snyder, the man who walks because he can't stop, after an incessant tramp night and day for three years, is dying. He has aged wonderfully in the last six months, and, although he still goes on walking in the well-beaten path about his house, it is with tottering step and face which gives evidence of great suffering.

Secretary Whitney has gone to New York for an indefinite period, says a Washington special. He has been suffering from severe headaches and his physicians have ordered him to stop all work. During his absence Commodore Harmony will act as Secretary, his duties and responsibilities being shared, however, by the board of bureau officers recently organized to meet this emergency.

A New York dispatch announces that Jay Gould and family have sailed for Europe, with elaborate arrangements for comfort. It is reported that his departure was hastened by threats made by anarchists because he would not lend his influence to the movement for the pardon of the seven condemned men.

FINANCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL.

State Senator Arkell, of New York, is said to be organizing eight of the leading paper-stock manufacturers of the country into a "paper-bag trust," which will be known as the American Paper Bag Company, and have a capital of $2,000,000.

The leaders of the rebellion in the Knights of Labor organization, says a Chicago dispatch, think that their expulsion is only a matter of time, and in case it should come about they will band together in new districts and start an independent order.

The celebrated Storey will case, and the fate of the Chicago Times, are about to be decided, says a Chicago dispatch. Ever since the death of the journalist, in October, 1884, his vast estate has been in litigation, although the decedent had taken particular pains in the making of the two wills he left behind him. Now a settlement satisfactory to the parties most directly concerned is about to be effected without the aid of the courts. The entire estate, including its debts, is purchased by a syndicate, the representatives of which are Mr. Clinton A. Snowden and Mr. J. J. West, both well-known journalists. The price paid is said to be $1,200,000. The real estate is valued at $600,000, and the newspaper plant at the same figure. In the reorganization of the paper Mr. West will be the business manager, Mr. Snowden editor in chief, and Mr. Joseph R. Dunlop managing editor. The price of the paper will be lowered, and some radical changes made.

POLITICAL POINTS.

A Baltimore special says: "There were polled in the municipal election on Wednesday 65,075 votes, of which Latrobe (Dem.) for Mayor got 34,640 and Bartlett (Rep.) 30,435, giving Latrobe a majority of 4,205, a Democratic gain of nearly 2,000 since the election for Mayor two years ago. The newly elected city council will consist of twelve Democrats and eight Republicans in the first branch and seven Democrats and three Republicans in the second branch. The result of the election was a great surprise to the Republicans, who counted largely on the reformers' aid and were confident of victory."

FIRES AND ACCIDENTS.

The steamship Gaelic, from Hong Kong and Yokohama, brings advices to San Francisco that Sept. 15 the Chinese transport Way Lee was lost and 280 Chinese and five Europeans were drowned. The steamer Anton encountered a typhoon, during which the second officer and twenty-four Chinese were washed overboard and drowned.

Two men were instantly killed and three others were seriously injured by an explosion in the jannanning-room of L. N. Tophill's carriage factory at Cleveland, Ohio, Friday afternoon.

The propeller Vernon foundered off Manitowish during the terrible gale Saturday. The crew of twenty-two men with several passengers took to rafts, but it is feared they were drowned. A Chicago telegram says:

Probably not less than thirty and perhaps fifty persons perished with the steamer. The exact number may never be known. Only one list of the passengers and crew was kept, and that was aboard of the Vernon. There is no survivor to tell the story. The managers of the line say the crew numbered between twenty-three and twenty-six, and they know the names of only eight. On her previous trip to Chicago the Vernon had about fifty passengers, most of whom were laborers who were returning from St. Ignace. She may have had as many this time, although the local agents are inclined to think otherwise. Following is a revised list of the lost: Charles H. Baumann, of Chicago, passenger; Miss Sarah Parker, of Chicago, passenger; Miss Kate Gallagher, of Mackinac Island, passenger; Miss Dunlevy, of St. James, Bayview Island, passenger; Capt. Geo. Thorpe, of Ogdenburg, N. Y.; Master Capt. John Sullivan, of Chicago; Capt. W. B. Rice, clerk, eldest son of the owners of the line; Charles Murray, first officer; Frank M. Hall, of Chicago, second officer; Martin Bean, steward; Henry De la, porter, a brother of Martin. The captain of the life-boat crew of two Rivers describes the steamer as the worst ever seen by him on the lake, the waves rising to the height of thirty or forty feet.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

Cholera was discovered on the steamship Britannia, now lying at quarantine in New York Bay. One of the passengers died and another is in a precarious condition.

A special from Blunt, Okla., says that "George Barney, Edward Loomis, William Delarug, W. Darggins, and F. E. Lamp, farmers living near Blunt, having first obtained permission of a Deputy United States Marshal, went on the Winnebago Indian Reservation to catch driftwood from the Missouri River. A band of Indians came up and captured their five teams, fired upon the farmers, caught and beat them, and then bound them hand and foot and took them to Fort Thompson, where they are still in captivity."

The Indians in the Northwest are inclined to stray from their own territory, and owing to the troubles with the Crows the Secretary of the interior has caused orders to be issued to the agents to keep the various tribes upon their respective reservations.

Owing to ignorance of the date when it was to be held, the Attorney General of Kansas failed to appear and make an oral argument in a prohibition case which has attracted considerable attention, and which was argued on behalf of the liquor-dealers before the United States Supreme Court some time since. On Wednesday the court refused his request that he might be allowed to make an argument because of his failure to appear at a proper time.

The concluding game in the world's championship series between the St. Louis and Detroit Base-Ball Clubs was played in St. Louis on Wednesday, and was won by the home team by a score of 9 to 2. Of the fifteen games played, Detroit won ten and St. Louis five. Detroit scored a total of seventy-one runs, against fifty-three for St. Louis.

The following proclamation has been issued by the President:

The goodness and the mercy of God which have followed the American people during all the days of the last year claim their grateful recognition and humble acknowledgment. By His omnipotent power He has protected us from war and pestilence, and from every national calamity; by His gracious favor the earth has yielded a generous return to the labor of the husbandman, and every path of honest toil has led to comfort and contentment; by His loving kindness the hearts of our people have been replenished with fraternal sentiment and patriotic endeavor; and by His unerring guidance we have been directed in the way of national prosperity. To the end that we may, with one accord, testify our gratitude for all these blessings, I, Grover C. Cleveland, President of the United States, do hereby designate and set apart Thursday, the 4th day of November next, as a day of thanksgiving and prayer, to be observed by all the people of the land. That day let all secular work and employment be suspended, and let our people assemble in their accustomed places of worship and with prayer and songs of praise give thanks to our Heavenly Father for all that He has done for us, while we humbly implore the forgiveness of our sins and a continuance of His mercy. Let families and kindred be united that day, and let their hearts, filled with kind cheer and affectionate reminiscences, be turned in thankfulness to the source of all their pleasures and the Giver of all that makes the day glad and joyous. And in the midst of our prosperity and happiness let us remember the poor, the needy, and the unfortunate, and by our gifts of charity and ready benevolence let us increase the number of those who with grateful hearts shall join in our thanksgiving.

During three days emigration papers were issued by the American Consul at Ottawa to fifty persons who propose to come to this country to settle.

At a conference between Jay Gould and President Chandler, of the Postal Telegraph Company, in New York, peace was declared, and it was determined to advance telegraph rates immediately.

William J. McGarigle, the escaped Chicago "boulder," is believed to be in Winnipeg, Manitoba. According to a telegram from Winnipeg a man answering his description was seen on the streets there.

THE CRIMINAL RECORD.

When the case of the condemned anarchists came up in the Supreme Court at Washington on Thursday the court-room was packed by people anxious to hear the arguments. Three hours were evenly divided between J. Randolph Tucker and Attorney General Hunt, of Illinois. Says a Washington dispatch:

Each made a clean and strong argument, and both were very closely listened to and seldom interrupted by any member of the court. Mr. Tucker got along swimmingly while he explained to the court that it was only necessary for his side to show a conflict between the action of the Illinois courts and the Federal Constitution in order to entitle his clients to a writ; whether the conflict amounted to a repugnance was to be settled if the writ were granted at a hearing on the merits of the question, and he did not arouse the court while he was explaining in eloquent fashion the unconstitutionality of trying a man before a jury some of whose members had read about the crime in the papers. But when he began to argue that the first ten amendments, while originally restraints upon federal power, were injected into the substance of the fourteenth amendment so that the provisions of that amendment really covered everything in the first ten amendments, Justice Field smiled incredulously and remarked that he was giving the fourteenth amendment a pretty wide construction; and a few minutes afterward, when Mr. Tucker was explaining that the petitioners had been denied the right to peaceably assemble and discuss public affairs, Justice Miller, in entire unconsciousness of Mr. Tucker's labored argument, that the fourteenth amendment had the effect of investing the first ten amendments with a new and additional power, reminded the speaker that the fourteenth amendment was a restraint upon Federal power alone, whereupon Mr. Tucker started in again to explain that the first ten amendments were by the fourteenth amendment made restraints upon State power as well as Federal power. This exposition of the fourteenth amendment received a severe blow when Attorney General Hunt cited the opinion of the court, made only two and a half years ago in the Presser case, also an anarchist case, and also a case from Chicago. Presser was convicted by the State courts of violating a law which limited to the regularly-mustered State militia the right to parade the streets with arms. He appealed to the Federal Supreme Court on the ground that the right to bear arms was guaranteed to him by the Constitution of the United States, and that this being so, the right to bear arms was one of the rights and immunities of citizenship which the fourteenth amendment guaranteed to him. The court held that the second amendment was a restraint upon federal and not State power, and that the fourteenth amendment had nothing to do with the case. Thus it will be seen that the Presser case was closely analogous to Mr. Tucker's presentation of the present case, and in the Presser case the State law was upheld. The argument for the day concluded with some brief remarks by Mr. Hunt on the impracticability and absurdity of the claim made in Gen. Butler's brief for Spies and Fielden that they were subjects of foreign powers, with which the United States had treaties guaranteeing the subjects of those foreign powers, in our territories, certain rights of trial, and that the treaties antedated the Illinois act of 1874 regarding the admissibility to juries of certain persons, and that Spies and Fielden had a treaty right to be tried by a jury impaneled in accordance with what was the law in force in this country at the time the treaties were ratified.

The hearing of the motion of the anarchists for a writ of error was concluded in the United States Supreme Court on Friday, Oct. 28. The closing arguments were made by State's Attorney Grinnell, of Chicago, and Gen. B. F. Butler.

Mr. Grinnell spoke less than an hour, but he commanded close attention all the way through. He started out by disavowing the intention to make an argument, but what he said was clear, forcible, and convincing. The first utterance attracted attention because it revealed the fact that in all the twenty-eight assignments of error in Judge Gary's court there was no reference to the Federal Constitution and no effort to raise a "Federal question." Then he took up the objections raised to Jurors Denker and Sanford and demonstrated from the record that no rights of the defendants had been abridged by their selection. Denker was among the first four jurors sworn and was readily accepted by the defense after their first objection, but even if he had not been accepted, the defendants at that time had 142 challenges, with one of which they could have dispensed of Denker if he was objectionable. Mr. Grinnell then laid bare the complaint that Juror Santoni had been forced upon the defense after all their challenges had been exhausted. He showed that after eleven jurors had been accepted by both sides the defense had forty-three challenges left, but these were frittered away before a grand was called. During all of this portion of Mr. Grinnell's speech the members of the court were close listeners. They asked many questions about the record and the manner of selecting juries, and showed that they regarded these points of greater importance than all the discussion about the Constitution and equal rights indulged in by Mr. Tucker and General Butler. But what so much interested them most was the State's Attorney's analysis of the jury. His statement about the number of talesmen examined, the division of challenges, and finally the assertion that the jury itself was representative of American citizenship, chosen from no class and having in it no "capitalist," attracted the keenest interest not only from the Judges but the audience which filled the court-room. Mr. Grinnell quoted the cases of Kerr and Guiteau as precedents for selecting evidence. General Butler followed Mr. Grinnell. He complained that matter had been introduced into the case that did not appear in the record, and that the lives of his clients had thus been put in jeopardy. He asked for an extension of time in which to discuss this extraneous matter, but it was not granted. The leading feature of General Butler's argument was the claim that Spies and Fielden were entitled to greater privileges than American citizens because the State had no right to charge their status as from what it was under the treaties, and that therefore the Illinois jury law did not apply to them. One of the most specious pleas presented in the whole case was first alluded to by Mr. Tucker and elaborated by Gen. Butler. This was the assertion that the anarchists were not in the court when sentenced. Gen. Butler wanted a writ of certiorari, so that they could prove this was the case.

Peter Kimp, a saloon-keeper at Russellville, Ind., was not granted a city license recently, but proposed to conduct his business without it. Citizens raised his grocery with dynamite a few nights ago. One man was injured.

Never seeing a snake charm a bird or animal, I concluded it was a negro superstition or fancy devoid of fact. So I continued to think till a few days ago when a farmer friend of mine, living four miles south of Abilene, told me what he had witnessed. He said he was riding along a prairie and he saw a prairie dog within a few feet of him, which refused to scamper to his hole, as prairie dogs usually do when approached by man; on the contrary, he sat as if transfixed to the spot, though making a constant nervous, shuddering motion, as if anxious to get away. My friend thought this was strange, and while considering the spectacle he presently saw a large rattlesnake coiled up under some bushes, his head up-lifted, about six or seven feet from the dog, which still hoed him not, but looked steadily upon the snake. He dismounted, took the dog by the head and thrust him off, when the snake, which had up to this moment remained quiet, immediately swelled with rage and began sounding his rattles. The prairie dog for some time seemed benumbed, hardly capable of motion but grew better and finally got into his hole. My friend then killed the rattler. Now, was this a case of charming? If not, what was it? My friend who told me this is named Irving McClure, a farmer well known to me, a good and trustful man. I now give it up that snakes do indeed charm, or so paralyze birds and little animals with terror, when they can catch their eye, they become helpless and motionless, almost as good as dead. What say the scientists?

It is enough to strike not only birds and little animals but men with nightmare. I have on several occasions examined them closely with strong glasses, and feel with all force what I state, and I will tell you that there are few men on the face of the earth who can look upon an angered rattlesnake through a good glass—bringing them apparently within a foot or two of the eye and stand it more than a moment. —Forest and Stream.

There is no question about it—blood will tell, especially if it be an impure blood. Blisters, eruptions, pimples and boils, are all symptoms of an impure blood, due to the improper action of the liver. When this important organ fails to properly perform its function of purifying and cleansing the blood, impurities are carried to all parts of the system, and the symptoms above referred to are merely evidences of the struggle of Nature to throw off the poisonous germs. Unless her warning be heeded in time, serious results are certain to follow, culminating in liver or kidney disorders, or even in consumption. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will prevent and cure these diseases, by restoring the liver to a healthy condition.

There is a little lady on the Back Bay who was a widow only a few years ago, but who now manages with consummate grace one of the finest establishments in the city, and the richest sort of a devoted husband. For some time she bestowed her affections upon her first husband, who died two years after marriage. She purchased a magnificent lot in the most aristocratic cemetery of the neighborhood, and erected a marble monument.

The marriage occurred a little more than a year ago, and a few days since a leading Boston monument maker received an order for a costly tombstone to be sent to a distant city. The wife had remained true to her first love.—Boston Globe.

France, too, has gained by freedom. The national character has gained in dignity and self-control. There are symptoms of the old maladies among the excitable populace of Paris and there may be dangers ahead; but it is becoming more and more evident that ever since the great revolution republicanism is the only form of government which is legitimate in France. The restoration of any dynasty, if brought about, will only mean its expulsion ten years afterward. The government of the people is the only government which can possibly be permanent among such people as the French, even if temporary defeats still await it.

One of the most striking things in England is the improvement of the common people in intelligence and education. England has now one of the best systems of popular education in the world, thanks to William Edward Forster and his coadjutors. The large number and the cheapness of the newspapers and the ability with which the provincial press is conducted, shows a striking change. The great growth of London and of the larger towns in general excites one's wonder. England shows no signs of decrepitude. There are gigantic evils still to be eradicated, but they are less than they were in the former generation.—Exchange.

Nothing but the right can ever be expedient, since that can never be true expediency which would sacrifice a greater good to a less.

"I have been troubled with catarrh a year, causing great soreness of the bronchial tubes and terrible headache. I read that Hood's Sarsaparilla would cure catarrh, and after taking only one bottle I am much better. My catarrh is cured, my throat is entirely well, and my headache has all disappeared."

FRIDAY NOVEMBER 4, 1897.

Our schools opened Monday, with a large attendance in all the departments.

Waterloo has the gas fever, and wants to bore, or be bored. The Press thinks they are in the gas belt, and all they lack is wherewith to get down to it.

The addition to the school house is now completed, and the entire building was thoroughly cleaned before school commenced. The school ground has been enlarged, the out-houses have been cleaned and repaired, a new walk has been added to the front of the building and a general improvement of things has been made. Now let the trustee, director, teachers and citizens make it their business to see that the house, as well as the surroundings, are properly cared for, and kept in a good condition. Where a misdeed, or of any kind is committed, or any damage done to the building, the parents of the scholar or scholars who commit same, should in all cases be held responsible. In years that have passed, there has been a lack of care, and scholars have been allowed to do almost as they pleased, especially outside of school hours.

We feel confident that there is to be a change for the better this year, and that scholars will be made to deport themselves in a proper manner, both in and outside of the school room. The schools of St. Joe should, and can be made a credit to the place, and the patrons of the school can greatly aid in the work by visiting them occasionally, and by showing interest in their welfare and prosperity.

Just why the last night in October is called Hallow'een, we are not able to say; but one thing sure, the boys never forget when that time comes. Monday night was no exception to the rule, for the boys were out in full force. Early in the evening, the small boys had a big time, throwing cabbage and making a general racket. Later on some of the older "kids" took a hand in the sport, and the result was, some queer sights were to be seen on our streets the next morning. A barber sign had been planted in front of Dr. Bowman's office; August Kinsey's front porch was decorated with a lumber wagon; mowing machines were hauled across the sidewalk in several places; but the strangest thing to be seen, was that upon the roof of the saloon. A temporary scaffold had been erected, from which, hung suspended by the neck, what seemed to be the body of a man. Some persons were really frightened at the sight, for it looked almost natural enough to be real. It was only a dummy, however, and was taken down as soon as discovered by the owner of the saloon. We don't know what the boys intended to represent by such a scene, but it was a wonderful illustration of the fact, that the saloon often leads to the gallows. Boys will be boys, and must have their fun, but perhaps they sometimes go to far with it.

ARRIVED

A SLY SURPRISE.

A passer-by the residence of Mr. Anthony Swineford, last Monday, would have thought judging from the number of carriages, buggies and wagons standing around and about the barn, that something unusual was taking place. There was, too, it being the 60th anniversary of the birthday of Mr. Swineford, he was being treated to the luxury of a real, genuine surprise party. His friends and relatives to the number of 30 or 40, accepted the invitations given by his daughters, to surprise the old folk, which they did, by going in upon them while they were busily engaged in taking down and setting up stakes. Mr. S. was so completely surprised, that in his hurry to dress for the occasion, he could not find his fine shirt, nor the shoe polish, (which, of course, was essential for him to have.) Finally he found what he wanted, and then went out to catch a turkey for dinner, but after running it all over the corn field, and failing to get it, he gave it up, and concluded that the ladies might look after the dinner, while the men got out by themselves, and tried to see which could catch the biggest yarn. To have heard them you would have thought of the old adage, "each is stranger than fiction." At last dinner was announced—and such a dinner! It makes us hungry to think about it. It was just deliciously splendid. After dinner, all repaired to the parlor, where a fine chair was presented to the father by the children. C. H. Brown made the presentation speech, in a neat and appropriate manner. Mr. and Mrs. Swineford were the recipients of other nice presents, among which were two nice dresses, vases, moustache cup, and a box of choice cigars, given him by his brother, S. C. Swineford. Mr. and Mrs. Swineford returned thanks to their children and friends for their kindness, after which the guests departed, feeling that they had had a pleasant time, and hoping they might all live to enjoy many more such. This is the last week for paying the November installment of taxes.

Coop-Ralston of Auburn, was in town Monday. He says their gas well is a hummer and no mistake.

Sam White is painting Mell Bishop's residence in a very tasty manner. Sam can handle a brush with most of them.

Wm. Frislinger and wife, of La Paz, have been visiting in this place the past week, with their daughter, Mrs. Geo. Ridgway.

Mell Bishop has asked the railroad to put in a switch and lay a track over to his lumber sheds. There is nothing to grief for a St. Joeite to ask for.

W. Keller of Whitehouse, Ohio, a young man 18 years of age, died last week from excessive use of tobacco. Moral: don't use tobacco and then you won't die.

Mr. and Mrs. Evans, who have been staying at Garrett for some time, returned to their home in this place, Saturday. Their daughter, Mrs. Gehlman, came with them and remained over Sunday.

According to the Garrett Clipper St. Joe must be a pretty good town. It says last week: "There is more push and enterprise in St. Joe to the square inch than any other town in the county or 40 miles around."

It was a beautiful day in day; the air was cool, but the sun shone bright and the roads were in a delightful condition, and a great many improved the opportunity to go and see their friends. All the rigs in both of the livery barns were out, and there was a demand for more.

St. Joe's population for the year is estimated at 1,600,000 bushels. That looks like an immense quantity, but next year, being a campaign year, it will be none too many to supply the demand. What would a convention, a political speech or a rally amount to without a liberal supply of peanuts?

The old building formerly occupied by John Means, as an agricultural warehouse, was torn down this week. It was a dilapidated old concern, and our citizens are glad that it has been removed. Now let some one erect a good building on that lot. It is well located, and a business room would rent very readily, at a good price.

RENEW'S HER YOUTH.—Mrs. Phoebe Chesley, Peterson, Clay Co., Iowa, tells the following remarkable story, the truth of which is vouched for by the residents of the town: "I am 73 years old, have been troubled with kidney complaint and lameness for many years; could not dress myself without help. Now I am free from all pain and soreness, and am able to do all my own housework. I owe my thanks to Electric Bitters for having renewed my youth and removed completely all disease and pain." Try a bottle, 50c. and $1. at W. C. Patterson's Drug Store.

The Hicksville News man is trying to slander our hog buyers. Just listen to what he gets off last week: "Indiana hog buyers have struck a new scheme. Buyer No. 1 comes along to-day and tells the farmer the market is dull, but he will buy his hogs and take the chances. He offers him a price way below the market; the farmer hesitates and refuses to sell. Next day or two along comes buyer No. 2 who tells a very doleful story and makes inquiry how much he has been offered; finds it is far above what he can pay, but rather than be beat by the other fellow he will give him a quarter or a half cent more. He takes the hogs and the profits are divided."

Bucklen's Arnica Salve.

THE BEST SALVE in the world for Cuts, Bruises, Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Tetter, Chapped Hands, Child's Corns, and all Skin Eruptions, and positively cures Piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by W. C. Patterson.

WORTH KNOWING.

Mr. W. H. Morgan, merchant, Lake City, Fla., was taken with a severe Cold, attended with a distressing Cough and running into Consumption in its first stages. He tried many so-called popular cough remedies and steadily grew worse. Was reduced in flesh, had difficulty in breathing, and was unable to sleep. Finally tried Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption and found immediate relief, and after using about a half dozen bottles found himself well and has no return of the disease. No other remedy can show so grand a record of cures as Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. Guaranteed to do just what is claimed for it. Trial bottles free at W. C. Patterson's Drug Store.

The President has appointed Thursday, November 24th as Thanksgiving Day.

The B. & O. painters have been giving the switches and mile posts a coat of red and white paint this week.

Stretcher's Shawl and Book Strap is one of the most convenient articles ever invented; for sale only at Free Zeigler's Harness Shop.

Wouldn't it be a good idea to repair the sidewalk to the school house before some of the children fall down and break their necks?

Owing to the increased amount of stock that is being shipped from this station, it has been found necessary to enlarge the stock pens. The B. & O. carpenters completed the work this week, and St. Joe now has as good facilities for shipping stock as any station along the line.

We were down at J. W. Dills' the other day, and while out in the barn, we noticed laying in his buggy, one of the post caps, to the picket fence around the Lutheran church at this place. He had been up to church the night before, and it is likely that the wind blew the cap off the fence into his buggy, or it got there in some other mysterious way. Perhaps J. W. can explain.

Farm for Sale.

Offer at private sale, a good well improved farm, 1 mile north of St. Joe, and 11 miles north of La Paz, Ind. 7 miles east of La Paz, and contains 120 acres, 80 in good cultivation, good substantial buildings, good well, good orchard and everything in good farming order. Terms reasonable and payments easy. For particulars inquire of J. C. St. Joe, 11 miles north of St. Joe, Ind. J. C. St. Joe, Waterbury, Ind.

Farm for Sale or Trade.

Said farm consists of 180 acres, 120 well improved. Good building, nearly new leak barn, 19 x 78, and in good style, good timber, running water, etc. Will sell cheap, or take a small farm by exchange, and will give long time to pay the difference. Farm has 3 miles of St. Joe, and 7 1/2 miles east of Auburn. Reason for selling, have no help.

A. E. Swineford, St. Joe, Ind.

Last week one day while Jake Baker, who lives near Concord Station, was setting at the table eating is dinner, he looked out over the door, which happened to be standing open, and he saw something way off across the field about a half a mile away; he watched it closely, and noticed that it moved. Jake thought it was a white crane, and he jumped from the table, grabbed his gun, whistled to his dog and away he went. He hurried across the field, and cautiously kept up to where the object was, when he discovered that it was only a large piece of white paper. Jake kicked the dog, and wanted to kick himself but couldn't. Finally he slunk back home feeling as though he had been sold.

AARON BURR'S WOOING.

BY EDMUND CLARENCE STEDMAN.

From the commandant's quarters on Westchester Height
The blue hills of Ramapo lie in full sight;
On their slope gleams the gable that shields his heart's quest;
But the redcoats are weary—the Hudson's between.
Through the camp runs a jest: "There's no moon till be dark—"
'Tis odds little Aaron will go on a spark—
And the toast of the troopers is "pickets lie low,
And good luck to the Colonel and Widow Prevost!"
Eight miles to the river he gallops his steed, Lays him bound in the barge, bids his escort make speed.
Loose their swords, sit athwart, through the fleet reach you shore;
Not a word, not a plash of the thick muffled earl once across, once again in the seat, and away—Five leagues are soon over when love has the say:
And "Old Put" and his rider a bridle path know
To the Hermitage manor of Madam Prevost.
Lightly done! but he halts in the grove's deepest glade,
Ties his horse to a birch, trims his cues, slings his blade,
Wipes the dust and the dew from his smooth handsome face.
Wit & kerchief, she brodered and bordered in lace;
Then slips through the box rows and taps at the hall.
Sees the glint of a wax light, a hand white and small,
And the door is unbarred by herself all a glow—
Half in smiles, half in tears—Theodora Prevost.
Alack for the soldier that's buried and gone!
What's a volley above him, a wreath on his stone.
Compared with sweet life and a wife for one's view
Like this dame ripe and warm in her India shu?
She chides her bold lover, yet holds him more
dear,
For the daring that brings him a night rider here:
British gallants by day through her doors come and go,
But a Yankee's the winner of Theo. Prevost.
Where's the widow or maid with a mouth to be kissed,
When Burr comes a wooing, that long would resist?
Lights and wine on the banquet, the shutters all fast,
And "Old Put" stamps in vain till an hour has flown past—
But an hour, for eight leagues must be covered ere day;
Laughs Aaron, "Let Washington frown as he may,
When he hears of me next in a raid on the foe.
Hell forgive this night's tryst with the Widow Prevost!"
—Harper's.

"CORA DID NOT LIE."

BY A. URBAN EVERETTE.

Next to our old homestead lay Conrad House. No farm land was attached to it. It was simply a park and gardens built for a rich man's pleasure; and in its midst stood a fountain, bending over which a stone mermaid combed her carven hair with a carven comb, using the basin for a mirror.

There had been a time when the water arose and played in showers over the mermaid's head and shoulders, ran down her tresses and dripped over her hands. Those who had seen it said it was a pretty sight; but the machinery was out of order, or perhaps had been turned off, and it played no more.

The house, handsome and picturesque as it was, was all shut up, the windows barred, and the doors fast; moss covered its stone steps and balustrades, and the flowers were all gone, save such hardy bushes as took to a wild life kindly, and bloomed a little every year.

"I wonder they don't live here—the people who own this place," my Uncle Charles used to say when he spent his vacation with us. "It's a jolly old place; it's a shame it should stand like that." And then my mother would say: "Something very dreadful happened there years ago."

I had heard that before. It was a story I was not to hear, and I wondered why.

All my uncle's vacation I strolled about with him, and as he was fond of fishing, I took to fishing too. He gave me a rod and line, and taught me how to put on bait, and we used to go to a fine stream, a long distance off, and fish together.

I never caught anything, but he assured me that I would some day, and I felt very manly as I trotted beside him, with my rod over my shoulder.

The not always welcome care of my mother and aunts relaxed, and I heard it said that Will was sure to follow Charles everywhere, and to come home quite safe.

My uncle's vacation was a very happy time to me. When it was over, a change came. Feminine rule began once more. I was forbidden to go to the river side, lest I should be drowned; and my rambles were limited to our own property and the deserted park of Conrad House.

After his return to college my uncle wrote to me, and I was careful to reply, hunting up the big words in my little dictionary, but it was humiliating to confess that I was thought too small to go a-fishing in the river.

However, an idea one day came into my head which enabled me to obey my relatives and yet engage in the sport I knew my uncle thought so much of. I determined to fish in the basin of the Mermaid Fountain in Conrad Park, and accordingly I carried my rod and line there. The first day I had better luck than usual, for I caught a small green frog.

I looked at him a moment, reflected that his frog mother might be anxious about him, and put him back into the water; and I mentioned this in my letter to my Uncle Charles, who replied that there was no knowing what I might catch next; but I caught nothing more.

And one autumn morning, when all the red leaves were falling and floating over the basin like fancy boats, I realized the fact that it was growing too chilly to sit with pleasure beside the fountain waiting for a bite.

"Oh," I thought; "if I could catch something this last time! Something to write to uncle about."

And just then the little float bobbed up. I had, perhaps, at least hooked a fish. Delighted, I carefully drew up the line. Something glimmered upon the hook. It was not a fish. However, I hastened to detach it, and found it to be a very handsome cluster diamond ring. Ignorant of its value at that time, I could but admire it, it sparkled so brilliantly. There was no mud at the bottom of the spring, only shining pebbles. It was perfectly clean, therefore, after its bath, whether it had been long or short.

"I'll give this to mamma," I said, speaking aloud in my astonishment, and ashamed of having done so, when I heard the sound of my own words, because it was "like the baby." But the next moment some one answered me. "You have found my ring," a voice said in my ear. "You have found my ring. At last! At last! Thank Heaven!"

I turned. The afternoon was drawing to a close, and was gray with shadow and misty with the autumn air; and the figure of a woman near me seemed misty, too—a figure dressed in white, with pale hair hanging to its waist, and a face that I could barely see was fair and delicate.

"Of such is the kingdom of Heaven," she whispered. "Child, take the ring to Aubrey Conrad. Tell him that Cora did not lie. Tell him you found it in the fountain. Tell him—"

Her voice grew faint. She was gone. Who was she? Where did she go? I was vaguely terrified; and clutching the ring tightly in one hand, I began to run, but looking over my shoulder to see if she was following me, I stumbled and fell.

Some one picked me up. It was old Aubrey Conrad himself. Sometimes I had seen him walking sadly through the park by himself, though he lived a long distance off at a hotel, and was often away on the continent, traveling for his health, people said.

"What's the matter, little one?" he said. "Have you hurt yourself?" "No," I said; "the lady frightened me. She was—she seemed to go out like a candle. She said it was her ring, but she did not take it. She said I was to give it to you, and say, 'Cora did not lie.' Is she Cora? Does she always look like that? What did she mean?"

Mr. Conrad sat down upon the stone seat beside the fountain, and held me by the arms and stared into my face.

"Tell me what you mean, boy!" he said.

"I was fishing in the basin of the fountain there," said I, "and I thought I had caught a trout, but it was no fish at all, but a beautiful, shining ring. See!"

I held it out to him as well as I could with his grasp upon my arms, and he let me go and took it from me.

He peered at it curiously, and said, "Your eyes are young. Read what is engraved on the inside, child."

And with much pains, for it was growing twilight, I spelt out these words:

"To Cora; from Aubrey, 18—"

Then he took it from me again and said "Go on."

"I thought it was a very pretty ring," I said, "and I would give it to mamma. And then there was a lady there by the fountain, fair, with long light curls, but like smoke or mist. I could not help being frightened, and she said, 'It is my ring. It is found at last, thank Heaven!' and words that Jesus said in the Bible, and then 'Give it to Aubrey Conrad and tell him you found it in the fountain, and Cora did not lie. Was she Cora?'"

He answered yes, and stooped down and kissed me, and went his way, taking the ring with him, and I ran home to my mother and told her the story. She was frightened. She held me close.

"What was she, mother?" I asked. "I do not know," she answered. "It is in our family to see strange things. Perhaps you have seen one of them. Do not talk about it."

An hour or two later my father drove home in his light trap from the nearest town.

"Something happened at the hotel this evening," he said. "Aubrey Conrad is dead. He came back very pale after a walk to Conrad Park, they think; and a fall was heard in his room soon after. They found him on the floor beside his desk, already dead; but he had written on a paper in words nearly like these: 'I have doubted the purity of the sweetest woman that ever lived. Let them bury me in Conrad Park, with the ring I wear upon my finger, and write upon my stone these words: 'To the memory of Cora, most faithful and beloved wife of Aubrey Conrad, whose body lies here, but whose soul goes to ask pardon of her he wronged in thought for twenty bitter years.''"

And my mother, with a cry, clung to father's arm and told him my strange story.

"What does it all mean?" I asked. Who is Cora? What did Mr. Conrad do to her? What was it I saw in the park? Was it a ghost?

But my mother put her hand over my mouth, and my father told me there were strange things and wicked stories in this world which children could not understand, but that Cora Conrad was said to have died of a broken heart because her husband was cruel to her and thought she had given away a ring she swore she had lost.

Afterwards I understood what the story might be; but I cannot now explain to myself what it was that happened to me in Conrad Park any more clearly than I understood it in childhood.

Moral Suasion.

It is a common habit with colored cotton pickers, to strike for higher wages. The cotton has to be picked at a certain time. The colored cotton picker takes advantage of this fact, and gouges his employer. The hands of Col. Williams' plantation near Austin refused to pick another boll of cotton unless 20 cents more per cent was given. The man in charge of the plantation told the hands that he would go to Austin and see Col. Williams, the owner of the plantation, about it. He did so. The negroes aroused him.

"What's he gwinter do about hit?" asked the colored spokesman.

"I told Col. Williams, what you wanted, and he didn't like it."

"What's he gwinter do?"

"From what he told me I think he is liable to use moral suasion on you."

This somewhat disconcerted the strikers. Their faces showed signs of uneasiness.

"The question is," resumed the overseer, "will you compel him to persuade you?"

There was a hurried consultation, after which the colored spokesman approached the overseer and said humbly: "Hits all right, boss; radder den hab anybody persuade us we will goter work at de ole terms."

Five minutes later those darkeys were picking cotton as if their lives depended on it.—Texas Siftings.

SAYS old Allen Thompson: "When I am in the woods I never use a compass; in fact, I don't need any. There are three sure ways that I have for finding the points of the compass. You will notice that three-fourths of the moss on trees grows on the north side; the heaviest bows on spruce trees are always on the south side; and, thirdly, the topmost twig of every uninjured hemlock tips to the east. You just remember those things and you'll never get lost."

"GEORGE, wasn't that queer about that woman having a man arrested for putting his arm around her?" she remarked, during a lapse in the conversation. "I don't know," replied George. "YES," said a portly man, with a patronizing wave of his hand, as he stood on the railroad station platform, "I am now interested in Dakota myself—just bought a farm for my son, you know. I consider that there are phenomenal chances for a young man in this Territory. By the way, what is the most remarkable instance you know of a young man doing well financially in Dakota?" "Bill Hostetter did pretty well," said the small man on a coil of barbed wire. "Ah, tell me about him," said the capitalist, as he rubbed his hands. "I'll warrant my son will do as well—how much did Mr. Hostetter make?" "Sixty thousand dollars." "Ah—um—snug little sum. Farming, I suppose?" "Oh, no, Bill didn't farm it. He got elected Treasurer of the county and took the funds and went to Canada."—Dakota Bell.

Hideous in Every Guise.
Whether it be the best known form, chills and fever, or else bilious remittent, double ague or ague cake, is that abominable disorder involving the liver, the bowels and the kidneys, known as malaria. Every complaint classified under this generic, though erroneous appellation, is destructive of the nervous system, but is, unhappily, not to be subdued, or even checked, by the use of ordinary nervines, febrifuges or tonics. There is, however, prompt relief and ultimate cure to be found in Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, foremost among the proprietary remedies of America, and widely known in other lands. Not only diseases of the liver, but rheumatic complaints, superinduced by exposure in bad weather, inherited or the actual debility of the kidneys or bladder, dyspepsia and an irregular condition of bowels, are curable—may, certainly be cured by this nervously sustained and professionally sanctioned corrective.

It has recently been computed by an officer of the Ordnance Department in Washington that the weight carried by a soldier equipped with rod bayonets, rifle and cartridge belts, three days' cooked rations and 100 rounds of ball cartridges and complete "kit" of clothing is fifty-three pounds 2.58 ounces; with Springfield rifle, bayonet, scabbard, cartridge boxes and leather belt clothing and ammunition, etc., is fifty-four pounds 1.95 ounces; with Springfield rifle, bayonet, scabbard, cartridge, belt, clothing, ammunition, etc., is fifty-three pounds 15.96 ounces.

DEFENSE OF YOUNG MEN.

Divine Service in the Brooklyn Tabernacle.

Dr. Talmage's Advice to Those About Starting in Life—No Way to Genuine Success Except Through Toil of Either Head or Hand.

BROOKLYN, Oct. 30.—Six thousand people, sitting and standing in the Brooklyn Tabernacle, and all the adjoining rooms packed and people turned away! Such was the scene to-day. The congregation sang:

Awake, my soul, stretch every nerve,
And press with vigor on.

The Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D., preached on the subject, "Defense of Young Men," and took his text from II. Kings vi. 17: "And the Lord opened the eyes of the young man." He said:

One morning in Dothan a young theological student was scared by finding himself and Elisha, the prophet, upon whom he waited, surrounded by a whole army of enemies. But venerable Elisha was not scared at all, because he saw the mountains full of defense for him, in chariots made out of fire, wheels of fire, dashboard of fire, and cushions of fire, drawn by horses with nostrils of fire, and manes of fire, and haunches of fire, and hoofs of fire—a supernatural appearance that could not be seen with the natural eye. So the old minister prayed that the young minister might see them also, and the prayer was answered, and the Lord opened the eyes of the young man and he also saw the fiery procession, looking somewhat, I suppose, like the Adirondacks or the Alleghenies in this autumnal resplendence.

Many young men, standing among the tremendous realities, have their eyes half shut or entirely closed. May God grant that my sermon may open wide your eyes to your safety, your opportunity, and your destiny.

A mighty defense for a young man is a good home. Some of my hearers look back with tender satisfaction to their early home. It may have been rude and rustic, hidden among the hills, the architect or upholsterer never planned or adorned it. But all the fresco on princely walls never looked so enticing to you as those rough hewn rafters. You can think of no park or arbor of trees planted on fashionable country seat so attractive as the plain brook that ran in front of the old farmhouse and sang under the weeping willows. No barred gateway, adorned with statues or bronze, and swung open by obsequious porter in full dress, has half the glory of the swing gate. Many of you have a second dwelling place, your adopted home, that also is sacred forever. There you built the first family altar. There your children were born. All those trees you planted. That room is solemn, because once in it, over the hot pillow, flapped the wing of death. Under that roof you expect when your work is done to lie down and die. You try with many words to tell the excellency of the place, but you fail. There is only one word in the language that can describe your meaning. It is home.

Now, I declare it that young man is comparatively safe who goes out into the world with a charm like this upon him. The memory of parental solicitude, watching, planning, and praying, will be to him a shield and a shelter. I never knew a man faithful both to his early and adopted home, who at the same time was given over to any gross form of dissipation or wickedness. He who seeks his enjoyment chiefly from outside association, rather than from the more quiet and unpresuming pleasures of which I have spoken, may be suspected to be on the broad road to ruin. Absalom despised his father's house, and you know his history of sin and his death of shame. If you seem unnecessarily isolated from your kindred and former associates, is there not some room you can call your own? Into it gather books and pictures and a harp. Have a portrait over the mantel. Make ungodly mirth stand back from the threshold. Consecrate some spot with the knee of prayer. By the memory of other days, a father's counsel and a mother's love, and a sister's confidence, call it home.

Another defense for a young man is industrious habit. Many young men, in starting upon life in this age, expect to make their way through the world by the use of their wits rather than the toil of their hands. A child now goes to the city and fails twice before he is as old as his father was when he first saw the spires of the great town. Sitting in some office, rented at $1,000 a year, he is waiting for the bank to declare its dividend, or goes into the market expecting before night to be made rich by the rushing up of the stocks. But luck seemed so dull he resolved on some other tack. Perhaps he borrowed from his employer's money drawer, and forgets to put it back, or for merely the purpose of improving his penmanship makes a copy plate of a merchant's signature. Never mind, all is right in trade. In some dark night there may come in his dream a vision of Blackwell's Island, or of Sing Sing, but it soon vanishes. In a short time he will be ready to retire from the busy world, and amid his flocks and herds culture the domestic virtues. Then those young men who once were his schoolmates, and knew no better than to engage in honest work, will come with their ox teams to draw him logs and with their hard hands help heave up the castle. This is no fancy picture. It is every-day life. I should not wonder if there were some rotten beams in that beautiful palace. I should not wonder if dire sicknesses should smite through the young man, or if God should pour into his cup of life a draught that would thrill him with unbearable agony. I should not wonder if his children should become to him a living curse, making his home a pest and a disgrace. I should not wonder if he goes to a miserable grave, and beyond it into the gnashing of teeth. The way of the ungodly shall perish.

My young friends, there is no way to genuine success except through toil either of the head or hand. At the battle of Crecy in 1346 the Prince of Wales, finding himself heavily pressed by the enemy, sent word to his father for help. The father, watching the battle from a windmill and seeing that his son was not wounded and could gain the day if he would, sent word: "Noli!" will not come. Let the boy win his spurs, for, if God will, I desire that this day be his with all its honors." Young man, fight your own battle all through and you shall have the victory. Oh, it is a battle worth fighting. Two monarchs of old fought a duel, Charles V. and Francis, and the stakes were kingdoms—Milan and Burgundy. You fight with sin and the stake is heaven or hell.

Do not get the fatal idea that you are a genius, and that therefore there is no need of close application. It is here where multitudes fail. The great curse of this age is the geniuses, men with enormous self-conceit and egotism, and nothing else. I had rather be an ox than an eagle; plain, and plodding, and useful, rather than high flying and good for nothing but to pick out the eyes of carcasses. Extraordinary capacity without use is extraordinary failure. There is no hope for that person who begins life resolved to live by his wits, for the probability is he has not any. It was not safe for Adam, even in his unfallen state, to have nothing to do, and, therefore, God commanded him to be a farmer and horticulturist. He was to dress the garden and keep it, and had he and his wife obeyed the divine injunction and been at work, they would not have been sauntering under the trees and hungering after that fruit which destroyed them and their posterity; proof positive for all ages to come that those who do not attend to their business are sure to get into mischief. I do not know that the prodigal in Scripture would ever have been reclaimed had he not given up his idle habits and gone to feeding swine for a living. "Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways and be wise, which, having no overseer or guide, provideth her food in the summer and gathereth her meat in the harvest." The devil does not so often attack the man who is busy with the pen, and the book, and the trowel, and the saw, and the hammer. He is afraid of those weapons. But woe to that man whom this roaring lion meets with his hands in his pockets. Do not demand that your toil always be elegant, and cleanly, and refined. There is a certain amount of drudgery through which we must all pass, whatever be our occupation. You know how men are sentenced—a certain number to years of prison, and after they have suffered and worked out the time, then they are allowed to go free. And so it is with all of us. God passed on us the sentence: "By the sweat of thy brow shalt thou eat bread." We must endure our time of drudgery, and then, after a while, we will be allowed to go into comparative liberty. We must be willing to endure the sentence. We all know what drudgery is connected with the beginning of any trade or profession, but this does not continue all our lives, if it be the student's or the merchant's or the mechanic's life. I know you have at the beginning many a hard time; but after a while these things will become easy. You will be your own master. God's sentence will be satisfied. You will be discharged from prison. Bless God that you have a brain to think, and hands to work, and feet to walk with, for in your constant activity, O young man, is one of your strongest defenses. Put your trust in God and do your level best. That child had it right when the horses ran away with the load of wood, and he sat upon it. When asked if he was frightened he said: "No, I prayed to God and hung on like a beaver."

Again, profound respect for the Sabbath will be to the young man a powerful preservative against evil. God has thrust into the toil and fatigue of life a recreative day, when the soul is especially to be fed. It is no new-fangled notion of a wild-brained reformer, but an institution established at the beginning. God has made natural and moral laws so harmonious that the body as well as the soul demands this institution. Our bodies are seven day clocks, they must be wound up so often as that, or they will run down. Failure must come sooner or later to the man who breaks the Sabbath. Inspiration has called it the Lord's day, and he who devotes it to the world is guilty of robbery. God will not let the sin go unpunished, neither in this world or the world to come. This is the statement of a man who had broken this divine enactment:

"I was engaged in manufacturing on the Lehigh River. On the Sabbath I used to rest, but never regarded God in it. One beautiful Sabbath, when the noise was all hushed and the day was all that loveliness could make it; I sat down on my piazza and went to work inventing a new shuttle. I neither stopped to eat nor drink till the sun went down. By that time I had the invention completed. The next morning I exhibited it, boasted of my day's work and was applauded. The shuttle was tried and worked well, but that Sabbath day's work cost me $30,000. We branched out and enlarged, and the curse of heaven was upon me from that day onward."

While the divine frown must rest upon him who tramples upon this statute, God's special favor will be upon that young man who scrupulously observes it. This day, properly observed, will throw a hallowed influence over all the week. The song and sermon and sanctuary will hold back from presumptuous scenes. That young man who begins the duties of life with either secret or open disrespect of the holy day, I venture to prophesy, will meet with no prominent successes. God's curse will fall upon his ship, his store, his office, his studio, his body, and his soul. The way of the wicked He turneth upside down. In one of the old fables it was said that a wonderful child was born in Bagdad and a magician could hear his footsteps 6,000 miles away. But I can hear in the footsteps of that young man, on his way to the house of worship this morning, step not only of a lifetime of usefulness, but the coming step of eternal joys of heavens yet millions of miles away.

There are magnificent possibilities before each of you young men of the stout heart, and the buoyant step, and the bounding spirit. I would marshal you for grand achievement. God now provides for you the fleet and the armor and the fortifications. Who is on the Lord's side? The captain of the zouaves in ancient times, to encourage them against the immense odds on the side of their enemies, said: "Come, my men, look these fellows in the face. They are 6,000, you are 300. Surely the match is even." That speech gave them the victory. Be not, my hearer, dismayed at any time by what seems an immense odds against you. Is fortune, is want of education, are men, are devils against you? Though the multitudes of earth and hell confront you, stand up to the charge. With 1,000,000 against you the match is just even. Nay, you have a decided advantage. If God be for us, who can be against us? Thus protected, you need not spend much time in answering your assailants.

Many years ago word came to me that two impostors, as temperance lecturers, had been speaking in Ohio in various places and giving their experience, and they told their audience that they had long been intimate with me and had become drunkards by dining at my table, where I always had liquors of all sorts. Indignant to the last degree I went down to Patrick Campbell, chief of Brooklyn police, saying I was going to start that night for Ohio to have these villains arrested, and I wanted him to tell me how to make the arrest. He smiled and said: "Do not waste your time by chasing these men. Go home and do your work, and they can do you no harm." I took his counsel and all was well. Long ago I made up my mind that if one will put his trust in God and be faithful to duty he need not fear any evil. Have God on your side, young man, and all the combined forces of earth and hell can do you no damage.

And this leads me to say that the mightiest of all defense for a young man is the possession of thorough religious principle. Nothing can take the place of it. He may have manners that would put to shame the gracefulness and courtesy of a Lord Chesterfield. Foreign languages may drop from his tongue. He may be able to discuss literatures and laws and foreign customs. He may wield a pen of unequalled polish and power. His quickness and tact may qualify him for the highest salary of the counting house. He may be as sharp as Herod and as strong as Sampson, with as fine locks as those which hung Absalom, still he is not safe from contamination. The more elegant his manner, and the more fascinating his dress, the more peril Satan does not care much for the allegiance of a coward and illiterate being. He can bring him into efficient service. But he loves to storm that castle of character which has in it the most spoils and treasures. It was not some crazy craft creeping along the coast with a valueless cargo that the pirates attacked, but the ship, full winged and flagged, playing between great ports, carrying its million of specie. The more your natural and acquired accomplishments, the more need of the religion of Jesus. That does not cut in upon or hack up any smoothness of disposition or behavior. It gives symmetry. It arrests that in the soul which ought to be arrested, and propels that which ought to be propelled. It fills up the gulleys. It elevates and transforms. To beauty it gives more beauty, to tact more tact, to enthusiasm of nature more enthusiasm. When the Holy Spirit impresses the image of God on the heart He does not spoil the canvas. If in all the multitudes of young men upon whom religion has acted you could find one nature that had been the least damaged, I would yield this proposition. You may now have enough strength of character to repel the various temptations to gross wickedness which assail you, but I do not know in what strait you may be thrust at some future time. Nothing short of the grace of the cross may then be able to deliver you from the lions. You are not meeker than Moses, nor holier than David, nor more patient than Job, and you ought not to consider yourself invulnerable. You may have some weak point of character that you have never discovered, and in some hour when you are assaulted the Philistines will be upon thee, Samson. Trust not in your good habits, or your early training, or your pride of character; nothing short of the arm of Almighty God will be sufficient to uphold you. You look forward to the world sometimes with a chilling despondency. Cheer up! I will tell you how you all may make a fortune. "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all other things will be added unto you." I know you do not want to be mean in this matter. Give God the freshness of your life. You will not have the heart to drink down the brimming cup of life and then pour the dregs on God's altar. To a Saviour so infinitely generous you have not the heart to act like that. That is not brave, that is not honorable, that is not manly. Your greatest want in all the world is a new heart. In God's name I tell you that. And the blessed Spirit presses through the solemnities and privileges of this holy hour. Put the cup of life eternal to your thirsty lips. Thrust it not back. Mercy offers it, bleeding mercy, long-suffering mercy. Reject all other friendships; be ungrateful for all other kindnesses, prove recreant to all other bargains, but despise God's love for your immortal soul—don't you do that.

I would like to see some of you this hour press out of the ranks of the world and lay your conquered spirit at the feet of Jesus. This hour is no wandering vagabond staggering over the earth; it is a winged messenger of the skies whispering mercy to thy soul. Life is smooth now, but after a while it may be rough, wild, and precipitate. There comes a crisis in the history of every man. We seldom understand that turning point until it is far past. The road of life is forked and I read on two signboards: "This is the way to happiness." "This is the way to ruin." How apt we are to pass the forks of the road without thinking whether it comes out at the door of bliss or the gates of darkness.

Many years ago I stood on the anniversary platform with a minister of Christ who made this remarkable statement:

"Thirty years ago two young men started out in the evening to attend the Park Theater, New York, where a play was to be acted in which the cause of religion was to be placed in a ridiculous and hypocritical light. They came to the steps. The consciences of both smote them. One started to go home, but returned again to the door, and yet had not courage to enter, and finally departed. But the other young man entered the pit of the theater. It was the turning point in the history of those two young men. The man who entered was caught in the whirl of temptation. He sank deeper and deeper in infamy. He was lost. The other young man was saved, and he now stands before you to bless God that for twenty years he has been permitted to preach the Gospel.

"Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth, and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth; but know thou that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment."

Hawthorne and the "Solitary Horseman."

Miss Susan Pratt, the present tenant of Hawthorne's house at Lenox, lately said to a visitor about the author of "Seven Gables": "He was a very quiet man. Mrs. Hawthorne was fonder of company, but he never talked when other people were talking. Rose, his daughter—she's Mrs. Lathrop now—told me the only time he had anything to say was when he played whist, and then he talked all the time. He didn't like to see people, and would allers git out of the way if he could. G. P. R. James come ag'in and ag'in to see him, but Mr. Hawthorne could always see him comin' out of the little winder, and would slip down the cellar stairs an' go out into the woods till he'd gone. One day, however, Mr. James wouldn't be put off, and follered him and got acquainted, and Mr. Hawthorne was glad of it, for allers after that they were the dearest of friends. Y's; Rose was born in this house. He did a good deal of writin'; he was writin' all the time. He didn't walk much. He warn't half as much of a walker as Mr. Thoreau; he's another friend of Mr. Tappan's. Mr. Tappan thought everything of Mr. Hawthorne, an' got him to come here. I don't believe Mr. Hawthorne ever darkened a church door while he was here. Charles Sedgwick got him to go down and vote once, but that was the only time. I forget who he voted for, for it's 'most forty years ago."

INDIANA STATE NEWS.

—John Snyder, the man who walks because he can't stop, after an incessant tramp of almost three years, is at last nearing the end. His iron constitution is broken down under the fearful strain, and John Owen Snyder, the tireless pedestrian, will soon be numbered with those that have gone. He has a family consisting of a wife and four or five children, who will be comfortably provided for in case of his death. Paradoxical as it may seem, his strange affliction, which no physician has yet been able to understand, has proved to be both a curse and a blessing to his family. Prior to it there was a constant struggle to keep the wolf from the door, but since, along with the train of his sorrows and woes, it has brought him fame and fortune, and he is now said to be well off in this world's goods.

—A passenger arriving by the Louisville, Evansville and St. Louis train reports that at the Louisville accommodation, en route to Evansville, was crossing a point two miles east of Lincoln station, the engineer felt the engine strike something, but did not stop until he arrived at Lincoln, when the pilot of the locomotive was found to be bespattered with blood. Part of the trainmen were sent back, and they returned with the body of a man, which was recognized as that of Mr. Summers, an assessor of Carter Township, Spencer County.

—Chris Click, who resides near Ladoga, left his house and went out to the woods to do some work. He had no family, and the people living with him were away from home. Upon their return he was missed, and a search was instituted. Mr. Click was found in a pasture, dead, and it is supposed he had been dead two days. He could not have been murdered, from the fact that he had about $25 in his pockets and a gold watch. His dog was found guarding the body from the hogs that were in the pasture.

—A young girl of 15, residing five miles north of Lagro, Wabash County, was the victim of an accident which will result in her death. She was sitting near the stove, when her dress caught fire, and, after making an ineffectual effort to extinguish the blaze, she ran out into the open air, where her clothing slowly burned from her, literally cooking her flesh to a crisp. Her screams attracted the attention of her relatives, but they did not reach her in season to be of service. She cannot survive.

—One of the most shocking tragedies that ever happened in Delaware County occurred seven miles east of Muncie. Perry Shockley shot his father-in-law, James Cary, in the left side with a thirty-eight-caliber revolver. After shooting Cary, the murderer walked about fifteen feet away and placed the same pistol to his head and pulled the trigger, sending a bullet through his brain. There is no cause assigned for his terrible murder and suicide.

—John M. Winchester, a farmer residing two and a half miles southwest of Franklin, was engaged in removing bricks from an old well, twenty-three feet deep, and when a depth of fifteen feet had been reached, the dirt above caved in, covering him to the depth of six feet. Three hours afterward he was taken from the well, dead. He was about sixty years of age, and one of the well-to-do and most respected citizens.

—The grand jury summoned at Delphi to investigate the lynching of Amer Green and the conduct of the Judge and Sheriff in not providing extra guards for the prisoner, reported to the court that they were unable to ascertain the names of any men who participated in the lynching. They also exonerated the Judge and Sheriff. The people are satisfied with the report.

—An accident occurred at Nappanee which will result in the death of two men, and possibly of three others. They were engaged in repairing the roof of a church, and were on a scaffolding twenty-five feet high, when it suddenly fell to the ground, injuring William Wygart and T. Maples fatally, and Owen Yarian, Perry Mjner, and John Ernest seriously.

—A distressing accident is reported from Monitor, eight miles east of Lafayette. A wild colt trampled Floyd, the 3-year-old son of Wallace Robinson, to death while at play in the barn-yard. Fatal injuries were inflicted by the animal before the child's peril was discovered. The victim only lived an hour.

—The preliminary arrangements have been completed for the location, at Anderson, of the bolt and nut-works of Fowler & Sons, of Buffalo, N. Y. This establishment is one of the largest manufacturers of bolts and nuts in the United States. They propose to commence building at once.

—Samuel H. Bornewitz, aged 17 years, was found dead in a field near his father's home, near Huntingburg. He had been drinking heavily the day previous, and had been left by his companions lying on the ground in the expectation he would become sober and return to his home.

—Fred Calkins, giving Ohio as his home, who has been selling red-line wheat and Bohemian oats in Huntington County, has been arrested on the charge of obtaining notes for the cereals without delivering the goods. He was placed under bonds for his appearance.

—The Northwest Indiana Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church has paid over to the trustees, through its agents, the full amount of its subscription to the DePauw University Endowment—$20,000.

—Charles Groves, living near Epsom, Daviess County, was instantly killed by a limb from a tree falling on him.

—A fine vein of coal was struck near Jeffersonville by workmen boring for gas.

—A farmer near Pine Village has lost 100 fine shoats and several sows from hog cholera lately. The disease is making great inroads on surrounding herds.

A 9-year-old son of James Lipscombe, of Martinsville, was run over and killed by a train on the Fairland, Franklin and Martinsville Railway.

—Elmer Sauley was sentenced at Vincennes to the penitentiary for life for the murder of his illegitimate child.

—A young man named Vertrees was suffocated in the mine near Oakland City, by the roof caving in on him.

—Rev. Andrew Luce was stricken dead with apoplexy in his pulpit, in the Presbyterian Church, at Lagro.

—The saloon of Peter Kemp and livery stable of John Orr, Rushville, were destroyed by dynamite.

—The city hall to be erected next spring at Fort Wayne will cost $60,000. The site has been selected.

—Wm. McGee, of Wabash, a brakeman, was instantly killed while uncoupling cars at Goshen.

—John C. Wertz, of Nashville, is dead at the age of 98.

EVENTS OF A WEEK.

THE OLD WORLD.

The Hawaiian Government will cede Beards River Harbor, near Honolulu, to the United States, as a coaling station, with a proviso that it shall be relinquished if the American Government abrogates the present reciprocity treaty. The harbor is regarded as the finest in the Hawaiian group.

FINANCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL.

The failure is announced of Fulton & Peters, coal and grain dealers of Wilmington, Ohio. Assets, $53,000; liabilities, $59,000.

The union job printers of St. Louis inaugurated a strike Wednesday for an advance of $1 a week.

On attachments aggregating $71,000 the Sheriff took possession of the wholesale millinery house of Isaac B. Rosenthal & Co., at St. Louis.

The stock of the Western Union Telegraph Company has been increased by $5,000,000, which makes the total $86,300,000.

Extensive gold-fields have been discovered in Namaqua Land, in the northwest part of Cape Colony, South Africa.

FIRE AND ACCIDENTS.

Alfred Stone is the solitary survivor of the fifty souls on board of the propeller Vernon, which went down in Lake Michigan during the recent terrible gale. Stone was picked up in a perishing condition eight miles off Sheboygan by the schooner Pomerooy. Stone, who is a lusty Swede, 23 years old, tells a thrilling story of his battle with the elements, a portion of which we condense:

He says the ill-fated Vernon's cargo consisted of apples, fish, potatoes, pig-iron, and staves, and the load was unusually heavy, the boat being loaded about one foot deeper than usual, and the deck being only about six inches above water. Her excessive load between decks prevented the closing of the gangways. The vessel rolled a good deal and the water was washing through the gangways. Stone says that before he went off watch he ventured to suggest to the Captain that some lading be thrown off so that the gangways could be closed, but that the latter told him to go to hell, and that he was running that boat. He also says he asked the mate why they did not turn around and put back. Between 3 and 4 o'clock a. m. he was awakened by a crushing sound and the noise of trying to get boats from the deck. He felt the steamer was foundering, and, putting on a life-preserver, sprang through a window of the room into the water. He saw a life-raft about a quarter of a mile off and swam to it. There were seven on the raft besides himself, all members of the crew, viz., the cook, two firemen, one coal-passer, the second engineer and a deck-hand. Only one boat out of four was launched. Their experience on the raft began between 3 and 4 o'clock a. m. They could see Manitowish light. The raft worked toward shore, which was about twelve miles distant. The weather was severe. The cook died in about two hours, one fireman half an hour later, about three hours later a coal-passer, soon after another fireman, then the second engineer. One fireman, whom he only knew as Bill, survived until Sunday morning. All the others washed off the raft after dying except the last named, whose body was in a depression in the center of the raft, and his body remained and was picked up when Stone was rescued. A good many vessels passed them on Sunday, some not more than twenty rods away. One steamer passed on Sunday forenoon, and Stone says they could see a man on the mast looking at them. He "hollered" loudly and hoisted his vest on Jan. 1, but no attention was paid. At 4:30 a. m. Monday, when about five or six miles off Sheboygan light, the schooner Pomerooy hove to and lowered a boat with the captain, the second mate, and a sailor. They found Stone crawling about on his knees trying to keep life in his body. He was so benumbed that he moved with difficulty and could not stand on his feet. They lifted him with some difficulty on the deck of the schooner, and then lifted the body of his dead comrade. Stone says there were twenty-five of the crew and twenty-five passengers, just fifty souls on board all told.

The jury sitting on the body of "Bill," the fireman of the ill-starred propeller Vernon, found dead on a raft in Lake Michigan, recommended that the inspector who had last inspected the life-preservers of the wrecked steamer be arrested and held for trial. The preservers were stuffed with sea rushes, and not fit for the work required of them. Many of the bodies of the victims of the wreck are coming ashore near the scene of the disaster. Nineteen were brought into Two Rivers, Wis., on Thursday. One of them was identified as that of the captain, and another as that of E. R. Boland, a traveling salesman for a Milwaukee firm.

THE CRIMINAL RECORD.

Mrs. Anna Sachs, who was fined $50 at St. Louis recently for tossing a pancake into Mrs. Cleveland's lap, was, on appeal, released on the payment of $15. She tried to throw the cake into a yard, she said, but it assumed a base-ball curve, went off at a tangent, and got her into trouble.

Great excitement is reported at Tahlequah, Indian Territory, owing to the election dispute, and many of the inhabitants are quitting the city.

Louisville (Ky.) dispatches give details of a terrible tragedy in the western part of that city. Charles Brownfield murdered his wife, child and brother-in-law, and wound up the bloody drama by cutting his own throat. Their heads were almost severed from their bodies. Beneath Brownfield's feet lay the razor with which the awful deed had been committed. The bed-clothing was drenched with blood, and the faces of the victims were besmeared so that they were almost beyond recognition. On the bureau in the parlor the following letter, dated 6:31 a. m., and written by the murderer in an unusually legible hand, was found:

"To all whom it may concern: I, Charles B. Brownfield, murdered my dear wife and baby also W. F. Bruner, my brother-in-law. I killed my wife and baby because I was tired of life and did not want them left penniless in the world and no one to care for them. My cause for being tired of life is gambling. Now, let my brothers and friends take warning. I killed W. F. Bruner because I didn't think he was fit to live, and now I will make an attempt on my life. So good-by, my father, brother, and sister, and friends and relations. All take warning. Good-by. CHARLES B. BROWNFIELD."

Truck Agce, a white man, who murdered his brother-in-law in a quarrel over a few ears of corn, was hanged Friday at Lexington, Ky., being the first execution of a white citizen in Central Kentucky since the war. Henry Robinson, colored, was hanged at Union Springs, Ala. In May last he murdered an aged colored man who had a young wife of whom Robinson was too fond.

THE ANARCHISTS.

Business at the various Chicago gun stores has been brisk during the last few days, says a special from that city. The purchasers of revolvers are generally well-dressed business men.

Thomas Owens a carpenter, fell from a building at Homestead, near Pittsburgh, Pa., and had his neck broken. After his death it was developed that he came from Chicago, and was an anarchist of the most rabid character. He told a fellow-workman that he had thrown a bomb at the Haymarket riot, and in his trunk were found letters that in a measure corroborated his stories. A Chicago dispatch says in reference to Owens' alleged confession:

The police unhesitatingly pronounce the story a "fake"—in other words, the unreliable confession of an imaginative brain. John H. Eberstadt, Inspector of Police, when shown the dispatch called it nonsense. "The way sensational headlines are being sent to this city from Pittsburgh," he said, "would lead an unsophisticated person to think that all of Chicago's anarchists had emigrated to the smoky city. This story, like all the others concerning the anarchists which come from Pittsburgh, does not require much wit to disprove." Chief of Police Eberstadt said that the story on its face was but a sensational creation and did not deserve a second thought. Michael Schwab, the condemned anarchist, came as near laughing at the story as it is possible for a man to come with the rope dangling before his eyes. "The story is utterly improbable," said he. "The statement that Owens, before he went to Pittsburgh, was a partner of Schaubert is untrue. The young man who was the alleged bomb-thrower's friend and intimate acquaintance is a young mechanic who never attended a meeting or had anything in common with Schaubert's views. He is still in Chicago. I know of no such person as Owens." "It's absurd," was Parsons' sententious comment on the Owens "confession," and then he promptly walked away to avoid an interview.

August Spies, Michael Schwab, and Samuel Fielden, says a Chicago special, have followed up the formal petition to the Governor which they signed a few days ago with a second communication of a still more important character. The document reads as follows:

To Governor Oglesby, Springfield, Ill.: Sir—In order that the truth may be known by you and the public you represent, we desire to state that we never advocated the use of force, excepting in the case of self-defense. To accuse us of having attempted to overthrow law and government on May 4, 1886, or at any other time, is as false as it is absurd. Whatever we said or did, or said or did publicly, we have never supported, or plotted to commit, an unlawful act, and while we attacked the present social arrangements, in writing and speech, and exposed their iniquities, we have never consciously broken any laws. So far from having planned the killing of anybody at the Haymarket, or anywhere else, the very object of that meeting was to protest against the commission of murder. We believe it to be our duty as friends of labor and liberty to oppose other use of force than that which is necessary in the defense of sacred rights against unlawful attacks. And our efforts have been in the direction of elevating mankind, and to remove, as much as possible, the causes of crime in society. Our labor was unselfish. No motive of personal gain or ambition prompted us. Thousands and thousands will bear testimony to this. We may have erred at times in our judgment. Yes; we may have loved mankind not wisely but too well. If, in the excitement of propagating our views, we were led into expressions which caused workingmen to think that aggressive forces was a proper instrument of reform, we regret it. We deplore the loss of life at the Haymarket, at McCormick's factory, at East St. Louis, and at the Chicago Stock Yards. Very respectfully, A. SPIES, MICHAEL SCHWAB, SAMUEL FIELDEN.

A nice sensation was produced at Chicago on Sunday last by the finding of four bombs which had been smuggled into the jail by some friends of the condemned anarchists. A dispatch from that city says:

The bombs were taken from the cell of Louis Lingg. They were found under his cot hidden beneath a mass of papers and odds and ends of various kinds and were inclosed in a harmless-looking wooden box. A thorough search of all the cells of the condemned men was in progress at the time by direction of the Sheriff. The bombs were at once taken to the jail office, where a cursory examination at once made their capabilities for destructiveness apparent. As soon as their nature was determined it was deemed unwise to make further examination and they were wrapped in newspapers and laid aside to await the Sheriff's disposal. He arrived soon afterwards and, as neither he nor any of the jail officials had any practical knowledge of the mechanism of infernal machines, the bombs were taken from the jail and placed in the hands of an expert for examination. The bombs were four in number, as stated, and were what are known as the "gas-pipe" bombs, in distinction from the spherical bomb thrown at the Haymarket. The one gas-pipe used was about six inches long and four inches in diameter. All were exactly alike as to dimensions and differed only in some of the minor details. All were plugged at each end.

George Engel, the condemned anarchist, tried to commit suicide in his cell by taking opium early Sunday morning. Says a Chicago dispatch:

By the prompt use of the usual remedies given in cases of poisoning he was restored to consciousness in about ten minutes. Dr. Gray, as soon as he saw Engel, said that he had taken some powerful opiate. The pupils of his eyes were widely dilated, and the action of his heart was almost imperceptible. When the anarchist recovered consciousness an effort was made to induce him to drink some coffee or swallow an antidote. He firmly declined to take anything whatever. "If you let me cook it myself I'll drink some coffee," he said, but when the jail officials consented to that Engel said he "had changed his mind," and refused to anything. He positively denied that he had attempted to commit suicide, but said that "he had been drinking a little whiskey." "Where did you get it?" he was asked. "Oh, I got it easy enough," he answered.

A SPRINGFIELD (Ill.) dispatch of Monday says:

The interest in the anarchist case is approaching fever heat at the capital and throughout Central Illinois as the date of the execution of the condemned men approaches. Every movement of Governor Oglesby is watched with fervid curiosity. Petitions and communications are pouring in upon him, and he is the busiest man in the State. He refuses to talk about the case. The Governor has received a number of letters threatening violence if he refuses to exercise executive clemency in behalf of the condemned men. Gen. W. H. Parsons has addressed a long appeal to Gov. Oglesby, in which he reviews the trial and the evidence in the case, and argues that his brother, A. H. Parsons, is not guilty.

A Cincinnati telegram of Monday says: Prominent workingmen here say that the anarchists of Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis, and all of the other large cities of the country have been requested to send a number of chosen men to Chicago to be there next Thursday. Over fifty left Cincinnati Friday evening. They were joined by about the same number from Louisville.

THE SWEDISH NIGHTINGALE.

Jenny Lind Goldschmidt, the celebrated Swedish singer, passed away quietly at her home near London on the 21 of November. She was born in Stockholm, Sweden, Oct. 16, 1851. From infancy she showed a remarkable talent for singing, and at 9 years of age was given admission to a musical academy. She made such progress that in a year she was deemed fitted for the stage, on which she made her appearance in juvenile parts, at tracting considerable attention by her dramatic talents as well as by her vocal accomplishments. At 16 she had become the reigning prima donna of the Stockholm opera. In 1840 she went to Paris and received instruction from Garcia, the first singing-master of Europe. In 1844 she first appeared before an audience outside her native city in Berlin. From this time her reputation grew with each performance, and she was received with enthusiasm at all the leading musical cities of Europe. She made her first appearance in London in 1847, and in September, 1850, was brought to the United States by P. T. Barnum, and was everywhere received with the wildest enthusiasm. In 1852 she was married in Boston to Otto Goldschmidt, a young pianist who accompanied her. Since her marriage she has refused all offers to appear on the stage, only singing occasionally in concerts. She resided in Germany until 1858, when she removed to England, where she has since lived.

PREHISTORIC AMERICA.

Its Legends, Monuments, and Languages—Vast Antiquity of the American Race.

Abstract of an address before the Section of Anthropology of the American Association for the Advancement of Science at New York, by Dr. Daniel G. Brinton, Vice President and Chairman of the section: The prehistoric period of America dates back from the discovery of the several parts of the continent; and the problem is to reconstruct the history of the various nations who inhabit both Americas in this period. A review of the means at our command to accomplish this divides them into six classes:

I. Legendary.—This includes the legends or traditions of the native tribes. These often bear a strong resemblance to Semitic or other Oriental myths, but the similarity is a coincidence only, and those writers are led astray who count it for more. The annals of the Mexicans, the Mayas, of Yucatan, and Quichuas, of Peru, carry us scarcely five hundred years before the voyage of Columbus, although the contrary is often stated. The more savage tribes practically remember nothing more remote than a couple of centuries.

II. Monumental.—The most famous monuments are the stone buildings of Mexico, Yucatan, and Peru. By many these are assigned an antiquity of thousands of years; but a calm weighing of the testimony places them all well within our era, and most of them within a few centuries of the discovery. The celebrated remains of Tiahuanaco, in Peru, are no exception. Much more ancient are some of the artificial shell-heaps along the coast. They contain bones and shells of extinct species, in intimate connection with stone implements and pottery. They furnish data to prove that the land was inhabited several thousand years ago.

III. Industrial.—The industrial activity of man in America may be traced by the remains of his weapons, ornaments, and tools, made of stone, bone, and shell. In most of the deposits examined, specimens of polished stone and pottery testify to a reasonably developed skill; but in the Trenton gravels and a few other localities genuine paleolithic remains have been found, putting man in America at a date coeval with the close of the glacial age, if not earlier. The vast antiquity of the American race is further proved by the extensive dissemination of maize and tobacco—tropical plants of Southern Mexico, which were cultivated from the latitude of Canada to that of Patagonia.

IV. Linguistic.—It is believed that there are about two hundred radically different languages in North and South America. Such a confusion of tongues could only have arisen in hundreds of centuries. The study of these languages and of the gradual growth of their dialects, supplies valuable data for the ancient history of the continent.

V. Physical.—The American race is as distinctively a race by itself as the African or white race. Although varying in many points, it has a marked fixedness of ethnic anatomy, and always has had. The oldest American crania, collected from the most ancient quaternary deposits, are thoroughly American in type.

VI. Geologic.—As the discovery of implements in glacial deposits locates man on this continent at least at the close of the glacial epoch, this carries his residence here to about 35,000 years ago. But there is no likelihood that he came into being on this continent. He could not have developed from any of the known fossil mammalia which dwelt here. More probably some colonies first migrated along the preglacial land-bridge, which once connected Northern America with Western Europe. Later, others came from Asia. At that time the physical geography of the Northern Hemisphere was widely different from the present.

These various data have as yet been but imperfectly studied; when they shall have received the attention they merit we may confidently calculate on a large increase in our knowledge of the course of events in ancient America.

Poison Trees of the Caribbean.

We came to numbers of machined trees. These are so far identical with the deadly ones that their effects are nearly the same; quite, so far as testing them and getting away alive permit me to say. If a raindrop glides from a machined treecard strikes the skin of an unwary stranger it poisons instantly with effects like those of "poison ivy."

I did not know the tree when a rain-storm drove two of us to shelter beneath its low, thick, glossy-leaved branches, but in a few minutes dizziness and nausea came on, with great languor, and we got out of its influence at once to give it a wide berth for all future time. Neither of us entirely recovered from the poison for two or three days. It appears to exhale from the leaves, is densest in a rain storm, and is soluble in water; but its nature has not been investigated so far as I am aware. Natives say that even handling its wood will poison the hands of susceptible people, although it may have been cut a long time. —American Magazine.

American Watches.

The capacity of our watch factories cannot be brought into full play, simply because by so doing our market would be overstocked and competition would force prices ruinously low. As the case stands at present, a number of watch factories have been called into existence, for which really there was no need. The earlier and larger factories were fully able to meet the demand; but the idea that manufacturing watches was one of the most profitable enterprises, tempted quite a number of capitalists to take a hand in the business, and in many instances to their sorrow. Already the evil consequence of overdoing the thing shows itself in the effort to make cheap watches, and before a great while we may see the manufacturers of watches reduced to the level of making cheap clocks.

Looking at the matter from another standpoint, we will soon come to the conclusion that our watch industry is only in its infancy. At the present moment Switzerland makes watches in point of number far in excess of America and the watches made in Switzerland are all exported, while the watches made in America are principally for the home market. As there is no question of a doubt that while America can produce better modern-priced watches than Switzerland and give more value for the money expended, the question presents itself, why not seek foreign markets more energetically than we have done? Some of our old watch factories are doing an export business, but it seems as though it is not done with that zeal and energy that characterize the Swiss export trade. In one particular the Swiss differ from us in their export trade; they study the wants and purchasing capacity of their foreign customers and make goods to meet these. As far as it is known to the uninitiated, our manufacturers have done these things but to a very limited extent. The writer, coming in contact some time ago with the chairman of the East India Navigation Company, was told that this gentleman would place a very large continuous order, if he could be supplied with watches which were fair time-keepers in metal cases at $5 each. That such watches can be produced at a very fair profit, there is no shadow of a doubt, and we know whereof we speak. All we would have to do would be to find out the wants and furnish samples. Australia and Asia are now and will be excellent markets, and by expedition and energy we can secure the bulk of the trade of these. The watch wearing and purchasing capacity of the globe is enormous and can be developed in such a manner that we may at some future day wonder that we did not tap the mine sooner. —Jewelry News.

Didn't Blame Them.

Agentleman who had been reading a newspaper article on Russian affairs turned to an acquaintance and said:

"They say that the Czar has become a hopeless drunkard, and that he prefers corn whisky."

"What?" exclaimed an old fellow from the Blue Lick neighborhood, throwing out a quid of tobacco and assuming an air of profound interest.

"I say that the Czar drinks whisky."

"An' didn't you say co'n lick'er?"

"Yes."

"Who is the Czar?"

"The ruler of Russia."

"Is he the feller that's got such a big army?"

"Yes."

"An' he drinks co'n lick'er?"

"Yes."

"Wall, I don't blame the fellers fur fightin' fur him. I wouldn't mind jinin' his band myse'f." —Arkansaw Traveller.

AN outward gift which is seldom despised, except by those to whom it has been refused. —Gibbon.

At Peace.

A stomach in revolt is an obdurate rebel. Corrected with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, its dissensions with the food introduced into it in unwary moments of appetite ceases. Then it is at peace. Then dyspepsia abandons its grip. Then such fractions manifestations as heartburn, a sinking sensation in the pit of the abdomen between meals and unnatural fullness afterward, flatulence, acid gulping, biliousness, etc., cease to inflict martyrdom. After a course of the national tonic and alterative, the liver and bowels, always more or less disordered during a prolonged attack of indigestion, resume their functions and become regular. Thus not only dyspepsia but its concomitants, constipation and biliousness, are conquered by the medicine, which remedies their fruitful cause, weakness of the organs of digestion. The epigastric nerve, cellular tissue, in short, every organ that bears a part in the digestive processes, acquire vigor and regularity from the benign invigorant.

Paterfamilias Took Him at His Word.

Some years ago a German gentleman, with more money than brains, promised a house to a married couple in Bahrenfeld, Prussia—the present to be made provided the lady brought twelve children into the world. When the twelfth infant arrived the happy father trotted round to the wealthy party and reminded him of his promise, but the rich man affected to treat the whole affair as a joke. "It's not much of a joke for me," moaned the pater, wito a wobegone expression of countenance. Then he left and went to law. The result is that the Supreme Court hold that the wealthy idiot must fulfill his bargain. —Judy.

No, John Henry; no, the history of "The Forty Thieves" is not a history of Chicago. —Newman Independent.

Use Brown's Bronchial Troches for Coughs, Colds, and all other Throat Troubles.—"Pre-eminently the best." —Rev. Henry Ward Beecher.

TIPPLER'S motto—"Don't give up the tip."

How to Gain Flesh and Strength.

Use after each meal Scott's Emulsion with Hypophosphites. It is as palatable as milk, and easily digested. The rapidity with which delicate people improve with its use is wonderful. Use it and try your weight. As a remedy for Consumption, Throat affections, and Bronchitis, it is unequalled. Please read: "I used Scott's Emulsion in a child eight months old with good results. He gained four pounds in a very short time." —THE PAIR, M. D., Alabama.

SOZZLE says the reason he takes his whisky straight is because his mouth always waters for it. —Boston Commercial.

A Family Jewel.

DOCTOR DAVID KENNEDY, the famous surgeon and physician, of Rondout, N. Y., has sent us a copy of his new Medical treatise, a work of great intrinsic merit, apart from many elegant life illustrations of rare beauty. We find on examination that it is a work of exceeding merit, one which should be kept and read in every home. In addition to the studied and valuable medical lessons inculcated by the Doctor, there are two articles from the widely-known author, Col. E. Z. C. Judson (Ned Buntline), which add to the interest of the work. The printed price of this book is only 25 cents, but any one enclosing this notice with the name of the paper from whence it is taken, with four 2-cent postage stamps, will receive the book free by mail.

THE SPECIAL OFFER.

OF THE YOUTH'S COMPANION, which we have published, includes the admirable Double Holiday Numbers for Thanksgiving and Christmas, with colored covers and full-page pictures, twenty pages each. These, with the other weekly issues to January 1, 1888, will be sent free to all new subscribers who send $1.75 for a year's subscription to January, 1888. THE COMPANION has been greatly enlarged, is finely illustrated, and no other weekly literary paper gives so much for so low a price.

The Popular Thoroughfare.

The Wisconsin Central Line, although a comparatively new factor in the railroad systems of the Northwest, has acquired and enviable popularity. Through careful attention to details, its service is as near perfection as might be looked for. The train attendants seem to regard their trusts as individual property and as a result the public is served par excellence. The road now runs solid through fast trains between Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul, and Minneapolis with Pullman's best and unequalled dining-cars; it also runs through solid sleepers between Chicago, Ashland, Duluth, and the famous mining regions of Northern Wisconsin and Michigan.

The habit of running over boots or shoes corrected with Lyon's Patent Heel Stiffeners.

DAYLIGHT.

If a gentleman by the name of Day volunteers to throw the light of his experience into the darkened places of misery, so that others may go and do as he has done and enjoy life, may it not be reasonably called daylight?

As for instance, take the case of Captain Sargent S. Day, Gloucester, Mass., who writes April 16, 1881: "Some time ago I was suffering with rheumatism. I used a small portion of St. Jacobs Oil and was cured at once. I have used it for sprains and never once have known it to fail. I will never be without a bottle." Captain Day also received a circular letter, and in reply under date of July 1, 1887, he says: "I used the Oil as stated and was permanently cured of rheumatism by its use." During the intervening six years there had been no recurrence of the pain. Also a letter from Mr. H. M. Converse, of the Warren (Mass.) Herald, dated July 9, 1887, as follows: "In response to yours of June 22, would say that in 1880 my wife had a severe attack of rheumatism in shoulder and arm, so that she could not raise her hand to her head. A few applications of St. Jacobs Oil cured her permanently, and she has had no return of it." Another case is that of Mr. R. B. Kyle, Tower Hill, Appomattox county, Va., who writes, November, 1886: "Was afflicted for several years with rheumatism and grew worse all the time. Eminent physicians gave no relief; had spasms, and was not expected to live; was rubbed all over with St. Jacobs Oil. The first application relieved, the second removed the pain, continued use cured me; no relapse in five years, and do as much work as ever." These are proofs of the perfection of the remedy, and, taken in connection with the miracles performed in other cases, it has no equal.

FRIDAY NOVEMBER 4, 1887.

Unless the Governor interferes, the seven anarchists will be hung at Chicago, to-day.

We heard a scholar remark the other day, that he couldn't have near so much fun this term of school, as he did last winter. Perhaps he will learn more.

Dr. Shutt began the publication of a paper at Maysville last week, called the Breeze. It is a five column quarto, with the usual amount of "patent insides" and a few "patent outsides." Long may the Breezes blow.

Supervisor Hamm has been filling up the holes in the roads between here and Spencerville with gravel. We don't know much about making roads, but that's our plan exactly, is to keep hauling gravel on the road, until, in a course of time we will have a good gravel road.

The season of the year for church oyster suppers is approaching, and as it comes on apace, let us hope that nothing will interfere with the usual custom of putting at least one oyster in each dish. Take away this one lone oyster and you leave a person in doubt as to what kind of soup it is. Don't do it, even if you have to use the same oyster for several dishes of soup.

ELECTRIC BITTERS.—This remedy is becoming so well known and so popular as to need no special mention. All who have used Electric Bitters sing the same song of praise. A purer medicine does not exist and it is guaranteed to do all that is claimed. Electric Bitters will cure all diseases of the Liver and Kidneys, will remove Pimples, Boils, Salt Rheum and other affections caused by impure blood. Will drive Malaria from the system and prevent as well as cure all Malarial fevers. For cure of Headache, Constipation and Indigestion try Electric Bitters. Entire satisfaction guaranteed, or money refunded. Price 50 cts. and $1.00 per bottle at W. C. Patterson's Drug Store.

The lecturer last week is an old fogey in some of his ideas, while at the same time he said a good many things that were true. We all have formed certain habits, that perhaps are not best for our good, and yet we do not like to hear any thing said against them. The man who uses tobacco can't see that it is in any way injurious to him, and in most cases they claim they are compelled to use it on account of dyspepsia or some other disease; the girls who chew gum don't believe that it does them any harm, and so it is with persons who use tea and coffee; they hoot at the idea that it in any way affects their health. The great difficulty, is to know just what to do. One man comes along and tells you to do so and so, and to eat only at regular hours; the next one you meet will probably tell you to do as you please, and eat when you are hungry. If the lecturer practices what he preaches, we are led to believe from his appearance, that he don't enjoy much better health than the rest of us poor mortals.

SPENCERVILLE.

G. A. Bishop is at Kaukakee this week.

J. Boots and Mrs. Allen were at Auburn last Sunday.

Miss Anna Rupe has been the guest of Mrs. Tindall part of this week.

Miss Manda Rhodes is quite sick with typhoid fever, at the home of her sister in La Otto.

Mr. Simons and wife, of Huntertown, were the guests of Milas Rhodes and family Sunday.

The Lutherans will give a musical social next Saturday evening. A cordial invitation is given to all.

There were no services at the Lutheran church last Sunday. Rev. Fryberger being called away to attend the funeral services of Miss Betz.

The many friends of Orange Fales will regret to hear of his death, which occurred last Sunday, at Napoleon, his late home. The interment took place on Tuesday.

COBURNTOWN.

Mort now sports a twenty-five dollar watch. Whew!

Al Monroe and wife, of Hicksville, were visiting in Coburntown Sunday.

As a matter of news I will just say we are having very fine weather just now.

War Coburn is at work in Hicksville, doing some mason work for Ed Hale.

A good many of the swamps through this section are on fire, which causes a great deal of smoke.

Uncle George has a new barn. Old Rusty did the carpenter work, and Cooney of St. Joe put on the iron roof.

A good many of our citizens are getting their lives insured. Are we going to be visited with an epidemic, or what is the racket?

Augustus Coburn is quite poorly, and don't improve much. He is doctoring with Bevier of Waterloo, who thinks he can help him.

Joe and Cana are trying to drive a hole in the ground for Mr. Cole. At last accounts their pipe was shooting off side-ways and they thought it would come out under the barn.

As your correspondent walked into the News office the other day, he was rather beat, for he saw lying on the counter a beet that beat any beet I ever saw. If any one on this beat has a beet, that will beat that beet, they can beat me.

B. A. Hadsell commenced his school at No. 7 last Monday. All the schools in the township are running now, and by the by, I think Coburntown can furnish more school teachers to the square inch than any other neighborhood in the county. I can count nineteen now living in the neighborhood who are, or have been school teachers, and six are teaching this winter. If any other neighborhood can beat that, whoop them out.

CONCORD.

Mrs. Guysinger gave a sewing bee one day last week.

Emma Morr entertained a few friends last Friday evening.

Our "school marm" is making her home with Miss Sabra Miller.

Phil Squires rejoiceth mightily over a new arrival at his house. It is a boy of usual weight.

The Sunday school was slimly attended last Sunday, because of the quarterly meeting at St. Joe.

Mrs. Henry Miller and Mrs. J. A. Miller, of Mich., were the guests of John Smith and family one day last week.

Harlo Um and wife, of Auburn, come down last Sunday, and remained until Monday, visiting with his father.

Henry Melton having resigned as superintendent, it became necessary to elect another one in his place. G. W. Wade was accordingly elected.

Harry Buchanan is afflicted with one of "Job's comforters" on his right hand. He proved an awkward appearance trying to eat with his left hand.

Henry Baker has some of the most chestnuts for sale we have seen for a long time. There is hardly an unsound one to be found among them. They were shipped from the east.

One week ago last Monday morning, while Dave Miller was feeding his horses, one of them kicked him on the knee. It has proved more serious than was at first thought for, and he has not been able to get around since.

THANKSGIVING SUPPER.

The Young People's Temperance Literary Association, of St. Joe, will give an Oyster Supper in the Volmer Hall, on Thursday evening, Nov. 24th 1887. All are cordilly invited to attend.

LOCALS.

Christmas comes on Sunday this year.

Our merchants had a big day's trade last Saturday.

Several of the large panes of glass in the front of the saloon were broken on Wednesday night.

New styles of millinery goods received this week at Miss Bartlett's, St. Joe, Ind. Call and see them.

Mrs. John Derek of Butler, visited in town this week, the guest of her brother, W. C. Patterson and family.

Sell Bowen and wife have moved back here from Ohio. They will occupy one of the houses on John Widener's farm.

A very pleasant party was held at the residence of Mart Tustison's last evening, in honor of the birthday of Miss Leona.

Bartlett's hotel at Newville caught fire the other day, and but for prompt action by the citizens, would have been destroyed.

The W. C. T. U. will meet at the residence of Mrs. Eva Lounsberry, on Thursday, Nov. 17th, at 2:30 o'clock. All are invited to attend.

Vester Widney talks strongly of having a fish pond made on his father's farm next spring. A good idea, as he could then supply the town with fresh fish.

Sunday morning for the first time, the new Methodist bell pealed forth, announcing the hour of Sunday school. It has a good clear tone, of a different key from the bell on the other church, so that it is readily distinguished. It weighs about 700 pounds, and is made from the best of bell metal. Long may it ring.

Over at Maysville they spell gas with two s's. That must be a new kind.

A man who means business generally gets all the business he can attend to.

A new street has been opened for travel south from the Methodist church, and then west to the main road.

A frog was found near the depot the other day that weighed several hundred pounds. It was a railroad frog.

Mrs. C. S. Crim, of Galion, Ohio, has been visiting the past week, with her mother, Mrs. Robert Davis, of this place. They spent last Sabbath with friends at Sedan.

Jonathan Bair, the mail carrier from the north, has been sick for some time past, and has had a substitute driving the hack. We understand that Jonathan is sick of the job.

The Criterion Comedy Company, of which Charley Meek and wife are prominent actors, showed at Butler two nights last week. It is said that they draw good audiences, and give the best of satisfaction.

Rev. S. S. Stanton of Kendallville, and Rev. Langley of this place, made the News office a very pleasant call on Monday. Come again, gentlemen, even if you are a little cranky on the subject of prohibition. This country stands sadly in need of a few millions of just such cranks.

A farmer over east of this place, had a cow that refused to give milk some time ago, so he went and consulted a cow doctor, who, deciding that she had "hollow tail," whatever that may be, split her tail and filled the opening with salt and turpentine, and bound it up, only to find later that the poor animal was being milked by a half-grown pig.

We were badly beat last Saturday by a beet, and it wasn't a dead-beat, either. Albie and Clarence Coblurn brought into our sanctum a beet, 21 inches long, and for length, that knocks out any thing in the beet line that we've ever seen. A few extra large onions will now be acceptable, and then we will have a good variety of winter vegetables.

Just because the undertaker at this place had charge of six funerals week before last, the Clipper man at Garnett, says he is led to believe that the grave has claimed half of this town. Well, let's see: if six was half of the town, then twice six are twelve. Add to this 118 school children, 27 not old enough to go to school, 11 babies, 34 politicians, 17 more that wants to be, and 229 private citizens; then from this take the six who died—but, hold on! only one of the six who died lived in St. Joe, so take one from the amount and you have something near the population of this town at the present time.

E. H. George, traveling salesman for a large Boot and Shoe house in Detroit, makes regular visits to this place every 60 days. Nothing so very remarkable about that, as there are a good many traveling men who do the same thing. But, this Mr. George manages some way to always get here on Friday, and invariably drives to Maysville, and stays over Sunday. Well, what of it? Why nothing, of course, only he told us confidentially last Monday, that they actually had the prettiest Hoods in Maysville, of any town that he visits. Can't see the point, now, can you? Well, we'll tell you; there is a very nice young lady living there by the name of Miss Hood, who has captivated this Mr. George, and he is a gone goslin.

IS CONSUMPTION INCURABLE?

Read the following: Mr. C. H. Morris, Newark, Ark., says: "Was down with Abscess of Lungs, and friends and physicians pronounced me an Incurable Consumptive. Began taking Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, am now on my third bottle, and able to oversee the work on my farm. It is the finest medicine ever made."

Jesse Middlewart, Decatur, Ohio, says: "Had it not been for Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption I would have died of Lung Troubles. Was given up by doctors. Am now in best of health." Try it. Sample bottle at W. C. Patterson's Drugstore.

We notice this week, with sincere regret, the death of our old-time friend and school-mate Orange Fales, which occurred at his home in Nappanee, last Sunday afternoon. His health began to fail something like a year ago, at which time he disposed of his business interests, and went west, hoping that the change might do him good, but he received no material benefit. He returned home and gradually grew worse until his death. Orange was a man in the fullest sense of the term; honest, upright, and possessed of the best traits of character. He has a host of friends here who will be sorry to hear of his untimely death.

COMING INTO CHURCH.

BY O. C. HOOPER.

Did you ever see them coming into church a little late, And attempt to read their temper by the nature of their gait? 'Tis a very pleasing study, and you'll find it worth your while, To observe those people walking up the carpet-covered aisle.

First there comes perhaps an aged, bent, and sober-featured man, Whose uncertain shuffling indicates as plainly as it can That he is weary, weary, weary, and is haunted by a dread That the next time he'll be carried, carried up the church aisle dead.

Next behind him comes a lady, cheeks a little sunken now, Streaks of white on hair and age's tell-tale wrinkles on her brow; But her walk is slow and stately and it plainly seems to say, "Oh, we toiled and saved when younger; we're enjoying it to-day."

Then there is a married daughter, and her languid steps betrays Her unconscious beneath the craning, concentrated gaze, While her far out swinging dress skirts are declaring it a shame To come into church so tardily, but she is not to blame.

She has children and they follow, clinging one to either hand, And they stumble, looking choirward, asking "Ma, is that the band?" But she holds them up, and, stooping softly tells them to be still, Thinking, "I'll not be so late again—contwisted if I will!"

Then comes a younger sister tripping lightly down the aisle, Resting on her proudly-tossing head a hat of latest style, And the meaning of her manner is, "I wish that father's pew Was a little further forward; then I'd longer be in view!"

A MIGHTY NIMROD.

BY R. W. M.

In the autumn of 1852, after having traversed a great part of the Western territory, I found myself in the pleasant and healthy little village of Fayetteville, in the north western part of Arkansas. Here, in consequence of the large quantities of game with which the neighborhood abounded, I determined to devote a few weeks to recruiting my strength, which, owing to the laborious manner in which I had traveled, had become very much exhausted, and also to enjoy the pleasure of my favorite amusement hunting.

Upon one of my hunting excursions I had been singularly unsuccessful—not having had a shot during the whole day, and, as might be supposed, felt in a not very joyous mood; for upon all previous occasions I had met with great success. This ill luck caused me to remain in the forest much longer than I had anticipated; and when I first began to think of returning, I found that it was already beginning to get dark, and I had quite a distance to travel through the forest before reaching the village. Weary in body and harrassed in mind, in consequence of my want of success, I slowly retraced my steps. Soon the dark mantle of night was spread upon the forest, and I, as yet, perceived no signs of the opening. I hastened my steps, thinking, if possible, to reach the clearing ere it became too dark for travel. Faster and faster I walked, until I found myself going at a brisk trot, although at every step my clothes were torn by the brush, and my flesh considerably lacerated. Soon, however, I was compelled to slacken my pace, as it had become so dark that I was unable to distinguish the trees, and rather reluctantly came to the conclusion that I would have to take up my quarters for the night where I was.

As my mind was thus employed, trying to arrange some plan for my night's accommodation, I was startled by a piercing shriek, as of some person in distress. I stopped suddenly, and endeavored to peer into the darkness for an explanation. Again I heard the sound, although apparently at not so great a distance from me as the first. I stood then irresolutely. Were it a human being, it would be my duty to render any assistance that might be in my power, and—At this point of my meditations I perceived through the underbrush, a short distance from me, two objects close together, resembling small balls of fire.

I had now divined the cause of the noise I had heard. It proceeded from a wild animal, and that animal was now watching me with its fire-like orbs! I hastily raised my rifle and fired! but as the object was some distance from me, and not being able to draw a sight, I must have missed it, for so soon as I pulled the trigger, with two or three bounds, it was before me. I now discovered, from its close proximity, that it was a panther—that much-dreaded and savage animal, which old hunters, even when well equipped, are loth to meet. I drew my hunting-knife, not having time to reload my rifle, and waited for the fatal spring; but to my surprise, the panther crouched down about twelve feet from me, and gazed into my eyes in a manner not suited to lessen my excitement. Steadily I watched it, expecting every moment to be torn in pieces by the ferocious animal, although I was determined to defend my life to the last extremity. Once I endeavored to reload my rifle, but the moment I commenced to move the panther rose, as if about to spring upon me. I determined, therefore, to keep myself in readiness for the attack, for I perceived, from the movements of my enemy, that should I attempt to move it would be upon me in an instant. There we were, in the midst of a dense forest, eyeing each other with a bitter enmity.

Thus was I kept in suspense for a long time—I know not how long, for each minute seemed an hour, until the panther, probably becoming hungry, slowly advanced toward me. When within about six feet of me, it again stopped, and prepared for the spring. I retained my composure manfully, for although I had been much excited on the first appearance of the animal, the length of time that had intervened, and the hopelessness of my case, had given me new strength, and I determined that if I must die, it would be bravely defending my life.

Suddenly the panther gave a spring. This I had anticipated, and planted myself as firmly as possible, holding my knife in such a manner that the animal would jump upon it. The shock knocked me down; but I knew that I had buried my knife in the animal's body, for the warm blood that fell upon me, convinced me of the fact. I had not killed the panther, however, for, before I could regain my feet, it was upon me; and as I had lost my knife immediately upon the first attack, I was almost powerless, having nothing to defend myself with but what nature had bequeathed to me. It again jumped upon me, and we rolled over and over upon the earth. I clasped it with all my power around the body, and from the tightness with which I held it, it was unable to do me much injury. I felt, with pleasure too, that its strength was decreasing, and concluded that the knife must have entered a vital part. I held firmly, knowing, that should I relax my efforts, death would be the inevitable result. Every moment I felt the strength of the panther diminish, until finally it ceased its hold altogether. I knew now that my enemy was dead, in consequence of the wound it had received in its first attack; and, after I became aware of the fact that its life was extinct, I began to examine my own injuries, which, although not severe, were numerous—I found that my breast had been torn considerably on the first attack. I bound up my injuries with my handkerchief, as well as circumstances would permit, and then, being much exhausted, lay down near my defunct enemy to rest.

I lay there upon the earth for some time, and I must have slept; for, when I again remember, the first gray streaks of morning were beginning to break through the tall trees. I now, for the first time, had a fair view of the object of my nightly combat. It was an immense panther; and, as I gazed upon it, I shuddered at what would have been the result, had I not been so fortunate as to disable it on the first attack. I now skinned the animal, and hastily returned to the village, where, on measurement, it proved to be ten feet and a half from tip to tip.

That all who are happy are equally happy is not true. A peasant and a philosopher may be equally satisfied, but not equally happy. Happiness consists in the multiplicity of agreeable consciousness. A peasant has not capacity for having equal happiness with a philosopher.—Johnson.

Mazeppa's Real Story.

A portrait of Mazeppa, painted from life, has been discovered at Kief, in Southern Russia, and is being engraved by the Russian academician, Demetriy Kowkosky. It will surprise nearly every one who hears that Mazeppa was a real living man, who could sit for his portrait—he seems so like a purely mythical being, like Bellerophon, or like one of the Amazons. Yet he was a real man, and cut quite a figure in his part of the world some 200 years ago.

Joan Stephanyitch Mazeppa was a Cossack, who made successful war upon the savage Tartars who desolated Southern Russia, driving them back to the Caspian. This so recommended him to Peter the Great that he invited the Cossack to his Court and covered him with honors and gifts. But when Peter sent him against the invading Swedes, under Charles XII., he betrayed the Russian and went over, with his followers, to the enemy. Peter fled, and they drove them into Turkish territory, where, fearing to fall into the hands of his former relentless master, Mazeppa, killed himself. He had before this hidden all the treasures which he had amassed in his wars and through gifts from those he had served in caverns in the hills around Kief. The portrait now discovered was probably hidden at this time.

The incident by which alone we know him actually did occur. He was by birth a Cossack, but when very young he was sent to serve as a page in the Court of the Polish King. There his beauty and bravery won him great favor, especially with the ladies. With one of them, the wife of a certain noble, he was suspected of too great friendliness, and the jealous husband, in revenge, ordered him to be bound naked to the back of a wild horse that had never been ridden.

The horse was a Tartar from the Steppes, and when loosed he rushed madly back to his native country, with the unwilling rider bound to his back. The Cossacks received the unhappy youth when nearly dead with exhaustion, and he grew up among them, remarkable for strength and bravery. Byron got his story out of Voltaire's "Life of Charles XII.," and worked it up into his dashing and attractive poem.

A story so dramatic was at once seized upon for adaptation to the stage, and it was presented as early as 1725 by an Englishman named Hunter. He was also a very handsome man and made a great stir in London.

The picture of Mazeppa bound to the horse's back, which everybody knows so well, was painted by Horace Vernet, one of the greatest of French artists. Vernet, of course, got his inspiration from Byron, to whom we all owe whatever knowledge we may have of the brilliant Cossack rider and soldier.

Mazeppa's real motives for betraying Peter are not certainly known. The Poles, who look upon him as a hero, always maintained that he had in view the welfare of the Polish nation, and they point to the fact that he stipulated with the Swedish King for the independence of Poland.—London Exchange.

How the Nation Grew Rich.

The American colonists imported sheep, forbade their exportation and encouraged and even enforced the spinning and weaving of woolen cloth to be worn by the people. William Penn fostered and protected varied home industries and productions, while England, on her part, did what she could to discourage and suppress colonial manufacturing; so the colonies were kept permanently poor. The Revolutionary war acted as a high tariff. In 1787, Congress saw the right to levy duties on imports. George Washington showed himself in sympathy with the protection idea by delivering his inaugural address in a suit of woolen clothing manufactured in Philadelphia. It was against the natural course of things, "from England's standpoint," when America manufactured anything which England wanted to sell her. In 1828, America had her first adequate protective tariff. The tariff of 1862, the best the country had ever known, produced a period of unexampled prosperity. Reductions of tariff created financial crashes. The tariff of 1862 was the work of statesmen. Under it we have lived substantially for a quarter of a century and enjoyed a season of unparalleled prosperity. Henry Diston sells his saws in Sheffield. American women now wear American silks, the best in the world. More carpets are now made in Philadelphia than are made in all England, and a good American watch can now be bought for $25. American manufacturers employ American labor. Free trade would bring America down to the condition of Ireland. The nation must always be in a condition to provide for all its necessities.—Prof. Thompson.

Ingenious Smugglers.

The ingenuity of smugglers has never, perhaps been more strikingly illustrated than it was recently on the Swiss-Italian frontier. An innocent looking wagoner, with a wagon load of cheese arrived at the Italian Custom House, at Chiasso. He had come from Lugano, and his destination was a small Italian village called Marignano. The cheese weighed three tons, and the wagoner, who was "childlike and bland," whistled blithely as he presented his papers, which certified that he was employed by the firm of — to convey the cheese, which formed part only of a large order, to its purchasers at Marignano.

The papers were examined and found to be correct, and before resuming his journey the wagoner stepped into a neighboring cafe with one of the men, for the day was hot, and a cigarette and a glass of wine could not fail to be acceptable.

But the delay for refreshments was destined to prove fatal to the wagoner's hopes, for during his absence another man wistfully gazed on the tempting load of cheese, and thought that a slice from such a quantity would never be missed, and would at the same time, in conjunction with a morsel of garlic and a piece of black bread, afford him a delectable supper.

He therefore took his knife, and selecting a prime looking cheese, he began to cut into it, or rather he did not cut into it, for his knife was blunt on the cheese was uncommonly hard.

This peculiarity induced him to consult with a colleague, and together they proceeded to make something more than a cursory examination of the remarkable cheeses. Lo and behold! they proved not to be cheese at all, but solid, compact rolls of tobacco, artfully done up in cement; this again was covered with canvas, which was painted to represent cheese. Of course the "find" was instantly confiscated, and the blithe wagoner was transferred from the comforts of the cafe to the hardships of a jail.—London Exchange.

Brown Bread and Mind Cure.

The beneficial effect of the mind-cure process is shown by the experience of a young man who had been "bucking the tiger" in Portland, Me., and had met with the usual run of bad luck. He started in with over $100, and at the close of his sitting he had but 25 cents remaining. This sum was not enough for a stake, and so the unfortunate player left the den in search of some turn of luck. Not far from the gaming-house he met an acquaintance who complained of a troublesome disorder in his nervous system and asked advice on the subject. "The gamester thought it over and finally made an agreement to meet his friend later, after which he departed in search of food. Baked beans and brown bread made up his fare. While eating he mechanically rolled some of the bread into a ball, then an idea flashed upon him. He proceeded to roll the bread into good-sized pills, until he had made thirty six of them, all of which he took to his suffering friend, and after giving directions regarding their use, received $3 for the three dozen. With this money he sped to the gambling table, and in a short time won $150. A few weeks afterward he met his friend and received his blessing for effecting so speedily a cure of his trouble.—Boston Globe.

Manufacture of "Damascus" Blades.

A German paper says that there is no longer any sword-making industry in Damascus. What was once known as the sword trade is now occupied with converting the blades of old saws and pieces of ordinary iron into daggers, and cheap swords and rifles of Solingen and Birmingham make are brought up, finished, and decorated in Oriental style, and put upon the market as weapons of Arabian and Damascus origin.—New York Tribune.

SOME men would think they were cheated if they had the mumps lighter than their neighbors.—Lewiston Journal.

"WITH BUBBLING GROAN."

A Fatal Sense of Security Awfully Realized at Sea.

"A wet sheet and a flowing sea, a breeze that follows fast."

From his look-out the faithful old captain of yonder merchantman casts an uneasy glance at the distant horizon. See! yonder a small speck of cloud no larger than a man's hand. He watches it with his piercing eye for a few moments, then reaches for his long eyeglass. To his experienced view, this harmless little cloud betokens danger.

Across his bronzed face there comes a look of determination, and with quick orders to the seamen, the craft is put about and all sail made for the nearest harbor, where in apparent safety and anchor is dropped, and hardy mariners watch the approaching storm with defiance.

The storm bursts! The decks have been cleared, the sails close turtled, and all ordinary preparations made for an emergency.

The storm increases but all seems safe. But see! the vessel gives a sudden lurch, turns quickly about, and away she goes!

The anchor chain has broken!

This mighty ship might have ridden safely but for one weak link in that anchor chain!

The strength of the chain is no greater than the strength of its weakest link.

On the sea of life, how many men are wrecked because of the unsuspected weakness of a link in the chain of health—one weak vital organ in the body.

The mystery of death is even greater than the mystery of life. We think the links of our chain are strong, but we too seldom critically examine them for ourselves, and never really know that they will bear the strain that we put upon them.

"I have a friend," said Dr. Dio Lewis, "who can lift 100 pounds, and yet is an habitual sufferer from kidney and liver trouble and low spirits." The doctor who was one of the wisest and best public teachers of the laws of health, wrote:

"The very marked testimonials from college professors, respectable physicians, and other gentlemen of intelligence and character, to the value of Warner's safe cure, have greatly surprised me. Many of the gentlemen I know, and, reading their testimony, I was impelled to purchase some bottles of Warner's safe cure and analyze it. Besides I took some, swallowing three times the prescribed quantity. I am satisfied that the medicine is not injurious, and will frankly add that if I found myself the victim of a serious kidney trouble I should use this preparation."

One year ago the Servia, while in a great storm, parted her two-inch rudder chain—no wonder—it was rusted through! The key to human health is the condition of the kidneys, and they may long be diseased and we be ignorant of the fact, because they give forth little or no pain. They in reality cause the majority of all the deaths, by polluting the blood and sending disease all through the system.

Though discovered in 1879, saccharine is just beginning to be manufactured on a large scale, near Madgeburg, Prussia. Having 300 times the sweetening power of cane sugar, this remarkable product is adapted to many uses. It is expected to be especially valuable in medicine on account of its absolute harmlessness.

But none of them cured her,
Their names and their number nobody could tell.

And she soon might have died,
But sense "Pellets" were tried,
That acted like magic, and then she got well.

The magic "Pellets" were Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets (the original Little Liver Pills). They cured Mrs. Peters, and now she wouldn't be without them.

"For years I have had a chest trouble amounting to nothing short of consumption. He adds: "My recovery, which is now on a sure foundation, hinges entirely on the compass of this wonderful Restorative, having tried other remedies without a bit of relief."

Catarrh

May affect any portion of the body where the mucous membrane is found. But catarrh of the head is by far the most common, and, strange to say, the most liable to be neglected. It originates in a cold, or succession, of colds, combined with impure blood. The wonderful success Hood's Sarsaparilla has had in curing catarrh warrants us in urging all who suffer with this disease to try the peculiar medicine. It renovates and invigorates the blood, and tones every organ.

"I have been troubled with that annoying disease, nasal catarrh, and have taken all kinds of blood purifiers, but never found relief till I used Hood's Sarsaparilla, which I am confident will do all that is claimed. Hurrah for Hood's Sarsaparilla!" J. L. Roush, Marksburg, Ky.

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R.R.

By reason of its central position, close relation to principal lines East of Chicago and continuous lines at terminal points West, Northwest and Southwest—is the only true middle-link in that transcontinental system which invites and facilitates travel and traffic in either direction between the Atlantic and Pacific.

The Rock Island main line and branches include Chicago, Joliet, Ottawa, La Salle, Peoria, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Fairfield, Ottumwa, Oskaloosa, West Liberty, Iowa City, Des Moines, Indianola, Winterset, Atlantic, Knoxville, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie, Centre and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Gallatin, Trenton, St. Joseph, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri; Leavenworth and Atchison, in Kansas; Albert Lea, Minneapolis and St. Paul, in Minnesota; Watertown in Dakota, and hundreds of intermediate cities, towns and villages.

THE GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE

Guarantees Speed, Comfort and Safety to those who travel over it. Its roadbed is thoroughly ballasted. Its track is of heavy steel. Its bridges are solid structures of stone and iron. Its rolling stock is perfect as human skill can make it. It has all the safety appliances that mechanical genius has invented and experience proved valuable. Its practical operation is conservative and methodical—its discipline strict and exacting. The luxury of its passenger accommodations is unequalled in the West—unsurpassed in the world.

CONCORD AND DISCORD.

Dr. Talmage Preaches at the Brooklyn Tabernacle.

The Whole Universe Was Once a Complete Cadence—Discord Brought About by Sin—The Human Intellect Out of Tune—How to Restore Harmony.

BROOKLYN, Nov. 6.—The main feature in the music of the Brooklyn tabernacle is the congregational singing. To-day, after the opening song, in which all the thousands heartily participated, Prof. Browne gave on the organ Scherzo, opus 61, by Mendelssohn. The Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D., expounded a chapter in the first book of Samuel, where Saul, possessed of an evil spirit, threw a javelin at David, who was playing on the harp before him, thus showing that the evil spirit does not like sacred music. The subject of the sermon was "Concord and Discord," and the text was from Job xxxviii, 4, 7: "Who laid the corner stone thereof; when the morning stars sang together?" Dr. Talmage said:

We have all seen the ceremony at the laying of the corner stone of church, asylum, or Masonic temple. Into the hollow of the stone were placed scrolls of history and important documents to be suggestive if one or two hundred years after the building should be destroyed by fire or torn down. We remember the silver trowel or iron hammer that smote the square piece of granite into sanctity. We remember some venerable man who presided, wielding the trowel or hammer. We remember also the music as the choir stood on the scattered stones and timber of the building about to be constructed. The leaves of the notebooks fluttered in the wind and were turned over with a great rustling, and we remember how the bass, baritone, tenor, contralto, and soprano voices commingled. They had for many days been rehearsing the special program, that it might be worthy of the corner stone laying.

In my text the poet of Uz calls us to a grander ceremony—the laying of the foundation of this great temple of a world. The corner stone was a block of light, and the trowel was of celestial crystal. All about and on the embankments of cloud stood the angelic choristers, unrolling their librettos of overture, and other worlds slapped shining cymbals while the ceremony went on, and God, the architect, by stroke of light after stroke of light, dedicated this great cathedral of a world, with mountains for pillars, and sky for freecord ceiling, and flowering fields for floor, and sunrise and midnight aurora for upholstery. "Who laid the corner stone thereof, when the morning stars sang together?"

The fact is that the whole universe was a complete cadence, an unbroken dithyramb, a musical portfolio. The great sheet of immensity has been spread out, and written on it were the stars, the smaller of them minims, the larger of them sustained notes. The meteors marked the staccato passage, the whole heavens a gamut, with all sounds, intonations and modulations, the space between the worlds a musical interval, trembling of stellar light a quaver, the thunder a base clef, the wind among trees a treble clef. That is the way God made all things, a perfect harmony.

But one day a harp string snapped in the great orchestra. One day a voice sounded out of tune. One day a discord, harsh and terrific, grated upon the glorious antiphony. It was sin that made the dissonance, and that harsh discord has been sounded through the centuries. All the work of Christians, and philanthropists, and reformers of all ages, is to stop that discord and get all things back into the perfect harmony which was heard at the laying of the corner stone when the morning stars sang together. Before I get through, if I am divinely helped, I will make it plain that sin is discord and righteousness is harmony.

That things in general are out of tune is as plain as to a musician's ear is the unhappy clash of clarinet and bassoon in an orchestral rendering.

The world's health out of tune: Weak lung and the atmosphere in collision, disordered eye and noonday light in quarrel, rheumatic limb and damp weather in struggle, neuralgias, and pneumonias, and consumptions, and epilepsies in flocks swoop upon neighborhood and cities. Where you find one person with sound throat, and keen eyesight, and alert ear, and easy respiration, and regular pulsation, and supple limb, and prime digestion, and steady nerves, you find a hundred who have to be very careful because this, or that, or the other physical function is disordered.

The human intellect out of tune: The judgment wrongly swerved, or the memory leaky, or the will weak, or the temper inflammable, and the well-balanced mind exceptional. Domestic life out of tune: Only here and there a conjugal outbreak of incompatibility of temper through the divorce courts, or a filial outbreak about a father's will through the surrogate's court, or a case of wife beating or husband poisoning through the criminal courts, but thousands of families with June outside and January within.

Society out of tune: Labor and capital; their hands on each other's throat. Spirit of caste keeping those down in the social scale in a struggle to get up, and putting those who are up in anxiety lest they have to come down. No wonder the old piano-forte of society is all out of tune, when hypocrisy, and lying, and subterfuge, and double dealing, and sycophancy, and charlatanism, and revenge have for 6,000 years been banging away at the keys and stamping the pedals.

On all sides there is a perpetual shipwreck of harmonies. Nations in discord. Without realizing it, so wrong is the feeling of nation that the symbols chosen are fierce and destructive. In this country, where our skies are full of robins and doves and morning larks, we have for national symbol the fierce and filthy eagle, as immoral a bird as can be found in all the ornithological catalogues. In Great Britain, where they have lambs and fallow deer, their symbol is the merciless lion. In Russia, where from between her frozen north and blooming south all kindly beasts dwell, they choose the growling bear; and in the world's heraldry a favorite figure is the dragon, which is a winged serpent, ferocious and deathful. And so fond is the world of contention that we climb out through the heavens and baptize one of the other planets with the spirit of battle, and call it Mars, after the god of war, and we give to the eighth sign of the zodiac the name of the scorpion, a creature which is chiefly celebrated for its deadly sting. But, after all, these symbols are expressive of the way nation feels toward nation. Discord wide as the continent and bridging the seas. I suppose you have noticed how warmly in love dry goods stores are with other dry goods stores, and how highly grocerymen think of the signers of the groceryman on the same block. And in what a eulogistic way allopathic and homeopathic doctors speak of each other, and how ministers will sometimes put ministers on that beautiful cooking instrument, which the English call a spit, an iron roller with spikes on it, and turned by a crank before a hot fire, and then if the minister being roasted cries out against it, the men who are turning him say: "Hush, brother! we are turning this spit for the glory of God and the good of your soul, and you must be quiet while we close the service with:

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love."

The earth is diametered and circumferenced with discord, and the music that was rendered at the laying of the world's corner stone, when the morning stars sang together, is not heard now; and though here and there, from this and that part of society, and from this and that part of the earth, there comes up a thrilling solo of love, or a warble of worship, or a sweet duet of patience, they are drowned out by a discord that shakes the earth.

Paul says: "The whole creation groaneth;" and while the nightingale, and the woodlark, and the canary, and the plover, sometimes sing so sweetly that their notes have been written out in musical notation, and it is found that the cuckoo sings in the key of D, and that the cormorant is a basso in the winged choir, yet sportsman's gun and the autumnal blast often leave them ruffled and bleeding, or dead in the meadow or forest. Paul was right, for the groan in nature drowns out the prima donnas of the sky.

Tartini, the great musical composer, dreamed one night that he made a contract with Satan, the latter to be ever in the composer's service. But one night he handed to Satan a violin, on which Diabolus played such sweet music that the composer was awakened by the emotion and tried to reproduce the sounds, and therefrom was written Tartini's most famous piece, entitled the "Devil's Sonata," a dream ingenious but faulty, for all melody descends from Heaven, and only discords ascend from hell. All hatreds, feuds, controversies, backbitings, and revenges are the devil's sonata, are diabolic fuge, are demonic phantasy, are grand march of doom, are allegro of perdition.

But if in this world things in general are out of tune to our frail ear, how much more so to ears angelic and deific. It takes a skilled artist fully to appreciate disagreement of sound. Many have no capacity to detect a defect of musical execution, and, though there were in one bar as many offenses against harmony as could crowd in between the lower F of the bass and the higher G of the soprano, it would give them no discomfort, while on the forehead of the educated artist beads of perspiration would stand out as a result of the harrowing dissonance. While an amateur was performing on a piano and had just struck the wrong chord, John Sebastian Bach, the immortal composer, entered the room, and the amateur rose in embarrassment, and Bach rushed past the host, who stepped forward to greet him, and before the keyboard had stopped vibrating, put his adroit hand upon the keys and changed the painful inharmony into glorious cadence. Then Bach turned and gave salutation to the host who had invited him.

But the worst of all discords is moral discord. If society and the world are painfully discordant to imperfect man, what must they be to a perfect God? People try to define what sin is. It seems to me that sin is getting out of harmony with God, a disagreement with his holiness, with His purity, with His love, with His commands; our will clashing with His will, the finite dashing against the infinite, the frail against the puissant, the created against the Creator. If a thousand musicians, with flute, and cornet-a-piston, and trumpet, and violoncello, and hautboys, and trombone, and all the wind and stringed instruments that ever gathered in a Dusseldorf jubilee, should resolve that they would play out of tune and put concord to the rack, and make the place wild with shrieking, and grating, and rasping sounds, they could not make such a pandemonium as that which rages in a sinful soul when God listens to the play of its thoughts, passions, and emotions—discord, life-long discord, maddening discord. The world pays more for discord than it does for consonance. High prices have been paid for music. One man gave $225 to hear the Swedish songstress in New York, and another $625 to hear her in Boston, and another $650 to hear her in Providence. Fabulous prices have been paid for sweet sounds, but far more has been paid for discord. The Crimean war cost $1,700,000,000, and our American civil war over $2,500,000,000, and the war debts of professed Christian nations are about $15,000,000,000. The world pays for this red ticket, which admits it to the saturnalia of broken bones, and death agonies, and destroyed cities, and plowed graves, and crushed hearts, any amount of money Satan asks. —Discord! Discord!

But I have to tell you that the song that the morning stars sang together at the laying of the world's corner stone is to be resumed again. Mozart's greatest overture was composed one night when he was several times overpowered with sleep, and artists say they can tell the places in the music where he was falling asleep and the places where he awakened. So the overture of the morning stars spoken of in my text has been asleep, but it will awaken and be more grandly rendered by the evening stars of the world's existence than by the morning stars, and the vespers will be sweeter than the matins. The work of all good men and women and of all good churches and all reform associations is to bring the race back to the original harmony. The rebellious heart to be attuned, social life to be attuned, commercial ethics to be attuned, internationality to be attuned, hemispheres to be attuned—but by what force and in what way?

In olden time the choristers had a tuning fork with two prongs, and they would strike it on the back of pew or music rack and put it to the ear and then start the tune, and all the other voices would join. In modern orchestra the leader has a complete instrument, richly attuned, and he sounds that, and all the other performers turn the keys of their instruments to make them correspond, and sound the bow over the string, and listen, and sound out over again, until all the keys are screwed to concert pitch, and the discords melt into one great symphony, and the curtain hoists, and the baton taps, and audiences are raptured with Schumann's "Paradise and the Peri" or Rossini's "Stabat Mater" or Bach's "Magnificat" in D or Gounod's "Redemption."

A few days ago I was in Fairbanks weighing scale manufactory of Vermont. Six hundred hands, and they have never had a strike. Complete harmony between labor and capital, the operatives of scores of years in their beautiful homes near by the mansions of the manufacturers, whose invention and Christian behavior made the great enterprise. So all the world over labor and capital will be brought into euphony. You may have heard what is called the "Anvil Chorus," composed by Verdi, a tune played by hammers, great and small, now with mighty stroke, and now with heavy stroke, beating the great iron anvil. That is what the world has got to come to—anvil chorus, yardstick chorus, shuttle chorus, trowel chorus, crowbar chorus, pickax chorus, gold mine chorus, rail track chorus, locomotive chorus. It can be done, and it will be done. So all social life will be attuned by the Gospel harp. There will be as many classes in society as now, but the classes will not be regulated by birth, or wealth, or accident, but by scale of virtue and benevolence, and people will be assigned to their places as good, or very good, or most excellent. So, also, commercial life will be attuned, and there will be twelve in every dozen and sixteen ounces in every pound, and apples at the bottom of the barrel will be as sound as those on top and silk goods will not be cotton, and sellers will not have to charge honest people more than the right price because others will not pay, and goods will come to you corresponding with the sample by which you purchased them, and coffee will not be chickoried and sugar will not be sanded, and milk will not be chalked and adulteration of food will be a state's prison offense. Aye, all things shall be attuned. Elections in England and the United States will no more be a grand carnival of defamation and scurrility, but the elevation of righteous men in a righteous way.

In the sixteenth century the singers, called the Fischer brothers, reached the lowest bass ever recorded, and the highest note ever thrilled was by La Bastardella, and Catalini's voice had a compass of three add a half octaves, but Christianity is more wonderful, for it runs all up and down the greatest heights and the deepest depths of the world's necessity, and it will compass everything and bring it in accord with the song which the morning stars sang at the laying of the world's corner stone. All the sacred music in homes and concert halls and churches tends toward this consummation. Make it more and more hearty. Sing in your families. Sing in your places of business. If we with proper spirit use these faculties, we are rehearsing for the skies.

Heaven is to have a new song, a tremendously new song, but I should not wonder if, as sometime on earth a tune is fashioned out of many tunes, or it is one tune with the variations, so some of the songs of the redeemed may have playing through them the songs of earth, and how thrilling as coming through the great anthem of the saved, accompanied by harpers with their harps, and trumpeters with their trumpets, we should hear some of the strains of Antioch, and Mount Pisgah, and Coronation, and Lenox, and St. Martin's, and Fountain, and Ariel, and Old Hundred. How they would bring to mind the praying circles, and communion days, and the Christmas festivals, and the church worship in which on earth we mingled! I have no idea that when we bid farewell to earth we are to bid farewell to all these grand old Gospel hymns which melted and raptured our souls for so many years. Now, my friends, if sin is discord and righteousness is harmony, let us get out of the one and enter the other. After our dreadful civil war was over, and in the summer of 1864, a great national peace jubilee was held in Boston, and as an elder of this church had been honored by the selection of some of his music, to be rendered on that occasion, I accompanied him to the jubilee. Forty thousand people sat and stood in the great Coliseum erected for that purpose. Thousands of wind and stringed instruments. Twelve thousand trained voices. The masterpieces of all ages rendered, hour after hour, and day after day—Handel's "Judas Maccabaeus," Spohr's "Last Judgment," Beethoven's "Mount of Olives," Haydn's "Creation," Mendelssohn's "Elijah," Meyerbeer's "Coronation March," rolling on and up in surges that billowed against the heavens. The mighty cadence within were accompanied on the outside by the ringing of the bells of the city and cannon on the commons, in exact time with the music discharged by electricity, thundering their awful bars of a harmony that astounded all nations.

Sometimes I bowed my head and wept. Sometimes I stood up in the enchantment, and sometimes the effect was so overpowering I felt I could not endure it. When all the voices were in full chorus, and all the batons in full wave, and all the orchestra in full triumph, and a hundred anvils under mighty hammers were in full clang, and all the towers of the city rolled in their majestic sweetness, and the whole building quaked with the boom of thirty cannon, Parepa Rosa, with a voice that will never again be equaled on earth until the archangelic voice proclaims that time shall be no longer, rose above all other sounds in her rendering of our national air, the "Star Spangled Banner." It was too much for a mortal, and quite enough for an immortal, to hear, and while some fainted, one womanly spirit, released under its power, sped away to be with God.

O Lord, our God, quickly usher in the whole world's peace jubilee, and all islands of the sea join the five continents, and all the voices and musical instruments of all nations combine, and all the organs that ever sounded requiem of sorrow sound only a grand march of joy, and all the bells that tolled for burial ring for resurrection, and all the cannon that ever hurled death across the nations sound to eternal victory, and over all the acclaim of earth and minstrelsy of Heaven there will be heard one voice sweeter and mightier than any human or angelic voice—a voice once full of tears, but then full of triumph—the voice of Christ saying: "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last." Then at the laying of the top stone of the world's history the same voices shall be heard as when, at the laying of the world's corner stone, "the morning stars sang together."

INFANT THEOLOGY.

A small boy not far from Boston was guilty of some outrageous mischief, which he performed alone in a closed room, but which was quickly brought to his door. When his mother remonstrated with the youth he met her reproof by the bold assertion:

"You didn't see me do it."
"No," she replied, solemnly, "but God did."

"Well," the urchin retorted with an air of contemptuous superiority, "I guess God ain't going round giving away all he see in this house."—Boston Courier.

Won't Have a Show.

It was very late and Brown was steering Robinson homeward.

"What will you say to your wife?" Brown asked.

"Not a (hic) word," said Robinson.

"Why not?"

"I won't have a (hic) chance."

WHEN you receive a note from your lady-love, and kiss it (as, of course, you are expected to do), why is it like the nightmare? Because it is the ink-you-buss.

"MATSUNKEE" is Japanese for daisy. You can call your girl or another man's wife a "matsunkee" now with impunity.

INDIANA STATE NEWS.

—In digging a ditch in Montgomery County, in the section of Black Creek, a discovery has been made by the workmen that may prove valuable in the future. In that section the land is very marshy, and when a depth of about ten feet was reached a white substance was found, which seems to have no bottom. When it is first dug up a white, watery substance oozes out. After it had been exposed to the air for about two days it becomes very black, and burns readily, making a bright, warm fire. It is supposed to be coal in the first formation. A man who steps in the substance can scarcely get out.

—A daring attempt was made recently to wreck a passenger train near Hammond. Some one broke open a switch on the Midland Central side-track, one mile west of Hammond. The way-freight running ahead and on the time of the passenger train, dashed into the cars on the side, overturning the engine and breaking some fifteen or twenty cars. The engine was buried beneath the cars. The train men saved themselves by jumping. Damage about $15,000. Had the crowded passenger train been on time, the loss of life would have been appalling.

—A strong pressure has been brought upon the Evansville Police Commissioners to enforce the Sunday-closing law, and the whisky men have made a desperate effort to prevent the enforcement. The matter was brought to a head by a decision of the Board that the Sunday-closing law will go into effect immediately, and every saloon will also be compelled to close every night at 11 o'clock. Much feeling has been engendered by the agitation, and a strong effort will be made at the next election to select a Legislature friendly to a repeal of the law.

—Patents have been issued to Indiana inventors as follows: Charles E. Anderson, La Porte, fence machine; Samuel E. Harsh, Wabash, shafting; Thomas C. Fisher, Anderson, grain cradle attachment; Alfred W. Hughey, Arcadia, car coupling; Jacob A. Parker, Terre Haute, car wheel; David Senior and H. Fetton, Madison, carding machine; Robert B. Short, Union Mills, railway switch; Oswald Smith, Tell City, assignor of one-half to W. T. Pyne, Louisville, Ky., feed regulator for roller mills.

—At Montpelier Wm. Barnes, the murderer of Theodore Leffingwell, was found guilty of murder in the first degree, and sentenced to ninety-nine years in the penitentiary. The crime for which Barnes received the life sentence was the killing of Theodore Leffingwell, in that place, last April. Barnes, who is a large man, met his victim on a foot-bridge, and, picking up a small boulder, struck him on the head, crushing his skull. The trial lasted five days, and the result is generally approved.

—A panther of large dimensions is causing quite a scare among the people residing between Charlestown and Sellersburg. One day recently it was seen on the Ganote farm by Mr. Geo. Richardson, who shot at it, but missed his mark. A number of persons banded themselves together to hunt the animal down, but failed to find it.

—A boy named William Denton, 18 years of age, who resides in Harrison County, a short distance from Greenville, was killed recently. The boy was assisting Mr. Sisloff to saw down a tree, which fell, and the boy was struck by a limb and instantly killed. His skull was crushed and his brains knocked out.

—District Assembly No. 3115, Knights of Labor, the oldest assembly in New Albany, at one time attaining a membership of 800, but now reduced to seventy, has decided, without a dissenting voice, to close operations. The charter and secret work of the order will be sent to headquarters.

—A freight train on the Nickel Plate Railway ran into a freight train on the Vandalia road at Hittard Station, where both roads cross. Engineer Newt Baughman, of the Nickel Plate train, jumped and alighted on his head, causing a fracture of the skull, producing very serious injuries.

—Frank Snyder, of Piercetown, aged 16 years, while out hunting, accidentally shot himself, causing death shortly afterward. He saw some game and jumped out of a buggy, dragging his gun with him, which was discharged, the contents taking effect in his bowels.

—Samuel Wright, a wealthy citizen of Farmland, was seriously hurt at gas well No. 2 recently. The well had been "shot," packed, and piped out of the derrick and fired without warning. His face and hands were badly burned.

—John H. Heyer, a night conductor on the Cincinnati, Wabash and Michigan road, while assisting to make up his train in the yards at Anderson, was caught under a freight car and crushed so badly that he died.

—James Langley, residing in the north-eastern part of Grant County, committed suicide by blowing his brains out with a shotgun. He was about 30 years old and unmarried. No cause is assigned for the act.

—It is reported that De Pauw College, of New Albany, will be put in thorough repair next spring and that it will be opened as an adjunct to De Pauw University at Greencastle, with a full faculty.

—Gas well No. 1, at Madison, has been abandoned at a depth of 1,004 feet, and work on well No. 2, at the east end of the city, will begin at once. Only a light flow of gas was obtained at a depth of 300 feet.

—Articles of incorporation of the Central Indiana Railroad Company have been filed at Indianapolis. The proposed line is from Fort Wayne to Terre Haute.

—Considerable interest has been excited by the discovery of oil within two miles of Vincennes. The exact location of the find is still a secret, but its existence is vouched for by a gentleman of high standing.

—A young son of H. B. Hulott, clerk of Montgomery County, while trying to get on a moving freight train at Crawfordsville, was thrown under the train, and so seriously injured that he died.

—Willie Dreier was killed on his father's farm near Fort Wayne. While driving a team he fell on the heels of the horses, receiving fatal injuries.

—While hunting, Isaac Mackay, a wealthy farmer of Milton Township, Jefferson County, shot himself through the heart. Death was instantaneous. He leaves a large family.

—Howard Taylor, a miner, was caught under two tons of sand-rock and instantly killed in Whitmore's mine, at Washington. He was 40 years old and leaves a widow and nine children.

—J. H. Taylor was shot and mortally wounded by some one in ambush while standing in his door at Jeffersonville.

—Destructive forest fires are raging in the vicinity of Decker and Hazelton.

—The remains of a woman which had lain in a vault at Indianapolis since 1856 are supposed to have become petrified. An investigation is to be had.

—Mrs. Morris, of Elkhart, an estimable elderly lady, prominent in the Baptist Church, fell dead from heart disease.

—A thirty-foot gas gusher is reported at Aurora. It is said the flame can be seen from either Harris or Cleves.

—Hon. David H. Colerick, the oldest member of the Allen County (Ind.) Bar, is dead, at the age of 82 years.

—The Supreme Court of Indiana has held that college students have the right to vote.

Hints to Nurses.

Try and be strictly accurate in your answers to the doctor's questions, and never attempt to hide anything from him. Teach yourself to have an approximate idea of medical qualities, and be very accurate when measuring medicines. The following is a table every one who intends to nurse should get by heart: One minim equals one drop; sixty minims equals one fluid drachm, or one teaspoonful; eight fluid drachms equals one fluid ounce, or two tablespoonfuls; twenty fluid ounces equals one pint; half fluid ounce equal one tablespoonful, or two teaspoonfuls. Keep a slate or a piece of paper, and write down anything you may wish to ask the doctor, or that you may think necessary to tell him, so as not to forget. One's memory is very apt to fail one at critical moments, and, besides, your strong personal interest in the patient tends to make you less clear headed than the professional nurse, who, however sympathetic and tender, has not your individual feeling toward the patient. And, above all, if you are allowed to nurse or help in the nursing, do cultivate sufficient common sense to realize that if you neglect your own health you will only give double trouble by breaking down and having to be nursed yourself, while you injure your patient by failing just at the time when, perhaps, your services are most needed. Because you are not a coward, do not be foolhardy. Remember, it is not only for your own sake that you should be cautious about infection; there are cases where people in direct contact with the sick have not caught the disease themselves, and yet have transmitted it badly to some total outsider. Never go near an infectious case, if you can help it, fasting or when thoroughly tired, and never, on any account, stand so that the air blows on to you from the patient, for which reason never stand between the sick bed and the fire if there is one.
When nursing or helping to nurse an infectious case always keep a solution of carbolic acid or some other disinfectant, in which to dip your hands after attending to the patient; never go near other people if you can help it in the clothes you have been wearing in the sick room. Never whisper in a sick room, it is far more exasperating to the sick than any ordinary talking; do not wear creaky boots, but at the same time do not cultivate a habit of slipping about in list slippers or stocking soles, or you may give your invalid a most unnecessary start. Try and be your natural self as much as you can; sick people are often, by reason of their sickness, prone to suspicion, and you will lose your influence if they lose their trust in you. Especially is this the case with children, and it is just from these you may require implicit obedience and confidence at some crisis; and if they have learned to doubt you it will double the uphill battle you have to fight. Study the sick and learn to manage them by yielding to them. Attend to their wishes and fancies and learn their idiosyncracies, and by this means you will treble your usefulness.
—London Exchange.

In Love with a Married Man.

A group of young ladies were standing on the front steps of an elegant residence, as a gentleman in a silk hat and Prince Albert coat passed by.
"Oh! what a handsome, stylish gentleman!" exclaimed one of the number,
"why, I'm just in love with him, who is he, Grace? Do you know him?"
"Yes," answered the one addressed as Grace, "but you mustn't fall in love with him for he is a married man; and you know it is wicked to love a married man!" she added solemnly.
"Why, is that so?" inquired another of the group; "Grace, you frighten me?"
"Why?"
"Because I love devotedly and unreservedly a married man at the present time."
"Terrible!" cried Grace, and the others looked interesting and inquiring.
"And I will not give up loving him!"
defiantly.
"Is his wife living?"
"Yes."
"Well you must not do it! It is wrong, it is wicked," growing eloquent.
"I don't care!" obstinately.
"Who is he?" cried another.
"My father." — Sunday National.

The first iron ore to be discovered in this country was found in Virginia in 1745.

Bartholdi's Great Work.

The statue of Liberty enlightening the world, which stands on Bedloe's Island, in the harbor of New York, is one of the most sublime artistic conceptions of modern times.
The torch of the goddess lights the nations of the earth to peace, prosperity, and progress, through Liberty. But "liberty" is an empty word to the thousands of poor women enslaved by physical ailments a hundredfold more tyrannical than any Nero. To such sufferers Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription holds forth the promise of a speedy cure. It is a specific in all those derangements, irregularities and weaknesses which make life a burden to so many women. The only medicine sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. See guarantee printed on wrapper inclosing bottle.

The Jackass and the Citizen.

A Jackass who has been Elected to the Common Council of his Town was one day called upon by a Citizen, who presented a Petition for a new Sidewalk on the North Side of Plunkett Avenue, and bowed himself very low and stood flat in hand to await the Pleasure of the Hon. Jackass.
"Ah! but how times have changed!"
mused the Office-Holder; "a few months ago you would not even Notice me on the Street. Now you bow before me!"

"Make no Mistake, Alderman," replied the Citizen. "In American Politics we bow to the Office and have as little to do with the Man as Possible."
Moral—All old Politicians have long Understood this and governed themselves Accordingly. — Detroit Free Press.

PASTEUR proves the value of the preventive of septic fever by showing that in France, during the last five years, the mortality of inoculated sheep has ranged from 0.75 to 1.08 per cent, that of non-inoculated being 10 per cent.
Only 0.28 to 0.50 per cent. of inoculated cattle died; and 5 per cent. of others.

The Five Sisters.

There were five fair sisters, and each had an name.
Flora would fain be a fashionable beauty.
Scholarly Susan's select society was her aim.
Coquettish Cora cared more for good looks;
Anna, kind-hearted, aspired at no less;
Sensible Sarah sought just her good health.

So she took Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and grew healthy and blooming.
Cora's beauty quickly faded; Susan's eyesight faded from over-study; Flora became nervous and fretful in striving after fashion, and a sickly family kept Anna's husband poor.
But sensible Sarah grew daily more healthy, charming, and intelligent, and she married rich.

PEOPLE who are not acquainted with grief never saw a superior man show a woman how to sharpen a lead pencil.

The Popular Thoroughfare.

The Wisconsin Central Line, although a comparatively new factor in the railroad systems of the Northwest, has acquired an enviable popularity. Through careful attention to details, its service is as near perfection as might be looked for. The train attendants seem to regard their trusts as individual property and as a result the public is served par excellence. The road now runs solid through fast trains between Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul, and Minneapolis with Pullman's best and unequalled dining-cars; it also runs through, solid sleepers between Chicago, Ashland, Duluth, and the famous mining regions of Northern Wisconsin and Michigan.

Consumption Surely Cured.

To the Editor:—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above-named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy vention that will make old boots as straight as

Chronic Catarrh

Cannot be cured by local applications. It is a constitutional disease, and requires a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, working through the blood, eradicates the impurity which causes and promotes the disease, and soon effects a permanent cure. At the same time Hood's Sarsaparilla builds up the whole system, and makes you feel renewed in strength and health. Be sure to get Hood's.

"I suffered severely from chronic catarrh, arising from impure blood. It became very bad, causing soreness of the bronchial tubes and a troublesome cough, which gave great anxiety to my friends and myself, as two brothers died from bronchial consumption. I tried many medicines, but received no benefit. I was at last induced to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, and I am not the same man in health or feelings. My catarrh is cured, my throat is entirely well, and a dyspepsia trouble, with sick headache, have all disappeared." E. M. LINCOLN, 35 Chambers St., Boston.

FRIDAY NOVEMBER 18, 1887.

One would almost conclude from reading the Dispatch, that Auburn is the only town in the county.

M. T. Bishop begun the erection of a large building on his corner lot at the east end of Main street, this week. He will occupy the lower floor as a business room, while the second story will be fitted up as a public hall.

Union Thanksgiving services will be held in the Lutheran church in this place, on Thursday evening, Nov. 24th. Rev. J. A. Thomas will deliver the discourse. A general invitation is extended for all to take part in this service.

The east end of St. Joe is experiencing quite a building boom. M. T. Bishop is putting up a large business room, Wm. Leighty is building a new livery barn, and Wash Woodcox is adding quite an addition to his residence.

C. A. Washler of this place, and Wm. Rhodes of Spencerville have made application for new liquor licenses. If they are men of good moral characters, nothing can prevent their getting a license, if not they are not entitled to it. That's the law.

Dr. Bowman was seen going down the street the other day with two crutches and a cane. We hardly knew what to make out of it, but finally came to the conclusion that Doc was expecting to get into a racket with somebody, and in case he got crippled up, he would be prepared for it.

The Supreme Court has reversed its decision in regard to the drive well royalty. Quite a large number had already paid the royalty, and it is probable that they can never recover the amount. It was a swindle from beginning to end, and those who delayed the payment of it are just ten dollars ahead.

John Davis came rushing over to the saw-mill the other day, and wanted to get a two inch auger, right-away-off-quick. John was "ox" cited. It seems that while ditching on his farm, he had struck rock, and having heard so much about there being gas in Trenton rock, he thought perhaps he had struck it, and rushed up to get an auger, to bore through and let the gas out. The last we heard from it the gas was still in the rock.

A SOUND LEGAL OPINION.—E. Bainbridge Munday Esq., County Atty., Clay Co., Tex. says: "Have used Electric Bitters with most happy results. My brother also was very low with Malarial Fever and Jaundice, but was cured by timely use of this medicine. Am satisfied Electric Bitters saved his life."

D. I. Wilcoxson, of Horse Cave, Ky. adds a like testimony, saying: He positively believes he would have died, had it not been for Electric Bitters. This great remedy will ward off, as well as cure all Malaria Diseases, and for all Kidney, Liver and Stomach Disorders stands unequalled. Price 50 cts. and $1.00 at W. C. Patterson's Drug Store.

OUR CORRESPONDENTS.

SPENCERVILLE.

Rev. Thomas was to have lectured here Monday evening, but he failed to put in an appearance.

The Lutherans will give a Missionary Concert, at the church, Sunday evening, Nov. 27th. Mrs. Hunter, a great worker in that cause will be present.

COBURNTOWN.

J. M. Milliman and Wills Beber were in Garrett Tuesday.

Aunt Electa Abel is visiting with the family of R. G. Coburn this week.

Josh Lounsberry, of St. Joe, was at R. G. Coburn's Tuesday on official business.

Corn husking is about finished, and the fine weather for the last few days will give every one a chance to finish up nicely.

Henry Milliman will start for Tennessee in a week or two, for the benefit of his health. Wash Ryan will go with him.

B. A. Hadsell is haying the Richmond swamp grubbed out, and preparing it for a corn-field for next spring. Jake Baker is also doing some grubbing.

There will be a thanksgiving sermon by Eld. Thomas, at the corners Thursday, and a thanksgiving dinner after the sermon. Everybody is invited to come and have a good time.

Cam Hadsell thinks there is more money in making holes to lay in the ground than there is to drive them down end-ways. No water yet at Mr. Cole's and down ninety seven feet. Stick to it Cam.

George thinks his pa is awful anxious to get to work early in the morning, or he wouldn't leave the horses harnessed over night; but then you know we sometimes most always can't tell, and forget ourselves.

CONCORD.

Will Koch's baby has been sick.

George Draggoo is tiling his farm.

George Dilley's health is improving.

Emma Morr visited friends in Coburntown last week.

College day has been postponed for an indefinite period.

Mrs. M. E. Baker entertained friends from Garrett last Sunday.

Mrs. N. Hoffman is again able to be around, after an illness of several weeks.

Grandfather Houck is very feeble and confined to his room most of the time.

Grandma Baker's twin sister, Mrs. G. Brown, visited with her last Sabbath.

George Simanton and wife were the guests of Mr. Keller and wife last Sunday.

Ayle Simanton and family visited in the family of Callie Brown of Auburn, last Sunday.

Several of our young people attended the concert at Rehoboth last Saturday evening, and say that it was the finest entertainment of the season.

Mrs. M. E. Baker and Mattie Buchanan have purchased dresses of that elegant five-cent dress goods, at the popular store of Case & Olds.

Belle lost her Bone and Nettie found it. We would not say anything about it; but Belle and us are good friends, and we thought she would want to know about where that Bone was.

There are sly rumors of a wedding in our midst in the near future. At least a certain doctor of Valparaiso is very attentive. We dare not mention the lady's name, because she said if we did she would give us "harky."

The Hicksville News says: "The farmers of Herking township, Fairfield county, Ohio, organized a rat hunt, and caught 250,000 rat-tails. What a whopper! That reminds us a story that has been told in this place, of a man over to Newville, who tore down an old barn, and killed all the rats there was under it, and cut off their tails and gathered them up, and there was just three bushels of tails."

Rev. Charles Merica, pastor of the M. E. church at Nappanee, and who assisted in the funeral services of Orange Fales, last week, was formerly principal of the schools at this place. His friends here will be glad to learn that he is making a success of his chosen profession.

Jonathan Shull returned from a short visit to Oceana county, Mich., last week, where he had been visiting his son-in-law, Lewis Lake, who has recently moved there. He says that in some respects he likes that country as well as this, but on the whole he thinks he would prefer to remain where he is.

George Wilson, of the City Flouring Mills at Hicksville, was in town Saturday. George has fully recovered from his recent severe illness, and seems heartier than ever. He informs us that their mill is kept very busy and that they have to run half of the nights in order to keep up with the demand for their flour.

Wm. Leighty has bought the old barn west of the Methodist church, and will move it on to his lot, next to his other barn, and will re-roof it and repair it in good shape, thus giving him three times as much barn room as he has at present. Mr. Leighty was compelled to enlarge his facilities in order to meet the wants of his growing trade.

The debates at Jenkins' school house have commenced for the winter, and are held on each Friday evening. The usual weighty questions will be brought forth and dissected, and probably, a little later on, when the weather gets cooler, they will tackle that old subject of the motherhood of a chicken; that is, if a hen sets on an egg and hatches it, who is the mother of the young chicken, the hen that laid the egg, or the one that hatched it? Its a deep question and ought to be settled before many more generations pass away.

A. E. Swincock, St. Joe, Ind.

I have just laid the true invention that ex. being discovered every day. If a person would have told me fifty years ago that such and such things would have come to pass, I could not have believed it; not even if I had saw it with my own eyes. Just the other day I kept on a new thing that completely staggers me, a gude deed moor at least than I've ever ben stumped up to the present tyme. You kno ther has awlways ben a gude deed ov trabel to tel wen an eg was gude, or wen it was partly gude, or wen it contained a young chicken. Sam fokes don't cair much, an then agin ther ar others who ar so mity particular that tha cant go an eg that iz the least bit rottin. Now this fello we speak ov, has inventud an automatick indelible eg marker, that is attached to the reer ov the chicken, (see cut) an it so constructed that wen the hen lays an eg it marks the date that it was laid rite on the eg. Fur instance it wil read on the eg like this: "this eg was laid Nov. 15th, 1887." The grate advantages ov this invenshun can easily be seen, as wen yu go to the store to by eggs yu can select the latest dates and therby awlways get fresh laid eggs. Truif, this is an age ov progresshun, and a purson hardly knos one day weather he'll live to sea the next.

SUNSHINE AND SHOWER.

Two children stood at their father's gate,
Two girls with golden hair,
And their eyes were bright and their faces glad Because the morn was fair;
For they said, "We will take that long, long walk
To the Hawthorne copse to-day,
And gather great bunches of lovely flowers
From off the scented May;
And oh! we shall be so happy there,
"Till he sorrow to come away."

As the children spoke a little cloud
Pressed slowly across the sky,
And one looked up in her sister's face
With a tear-drop in her eye,
But the other one said, "Oh, heed it not,
'Tis far too fair to rain."
That little cloud may chase the sky
For other clouds is vain.
And so the children's voices rose
In merriment again.

But ere the morning hours waned
The sky had changed its hue,
And that one cloud had chased away
The whole great heaven of blue.
The rain came down in heavy drops,
The wind began to blow,
And the children in their nice warm room
Went fretting and forlorn;
For they said, "When we have aught in store
It always happens so."

New these two fair-haired sisters
Had a brother at sea,
A little midshipman aboard
The old ant Victory.
And on the self-same evening when
They stood beside the pier,
His ship was wrecked and on a raft
He stood and died there,
With the other sailors round him,
Prepared to meet their fate.

Beyond the shore the ocean lay dead,
The land with it was green,
And its little brook that ran
Like a barter on the shore,
But always there the rain was there,
With search and stillness,
Their throats were parched, and their thirst,
And they knelt down, one by one,
And prayed to God for a miracle,
And a miracle to wait them on.

And so that little cloud was sent,
That shower in the rev green,
And as a bird before the rain,
Their barque was but a driven,
And some few moments after,
When the children and once more,
And their brother told the story,
They knew it was the hour
When they had with off sunshine,
And God had sent the shower.

THE PRECIOUS SPY-GLASS.

BY A. D. BAILIE.

"That's just the best glass that ever sailor-man clapped eyes to," said bluff Capt. Martin, as, seated in his snug cabin, I took from a rack a big, old-fashioned ship's spy-glass, or telescope, bearing a silver plate with inscription:

"The English Government presented my old father, Captain of the clipper ship Martha Washington, with that glass for saving a British crew at the risk of his own vessel. It's the most precious thing I have on earth, except my wife and my ship—and it saved me from dying by the rope on the gallows." The Captain took the instrument from me and patted it lovingly as he nursed it in his arms.

"Give us the yarn, Cap!"

"Well, I don't mind—maybe you can make a story out of it."

"I was board ship with father until he died—mother had gone three years before. I had no relations, few friends. I thought I'd try a land cruise, so I packed this old glass with my little dunnage and hoofs off for the Yankee States.

"Up near the Canada line I got work with a farmer. I knew nothing of farming, but was tall, stout, strong, and willing, just 21, and hearty as live oak. I was on that farm at Round Lake for over a year, and folks got to like me very well. There was one I liked more than well; that was Jean, the adopted daughter of an old Frenchman, named Bazine, who, with his wife and nephew lived in a very lonely old house down on the lake shore. Jean was as trim built a little craft as ever carried tidy rigging. I made chase after first sight of her, and sometimes she showed signs of weakening. She was lightning for work, and old Monseer and Missis Bazine didn't encourage any one that they thought might take her away. Besides, they wanted their sullen, round-shouldered, bad-eyed nephew, Peter Carter, to marry her.

"No one knew anything of old Bazine, except that he came there several years before. He would answer no questions. He must have been rich once, for he had a great sideboard covered with heavy, old-fashioned silver plate. But he was miserly now and cranky in his ways of farming, and in all things else. The people were sure he had lots of money hidden in his house, for he often paid for goods in foreign gold coin.

"Jean and I got to meeting in the early evenings, and I was certain she cared for me. But one night, after all day in the harvest field—we used to have whisky then—what I drank went to my head; my legs were steady, but I felt the liquor and showed it. The old stubborn in me waked up and I walked right to old Bazine's house and asked to see Jean.

"The old man raved and tore and gave me a good cursing, I paying him back in the same.

"Finally Jean put in an appearance, and showed she was mad at me for coming to the house, and also for being half, or more, drunk. What she said riled me, and I turned on my heel and left.

"I felt pretty bad that night. I was mad still, and yet ashamed of myself. I was up at first crack of dawn, and as soon as it was sun-up I goes with this old spy-glass to a rock from which I could see Bazine's house and all its surroundings about a mile away. This was the only point about from which such sight could be obtained. I had discovered it by accident, and I used to lay there in the early evening and watch through the glass for Jean to come out of the house, and make for our meeting place.

"I watched to see her come out that morning, at milking time, intending to hurry over and try to square matters with her, for I had concluded to leave and go to sea again for a while. But she didn't come out, for the reason, as I found long after, that when I left the night before old Bazine had abused me until she stood up for me, then he turned on her and struck her, and she had left the house at once and gone to a girl friend two miles away. I saw some things through this glass that morning, but thought nothing of them at the time. When my boss showed up at breakfast I demanded my wages—was going to leave at once—would give no reason. I was pail and hurried away feeling mad at myself and all creation. I walked to the town, took the stage, went to the railroad and rushed for New York, where I shipped at once on a packet bound for California, and we sailed the same evening. This was in '42, mind you.

"We went round the Horn and made port all safe. Then I got the gold fever and struck oil for the mines. Four years I worked, and at the end was only about $3,000 ahead. I longed to go back to civilization for a while, and I started for the only place on land where I could hope for a welcome—Round Lake; I wanted to hear something of Jean, too.

"I reached there, surprised my old boss, who said he had heard I was dead. He invited me in, though somehow he didn't seem very hearty in his welcome. I sat there an hour when in comes two constables, claps irons on me, and shows me a warrant for my arrest—for murder of old Monseer and Missis Bazine.

"(Of course) I kicked and swore; 'twasn't no good. I landed in the town jail. There I heard the first I knew of the matter. It seems that about 7 o'clock on the morning I left Round Lake so suddenly Peter Carter had rushed to the nearest neighbors and informed them that the old couple had been murdered, their bodies carried off, and the house robbed. He had slept with a friend, he said, about a mile away. Jean had left, and the old people were alone. Their beds were covered with blood, and the house all turned up."

"Whom did he suspect?"

"Why, me—Ben Martin, who had been there the night before drunk, quarrelling with the old man, cursing and threatening him.

"I was looked for; my haste in leaving and refusal to tell why, my every action convinced all of my guilt. I was traced to New York, to the ship in which I sailed, but in those days there was no way of telegraphing ahead to stop me. There was a Ben Martin also in the crew, and he died of tremens on the second day out. This found its way into the papers and the people interested concluded that Martin was a mistake for Marlin, and I was gone.

"Well, I was in a pretty bad fix; but I sends for a lawyer and gives him five hundred out of my pile. He was a mighty white chap—even if he was a lawyer. I'd been overhauling my memory and I gave him some points. He went to work on 'em with a will.

"The day of the trial came, and it was a big day in that town. Peter Carter swore dead against me—how I cursed and threatened the old man; how I had a big stick in my hand; afterwards found, all bloody, in the bedroom; how I had been seen loitering around the house afterwards. He believed, felt sure, that I was the murderer.

"His friend, a stupid lout, swore that Peter slept with him the night of the killing. He couldn't tell what time Peter went away, for he slept until the boss kicked him up.

"Jean, prettier than ever, reluctantly testified that I had returned, curse for curse with old Bazine, but not as bad as Peter Carter stated, and that I had made no threats except that I would 'take the wind out of his sails yet.'

"Other witnesses of little things helped make the case look black for me.

"My lawyer asked that I might tell my own story. I was put on the stand. All listened, and Peter Carter sat down in front of me, with a sneer on his thick, ugly lips.

"I told my story thus:

"On the evening I had the words with old Monseer Bazine I had a big stick in my hand, the one shown here to-day. I did loiter about the house, not very near, for an hour or more after leaving the door step. I hoped to see Jean. I started in desperation, at last to knock again at the door. When I reached the fence I thought what a fool I was and stopped. The dog came at me, I threw my club at him, then walked away and went to my home. I didn't sleep and in the early next morning I went to a point on High Rocks, with my father's spy-glass and lay there looking for Jean to come out to milk the cows. I wanted to go and make up. I could see all the Bazine farm and the lake from where I was, being so high, and the spy-glass made things pretty clear to me. I didn't see Jean, but I did see some things that I thought nothing of then, but can understand now.

"If what you saw has anything to do with this case, you can state it," said the Judge.

"I turned my eyes full on Peter Carter as he sat facing me. His brown face was dirty white, his hands trembled; there was no sneer on his lips now. He tried hard to face me, and couldn't.

"As I lay on that rock," said I, "with my eye to the glass, about a quarter after 5 o'clock that morning, I saw Peter Carter coming up the road from Miller Davis' house. When he reached his uncle's he opened a window in the side and jumped in. In about five minutes he came out of the door, looked around, picked up a stick, which must have been the one I threw over, and saw again to-day. He stood with it, hefting it for a little time, then went into the house. It was full twenty minutes, I guess, before I see him come out with a big bag or bundle on his back, and this he carried down to Bazine's boat in the lake, that was tied to a tree. He put this load in the boat, went back into the house and came out with another sack or bundle and carried it likewise to the boat; then he got in, stood up and sculled the boat into the middle of the lake, where he flung the load overboard. Then he came back, went into the house, and in ten minutes or so was out again with a third or smaller bundle. He laid this down near the fence, went off and got a spade, dug like fury until he made a hole, and in it hid the bag. Then he filled in the dirt, tramped it down, and seemed to scatter rubbish over it. By this time I had concluded Jean was not about. I had heard so much of Bazine's queer ways of doing that I thought little or nothing of Carter's actions.

"I have told the truth, as God is to be my judge. I never harmed that old man nor woman or saw them after that evening. The man who killed the two sits there; his name is Peter Carter."

"During all my story Carter had shown symptoms of terror and a desire to rush from the court room. These evidences had an effect upon those present, but my story was so unexpected that none could believe it yet.

"Directly I stopped my lawyer bounced up.

"May it please the court," he said, "it is known that Mr. Bazine had two large, very prominent front teeth; that they were filled with gold that was very conspicuous. It is also known that old Mrs. Bazine, shortly after she came here, fell and fractured her skull, that Dr. Morrow removed the splinters and over the cavity put a silver plate. I have here—about witnesses. The good neighbors here, believing the old table that Round Lake is bottomless, did not search therein for the bones. I had it done last night, here are two results," and opening a valise he poured out on the table a lot of bones, from these he picked two skulls, one with great, projecting, gold-plugged front teeth, and the other with a small silver plate on its top, held there by a slight bit of scalp.

"There was an unearthly yell from Carter, the first sound he had uttered since I began to speak; he threw himself upon the floor as the two terrible objects were thrust under his eyes. 'Lord have mercy upon me! Kill me! Hang me!' were his cries.

"The confession thus given was so complete that I was at once released. Peter Carter was carried to jail in the irons I had worn from it. He died of terror and remorse before being brought to trial. The third bag, buried at the fence, was dug up, before the legal authorities. In it was all the fine, heavy silver plate.

"Carter, as only relative of old Bazine, had administered and taken possession of his entire estate. But in looking into a tea urn, among the recesses of a silver, a will was found, which Bazine acknowledges Jean as his true, not only adopted, daughter, and leaves her all his property at the death of his wife, except $1,000 to his nephew, Peter Carter.

"As all between her and the wealth were gone, Jean came in for a nice little fortune. It helped me buy an interest in the first ship I commanded, and has fixed me so sure that I never fear the future. If you'll come up to my house on Sunday night and have a glass of grog—you'll meet Jean, my wife.

The Price Paid for Him.

Look at the Maine man, I saw there in the red den of a dentist, not even on sneaking terms with him. You might not think a man a great sorcerer that he has any peculiarities whatever, but the other day he came down with a terrible tooth-ache—so bad that he reared and kicked at "black" all within thirty seconds, till this world ceased to have any attraction for the man who was entertaining it. Well, he just couldn't stand it any longer, and started post-haste for dentist in a neighboring town.

"The proprietor of a hardware store in close proximity to this dentist was standing in the door of his store that afternoon when he heard a most terrible and ear-splitting shriek proceeding from the office of the man of teeth. He had become accustomed to means and subdued exclamation from that quarter, but never had he heard such bellowing as now pierced the air. His curiosity was so thoroughly aroused that a little later on he walked into the dentist's office and said:—

"Whom have you been butchering over here? I never heard such a yell in my life."

"Oh," replied the extractor of molars, "that was old John Tarbox from T— He had a tooth out."

"Had a tooth out!" replied the visitor, "well, I should think so, and it must have come mighty hard to fetch such a roar as that."

"Oh, dear, no," said the dentist; "he didn't make that noise when I pulled the tooth. It was afterward."

"Afterward?"

"Why, yes," was the reply. "The tooth came easily enough. The time he fetched that cry of agony was when I charged him 50 cents for doing the job!"—Leviston Journal.

Cast His First Vote for Jefferson.

Josiah Graston, an old gentleman residing in Belton County, Texas, is certainly deserving of mention. He was born at Lovelady Crossing, on the Catawba River, Burke County, North Carolina, in the year 1778. When a lad he went with his parents to Tennessee, and resided in that State until the year 1865, when he went to Texas and settled there. Mr. Graston is proud of the fact that his first vote was cast for Thomas Jefferson for President, and he has been voting the straight Democratic ticket ever since. He gets about very well. He lives almost entirely in the past, recounting scenes and incidents of seventy and eighty years ago as though they belonged to last year.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

you to start, and when even the slightest moment abnormally worry you, know three things, viz.:
1st, that your nerves are weak; 2d, that you need a tonic; 3d, that its name is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the promptest, safest, most popular article of its class. The nerves are susceptible of being acted on only by penetrating and invigorating. Nerve diseases and remedies have their origin, but in the brain, and if they are to be cured, they are to be cured in the brain.
The Bitters before referred to, and a wide class of the same during the day before referred to, is is far more likely to enter the brain, yielding more than repeated doses of any other. It person, doubtless, inactivity of the kidneys and liver, fever and other ailments, and other ailments are always associated and subdued by it.

The First Spinning Frame.
The first spinning frame made in this country, which has been temporarily intrusted to the Brown University for safe keeping, will soon be sent to the Patent Office at Washington. Samuel Slater, the inventor, introduced it into the old spinning mill at Pawtucket, R. I., about the year 1790. It was first started in a clothier's shop of that town, together with two other machines of a somewhat similar pattern.
In a year and a half it is said that they over-stocked the market, as several thousand tons of yarn had accumulated in that time, despite the manufacturer's efforts to dispose of it. The machine is still in excellent order, considering its great age.

"The Farmers' Poultry Raising Guide."
This is the title of a new and valuable book on poultry raising for profit. This book answers in advance every possible question in respect to keeping and caring for poultry, and gives in the plainest possible manner all needed instructions to enable beginners or old hands to carry on the business successfully, and make money. If you desire to know how to make hens lay the year round; how to fatten market poultry quickly; how to dress and ship poultry and sell eggs to obtain the highest prices; how to build inexpensive hen houses and yards; how to discover, prevent, and cure all diseases of poultry; how to select and obtain choice breeds; and how men and women of long experience in the business make money, then send at once for a copy of THE FARMERS' POULTRY RAISING GUIDE, published by L. S. JOHNSON & CO., 222 Custom House Street, Boston, Mass. Price 25 cents. This book is profusely illustrated with engravings of model poultry houses and runs, also many of the best breeds of hens, ducks, turkeys, and geese.
This work presents a matter of supreme importance to everybody, but especially to women, children, and invalids, for there is probably no way by which a small but constant cash income can be secured with so little effort as by keeping and caring for hens. From now until next March the price of eggs will advance higher and higher each month. Do not therefore, delay, but send at once and get a copy of this valuable book. During the season of high prices the hens should be kept busy. For 50 cents in stamps Johnson & Co. will send postpaid a copy of THE FARMERS' POULTRY RAISING GUIDE and two 25-cent packs of Sheridan's
Powder to make hens lay, or they will send a 25-cent tin can of Powder at regular rate
($1.50) and a copy of the GUIDE free.

Itching Piles.
Symptoms—Moisture; intense itching and stinging; most at night; worse by scratching.
If allowed to continue tumors form, which often bleed and ulcerate, becoming very sore.
Swayne's Ointment stops the itching and bleeding, heals ulceration, and in many cases removes the tumors. It is equally efficacious

THE DUTY OF PARENTS.

Dr. Talmage's Discourse at the Tabernacle.

The Extremes of Discipline and Leniency—Children as Often Ruined by Indulgence as by Tyranny—The Proper Treatment of the Young.

BROOKLYN, Nov. 13.—The weekly publication of Dr. Talmage's sermons is beyond parallel. Beside the English speaking nations, including Australia and New Zealand, the sermons are regularly translated into the languages of Germany, France, Italy, Denmark, Norway, Russia, and India. The gentlemen having in charge the publication of these sermons inform us that in this country, every week, 13,000,000 copies of the entire sermon are printed, and about 4,000,000 in other lands, making over 17,000,000 per week. A similar arrangement is now being made for the publication of Dr. Talmage's Friday evening talks.

The subject of the sermon to-day was "Parental Blunders," and the text was I. Samuel iv, 18: "He fell from off the seat backward by the side of the gate, and his neck brake, and he died; for he was an old man, and heavy." Dr. Talmage said:

This is the end of a long story of parental neglect. Judge Eli was a good man, but he let his two boys, Hophni and Phinehas, do as they pleased, and through over-indulgence they went to ruin. The blind old Judge, 98 years of age, is seated at the gate waiting for the news of an important battle in which his two sons were at the front. An express is coming with tidings from the battle. This blind nonagenarian puts his hand behind his ear and listens and cries: "What meaneth the noise of this tumult?" An excited messenger, all out of breath with the speed, said to him: "Our army is defeated. The sacred chest, called the ark, is captured, and your sons are dead on the field." No wonder the father fainted and expired. The domestic tragedy in which these two sons were the tragedians had finished its fifth and last act. "He fell from off the seat backward by the side of the gate and his neck brake, and he died; for he was an old man, and heavy."

Eli had made an awful mistake in regard to his children. The Bible distinctly says: "His sons made themselves vile and he restrained them not." Oh, the 10,000 mistakes in rearing children, mistakes of parents, mistakes of teachers in day school and Sabbath classes, mistakes which we all make. Will it not be useful to consider them?

This country is going to be conquered by a great army, compared with which that of Baldwin I., and Nerves, and Alexander, and Grant, and Lee, all put together, were in numbers insignificant. They will capture all our pulpits, storehouses, factories, and halls of legislation, all our shipping, all our wealth, and all our honors. They will take possession of all authority, from the United States presidency down to the humblest constabulary—of everything between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. They are on the march now, and they halt neither day nor night. They will soon be here, and all the present active population of this country must surrender and give way. I refer to the great army of children. Whether they shall take possession of everything for good or for bad depends upon the style of preparation through which they pass on their way from cradle to throne. Cicero acknowledges he kept in his desk a collection of prefaces for books, which prefaces he could at any time attach to anything he wanted to publish for himself or others; and parents and teachers have all prepared the preface of every young life under their charge, and not only the preface, but the appendix, whether the volume be a poem or a farce. Families, and schools, and legislatures are in our day busily engaged in discussing what is the best mode of educating children. Before this question almost every other dwindle into insignificance, while dependent upon its proper solution is the welfare of governments and ages eternal. Macaulay tells of the war which Frederick II. made against Queen Maria Theresa. And one day she appeared before the august diet, wearing mourning for her father, and held up in her arms before them her child, the Archduke. This so wrought upon the officers and deputies of the people that with half-drawn swords they broke forth in the war cry, "Let us die for our Queen, Maria Theresa!" So, this morning, realizing that the boy of to-day is to be the ruler of the future, the popular sovereign, I hold him before the American people to arouse their enthusiasm in his behalf and to evoke their oath for his defense, his education, and his sublime destiny.

If a parent, you will remember when you were aroused to these great responsibilities, and when you found that you had not done all required after you had admired the tiny hands, and the glossy hair, and the bright eyes that lay in the cradle, you suddenly remembered that that hand would yet be raised to bless the world with its benediction, or to smite it with a curse. In Ariosto's great poem there is a character called Itu giero, who has a shield of ineffable splendor, but it is kept veiled save on certain occasions, and when uncovered it startled and overwhelmed his beholder, who before had no suspicion of its brightness. My hope to-day is to uncover the destiny of your child or student, about which you may have no special appreciation, and flash upon you the splendor of its immortal nature. Behold the shield and the sword of its coming conflict.

I propose in this discourse to set forth what I consider to be some of the errors prevalent in the training of children.

First: I remark that many err in too great severity or too great leniency of family government. Between parental tyranny and ruinous laxity of discipline there is a medium. Sometimes the father errs on one side, and the mother on the other side. Good family government is all important. Anarchy and misrule in the domestic circle is the forerunner of anarchy and misrule in the State. What a repulsive spectacle is a home without order or discipline, disobedience and impudence, and anger and falsehood lifting their horrid front in the place which should be consecrated to all that is holy and peaceful and beautiful. In the attempt to avoid all this, and bring the children under proper laws and regulations, parents have sometimes carried themselves with great rigor. John Howard, who was merciful to the prisons and fazezzettos, was merciless in the treatment of his children. John Milton knew everything but how to train his family. Severe and unreasonable was he in his carriage toward them. He made them read to him in four or five languages, but would not allow them to learn any of them, for he said that one tongue was enough for a woman. Their reading was mechanical drudgery, when, if they had understood the languages they read, the employment of reading might have been a luxury. No wonder his children despised him, and stealthily sold his books, and hoped for his death. In all ages there has been need of a society for the prevention of cruelty to children. When Barbara was put to death by her father because she had countermanded his order, and had three windows put in a room instead of two, this cruel parent was a type of many who have acted the Nero and the Robespierre in the home circle. The heart sickens at what you sometimes see, even in families that pretend to be Christian—perpetual scolding, and hair pulling, and ear boxing, and thumping, and stamping, and fault finding, and teasing, until the children are vexed beyond bounds and growl in the sleeve, and pout, and rebel, and vow within themselves that in after days they will retaliate for the cruelties practiced. Many a home has become as full of dispute as was the home of John O'Groat, who built his house at the most northerly point in Great Britain. And tradition says that the house had eight windows, and eight doors, and a table of eight sides, because he had eight children and the only way to keep them out of bitter quarrel was to have a separate appointment for each one of them.

That child's nature is too delicate to be worked upon by sledge hammer, and gouge, and pile driver. Such fierce lashing, instead of breaking the high mettle to bit and trace, will make it dash off the more uncontrollable. Many seem to think that children are flax—not fit for use till they have been hatched and swinged. Some one talking to a child said: "I wonder what makes that tree out there so crooked." The child replied: "I suppose it was trod upon while it was young." In some families all the discipline is concentrated upon one child's head. If anything is done wrong, the supposition is that George did it. He broke the latch. He left open the gate. He hacked the banisters. He whittled sticks on the carpets. And George shall be the scapegoat for all domestic misunderstandings and suspicions. If things get wrong in the culinary department, in comes the mother and says, angrily: "Where is George?" If business matters are perplexing at the store, in comes the father at night and says, angrily: "Where is George?" In many a household there is such a one singled out for suspicion and castigation. All the sweet flowers of his soul blasted under this perpetual north-east storm, he curses the day in which he was born. Safer the child in an ark of bulrushes on the Nile, among crocodiles, than in an elegant mansion, amid such domestic gorgons. A mother was passing along the street one day, and came up to her little child, who did not see her approach, and her child was saying to her playmate: "You good-for-nothing little scamp, you come right into the house this minute or I will beat you till the skin comes off." The mother broke in, saying: "Why, Lizzie, I am surprised to hear you talk like that to any one!" "Oh," said the child, "I was only playing, and he is my little boy, and I am scolding him, as you did me this morning." Children are apt to be echoes of their parents.

Safer in a Bethlehem manger among cattle and camels with gentle Mary to watch the little innocent than the most extravagant nursery, over which God's star of peace never stood. The trapper extinguishes the flames on the prairie by fighting fire with fire, but you cannot, with the fire of your own disposition, put out the fire of a child's disposition.

Yet we may rush to the other extreme and rule children by too great leniency.

The surgeon is not unkind because, notwithstanding the resistance of his patient, he goes straight on with firm hand and unfaltering heart to take off the gangrene. Nor is the parent less affectionate and faithful because, notwithstanding all violent remonstrances on the part of the child, he with the firmest discipline advances to the cutting off of its evil inclinations. The Bible says: "Chasten thy son, while there is hope, and let not thy soul spare for his crying." Childish rage unchecked will, after a while, become a hurricane. Childish petulance will grow up into misanthropy. Childish rebellion will develop into the lawlessness of riot and sedition. If you would ruin the child, dance to his every caprice and stuff him with confectionery. Before you are aware of it that boy of 6 years will go down the street, a cigar in his mouth and ready on any corner with his comrades to compare pugilistic attainments. The parent who allows the child to grow up without ever having learned the great duty of obedience and submission has prepared a cup of burning gall for his own lips and appalling destruction for his descendant. Remember Eli and his two sons, Hophni and Phinehas.

A second error prevalent in the training of children is a laying out of a theory and following it without arranging it to varieties of disposition. In every family you will find striking differences of temperament. This child is too timid, and that too bold, and this too miserly, and that too wasteful; this too inactive and that too boisterous. Now, the farmer who should plant corn and wheat and turnips in just the same way, then put them through one hopper and grind them in the same mill, would not be so much of a fool as the parent who should attempt to discipline and educate all their children in the same manner. It needs a skillful hand to adjust these checks and balances. The rigidity of government which is necessary to hold in this impetuous nature would utterly crush that flexible disposition, while the gentle reproof that would suffice for the latter would, when used on the former, be like attempting to hold a champing Bucephalus with reins of gossamer. God gives us in the disposition of each child a hint as to how we ought to train him, and as God in the mental structure of our children indicates what mode of training is the best, he also indicates in the disposition their future occupation. Do not write down that child as dull because it may not now be as brilliant as your other children or as those of your neighbor. Some of the mightiest men and women of the centuries had a stupid childhood. Thomas Aquinas was called at school "the dumb ox," but afterwards demonstrated his sanctified genius and was called "the angel of the schools" and "the eagle of Brittany." Kindness and patience with a child will conquer almost anything, and they are virtues so Christianlike that they are inspiring to look at. John Wesley's kiss of a child on the pulpit stairs turned Matthias Joyce from a profligate into a flaming evangelist.

The third error prevalent in the training of children is the one-sided development of either the physical, intellectual, or moral nature at the expense of the others. Those, for instance, greatly mistake who, while they are faithful in the intellectual and moral culture of children, forget the physical. The bright eyes half quenched by night study, the cramped chest that comes from too much bending over school-desks, the weak side resulting from sedentary habit, the pale cheeks and the gaunt bodies of multitudes of children attest that physical development does not always go along with intellectual and moral. How do you suppose all those treasures of knowledge the child gets will look in shattered caske? And how much will you give for the wealthiest cargo when it is put into a leaky ship? How can that bright, sharp blade of a child's attainments be wielded without any handle? What are brains worth without shoulders to carry them? What is a child with magnificent mind but an exhausted body? Better that a young man of 21 go forth into the world without knowing A from Z, if he have health of body and energy to push his way through the world, than at 21 to enter upon active life, his head stuffed with Socrates, and Herodotus, and Bacon, and La Place, but no physical force to sustain him in the shock of earthly conflicts. From this infinite blunder of parents how many have come out in life with a genius that could have piled Ossa upon Pelion, and mounted upon them to scale the Heavens, and have laid down panting with physical exhaustion before a mole hill. They who might have thrilled senates and marshaled armies and startled the world with the shock of their scientific batteries, have passed their lives in picking up prescriptions for indigestion. They owned all the thunderbolts of Jupiter, but could not get out of their rocking chair to use them. George Washington in early life was a poor speller, and spelled hat h-a-double-t, and a ream of paper he spelled "rheum," but he knew enough to spell out the independence of this country from foreign oppression. The knowledge of the schools is important, but there are other things quite as important.

Just as great is the wrong done when the mind is cultivated and the heart neglected. The youth of this day are seldom denied any scholarly attainments. Our schools and seminaries are ever growing in efficiency, and the students are conducted through all the realms of philosophy, and art, and language, and mathematics. The most hereditary obtuseness gives way before the onslaught of adroit instructors. But there is a development of infinite importance which mathematics and the dead languages cannot affect. The more mental power the more capacity for evil unless coupled with religious restraint. You discover what terrible power for evil unsanctified genius possesses when you see Scaliger with his scathing denunciations assaulting the best men of his time, and Blount and Spinoza and Bolingbroke leading their hosts of followers into the all-consuming fires of skepticism and infidelity. Whether knowledge is a mighty good or an unmitigated evil depends entirely upon which course it takes. The river rolling on between round banks makes all the valley laugh with golden wheat and rank grass, and catching hold of the wheel of mill and factory, whirled it with great industries. But, breaking away from restraints and dashing over banks in red wrath, it washes away harvests from their moorings and makes the valleys shrink with the catastrophe. Fire in the furnace heats the house or drives the steamer; but, uncontrolled, warehouses go down in awful crash before it, and in a few hours half a city will lie in black ruin, walls and towers and churches and monument. You must accompany the education of the intellect with the education of the heart, or you are rousing up within your child an energy which will be blasting and terrible. Better a wicked dunce than a wicked philosopher.

The fourth error often committed in the training of children is the suppression of childish sportfulness. The most triumphant death of any child that I ever knew was that of Scoville Haynes McCollum. A few days before that, he was at my house in Syracuse, and he ran like a deer and his halloo made the woods echo. You could hear him coming a block off, so full was he of romp and laughter and whistle. Don't put religion on your child as a straight jacket. Parents, after having for a good many years been jostled about in the rough world often lose their vivacity, and are astonished to see how their children can act so thoughtlessly of the earnest world all about them. That is a cruel parent who quenches any of the light in a child's soul. Instead of arresting its sportfulness, go forth and help him trundle the hoop, and fly the kite and build the snow castle. Those shoulders are too little to carry a burden, that brow is too young to be wrinkled, those feet are too sprightly to go along at a funeral pace. God, bless their young hearts! Now is the time for them to be sportful. Let them romp and sing and laugh, and go with a rush and a burrah. In this way they gather up a surplus of energy for future life. For the child that walks around with a scowl, dragging his feet as though they were weights and sitting down by the hour in moping and grubbing, I prophesy a life of utter inanimation and discontent. Sooner hush the robins in the air till they are silent as a bat, and lecture the frisking lambs on the hillside until they walk like old sheep, than put exilarant childhood in the stocks.

The fifth error in the training of childhood is the postponement of its moral culture until too late. Multitudes of children because of their precocity have been urged into depths of study where they ought not to go, and their intellects have been overburdened and overstrained and battered to pieces against Latin grammars and algebras, and coming forth into practical life they will hardly rise to mediocrity, and there is now a stuffing and cramming system of education in the schools of our country that is deathful to the teachers who have to enforce it, and destructive to the children who must submit to the process. You find children at 9 and 10 years of age with school lessons only appropriate for children of 15. If children are kept in school and studying from 9 to 3 o'clock, no home study except music ought to be required of them. Six hours of study is enough for any child. The rest of the day ought to be devoted to recreation and pure fun. But you cannot begin too early the moral culture of a child, or on too complete a scale. You can look back upon your own life and remember what mighty impressions were made upon you at 5 or 6 years of age. Oh, that child does not sit so silent during your conversation to be uninfluenced by it. You say he does not understand. Although much of your phraseology is beyond his grasp, he is gathering up from your talk influences which will affect his immortal destiny. From the question he asks you long afterward you find he understood all about what you were saying. You think the child does not appreciate that beautiful cloud, but its most delicate lines are reflected into the very depths of the youthful nature, and a score of years from now you will see the shadow of that cloud in the tastes and refinements developed. The song with which you sang that child to sleep will echo through all its life, and ring back from the very arches of Heaven. I think that often the first seven years of a child's life decides whether it shall be irascible, waspish, rude false, hypocritical, or gentle, truthful, frank, obedient, honest, and Christian. The present generations of men will pass off very much as they are now. Although the gospel is offered them,

INDIANA STATE NEWS.

—Under the caption of "Judicial Circuits and Business," the State Bureau of Statistics has compiled returns from fifty-eight counties for the year ending June 30, 1887, the following being the most important of the several totals tending to show the business transacted by the Courts of the State: Civil cases begun during the year, 13,890; criminal cases begun, 4,626; indictments returned, 3,576; convictions in criminal cases, 1,216; executions issued, 5,278; foreclosure decrees entered, 1,512. Several of the larger counties including Knox, Boone, Randolph, Cass, Vigo, and Clinton, each of which constitute a judicial circuit, have failed to make returns, and the bureau makes the following estimate for the entire State: Civil cases begun, 22,032; criminal cases begun, 7,338; indictments returned, 5,672; convictions in criminal cases, 1,920; executions issued, 8,372; foreclosure decrees entered, 2,399. This estimate shows an annual average of sixty-two indictments and twenty-one convictions in each county of the State.

—At Shelbyville, George Cullumber, of Fairland, was standing on a side-track of the C., I., St. L. & O. Railroad, looking toward the south, when a freight train from the north backed down upon him. Seven cars and a locomotive passed over his body, which was severed near the heart. Both arms were cut off and an ugly gash inflicted on the head. His mangled body was carried to his home, and the coroner sent for. The deceased was born in the State of Virginia, April 28, 1827, and had resided in Fairland twenty-one years. He was a member of the Grand Army, and served as Postmaster at Fairland for two years. He leaves a wife and two children.

—The State Statistician is compiling the averages of the crops of the season. He will have the work completed in a few days. It will show that the yield of corn is about 60,000,000 bushels, while in 1885 it was 117,000,000, and last year 108,000,000. Had there been sufficient rain the crop would have reached 125,000,000 bushels. One farmer reported that he got only thirteen ears to the acre. The average will be about twenty bushels to the acre. For wheat the average is only fifteen bushels. Irish potatoes will reach about one-fourth of a crop, or in the aggregate not more than 1,500,000 bushels.

—Considerable excitement has been aroused in the vicinity of Farmer's Institute, Tippecanoe County, over the discovery that glanders, in a very serious form, has broken out among the horses in that neighborhood. A veterinary surgeon found two horses belonging to A. H. Crouse very bad, and by order of the Board of Health officer they were shot. Other horses have contracted the disease, it is claimed, but their owners deny that it is the glanders, and decline to kill their animals. The veterinary pronounces the disease acute glanders.

—A woman in the case caused a fatal affair at Stendal, Pike County. David Monroe and his nephew, James Southerland, quarreled over Monroe's wife. Monroe knocked Southerland down, and cut a big gash in his head. Southerland left, and Monroe went to bed. Later in the night a shotgun was pushed through the window of Monroe's bedroom and discharged into the small of his back. Monroe was found covered with blood and a big hole in his back, fatally injured. Southerland escaped.

—The dead body of a man about 35 years of age, and apparently a tramp, was found under the railroad bridge over Flat Rock, near Columbus. His skull was crushed as if with a club, though his death may have been caused by falling through the bridge. The general opinion is that he was murdered, and a party of four tramps, who were encamped near the spot, have been arrested on suspicion.

—Ethan Leak, a young farmer residing two and a half miles east of Jamestown, while carelessly handling a revolver, accidentally discharged it, the ball striking his wife and seriously, if not fatally, injuring her. Seeing the result of his carelessness, and doubtless thinking that he had killed his wife, he placed the weapon to his forehead and sent a bullet through his brain, instantly killing himself.

—The mangled body of Charles Bowman, a well-known young Wabash County farmer, was found by the roadside near his home. It is supposed that while riding on a load of corn he was thrown off and the wheels passed over his body, crushing the chest in a frightful manner. Bowman died before a physician could be summoned.

—W. F. Beach, an old engineer, residing in New Albany, has perfected a plan by which he hopes to utilize the vast water-power of the Ohio falls. He proposes to dig a huge mill-race, in which to convey the water to a reservoir, where it will be made to turn a lot of turbine wheels, from which the power is to be transmitted to factories.

Work has been commenced at Portland on glass-works for the manufacture of window-glass. The works will employ sixty men. The Chicago Creamery Company, when they complete their factory, will manufacture butter tubs and employ 125 men. The men working in both mills will add 1,000 to the population of Portland.

—J. T. Emmons, a brakeman on the Panhandle road, who lives at Sulphur Springs, had his hand badly mangled while coupling cars in the yards at Anderson. He went to Newcastle to have his injuries dressed by Dr. Rea, the railroad surgeon, and it was found necessary to amputate two of his fingers.

—George Cullumber, of Fairland, was run over by a freight train and killed.

—Charles Moran, whose home is at Holton, Ripley County, while working in a stone quarry at Paris, met with a very serious if not fatal accident. While raising a huge stone with a derrick the dogs slipped, letting the stone drop upon him, breaking his legs.

—Ira Siders, aged 30, a married man, residing in Jackson Township, Jay County, was struck on the head by a falling tree and instantly killed.

—Rev. L. D. Ridgeway, of Madison, has accepted a call from the Christian Church at Rochester to become their pastor.

—While repairing derricks in John Puttman's stone-yard, in Newport, two of the machines fell, killing John Davis, a stone-cutter, and Joseph Knapper, nephew of Puttman. Davis leaves a helpless family of seven children.

—The large paper-mill formerly run by the Elkhart Paper Company, and which has been idle for some time, has been bought by the Excelsior Starch Company of that city, and will resume business at once.

—The Indianapolis car-works have been awarded the contract to build 250 cars for the Kentucky Southern road.

—The people of Cayuga are rejoicing over the discovery of a five-foot-and-eight-inch vein of coal of fine quality. It is said on good authority that the new coal fields embrace a territory of at least 10,000 acres.

—Daniel Studebaker, a farmer of Deercreek Township, Cass County, committed suicide by hanging himself to a beam in his barn.

—Frank Doggett was killed by the accidental discharge of his gun while hunting near Downeyville.

—Dillard and Anna Brosius, Indianapolis, have been left $1,000,000 in Pennsylvania coal lands.

EVENTS OF A WEEK.

THE OLD WORLD.

—Dr. G. H. Martin, one of the leaders of the recent revolution in Hawaii, says that great changes for the better have been made in the government, with which, it would seem, King Kalakaua has now very little to do, as he is controlled by the cabinet and legislature. The threats of the disgruntled Spreckels that he will ruin the sugar trade of the kingdom are not causing much anxiety there.

—M. Henri Rochefort, the editor of the La Transigeant, of Paris, has fought a duel with swords with M. Marmack, the editor of the Cri du Peuple. The latter was wounded. The encounter was the result of a quarrel over Gen. Boulanger.

FINANCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL.

—The Central Bank of Canada, located at Toronto, has failed, owing to the stringency in the money market. The capital of the concern is $1,000,000, and it is not believed the depositors will suffer any loss. Isaac Sickles, wholesaler of laces and velvets at New York, failed for $115,000. An assignment was made by the New York Cable Construction Company, whose liabilities are figured at $100,000. R. H. C. Hill, a stockholder at Philadelphia, was unable to meet his liabilities, and 13,000 shares of stock were sold under the rules for his account. The failure did not affect the market.

—H. H. Chittenden, the assignee of A. S. Hatch & Co., the New York stock brokers, says that the firm's liabilities will not reach $200,000.

—R. G. Dun & Co., in their weekly review of trade, says:

Apprehended deficiency of supplies is the excuse for the excited advance in some products, but the bottom fact is, that more currency is in circulation than ever before, and Treasury deposits with banks feed the speculative fever, while removing the fear of monetary pressure at the chief centers of trade. Business is generally active for the season, though at some points retarded by slow collections or recent failures. The exchanges last week fell below those of the same week last year, but the great increase at most Western and Southern cities continues. The business failures during the week number, for the United States, 205, and for Canada, 19, a total of 224, compared with 217 last week, and 243 for the corresponding week of last year.

—The United Labor party of the State of Missouri has just held its State Convention at Kansas City. A great deal of discussion was had over the adoption of the Syracuse or the Cincinnati platform, and finally the following Missouri substitute was adopted:

We, as delegates of the United Labor party of Missouri in convention assembled, respectfully submit to the candid consideration of the people of the State the following declaration of principles: That the legitimate function of good government is to provide for each and all equal protection from the fraud or violence of any, and equal security in the enjoyment of natural rights and those opportunities for the pursuit of happiness that nature has made common to all men; that whenever the power of government is used for any other than this legitimate purpose it must inevitably be to the advantage of some and to corresponding disadvantage of others; that Government has no right to interfere with and cannot abrogate those natural laws. When the Government, with or without consideration, grants special privileges to any of the people it is at the expense of the rest of the people; that such privileges are equally unjust, whether recently granted or clothed with the respectability of age; that the Free-Soil party of the United States was right when in its platform of 1852 it declared "that all men have a natural right to a portion of the soil, and that as the use of the soil is indispensable to life the right of all men to the soil is as sacred as their rights to life itself," and that a single tax on land values is admirably adapted to securing to all men their right to the soil without injustice to any; that all such monopolies as have been built up by the assistance of the Government through the grant of special privileges and all necessary enterprises exceeding the power of individual ability should be owned and controlled by the Government, as the postal system now is; that the Australian system of voting should be adopted, in order to secure some approximation to independence in and purity of elections.

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Miss Bancroft, granddaughter of the Hon. George Bancroft, created some surprise at Washington, by marrying Mr. Charles Carroll, of Baltimore. The young lady was understood to be engaged to a French viscount. None knew of the wedding until after the knot had been tied.

—A Chicago dispatch says of Mr. S. W. Rawson, the banker, who was shot by his step-son in front of a church three or four Sundays ago: "His appetite is weakening, and his general condition is less comfortable. His physicians, however, are very hopeful of his ultimate recovery, though the danger from blood-poisoning and formation of abscesses can not be said to be completely at an end."

—Miss Susan B. Anthony and other ladies interested in the work, are organizing woman suffrage clubs in Indiana.

POLITICAL POINTS.

—Secretary Lamar, in an interview with a New York Herald correspondent, is reported as saying that—

In case he was offered a seat on the Supreme Bench he would accept it as the greatest honor of his life. In reference to the report that Don M. Dickinson, of Detroit, had been invited to accept a portfolio in President Cleveland's Cabinet, Mr. Lamar said that he had no knowledge of the matter, but he paid a high compliment to the Detroit gentleman and thought it was no disparagement to his character that he was, as reported, an active participant in politics. He believed that Dickinson might be acceptable to the rank and file of the Democratic party, as Mr. Dickinson was not only a good politician in the honest sense of that term, but he was a good Democrat and a good citizen. In regard to Sparks' resignation, he said: "Mr. Sparks' resignation will involve no defection or abatement from the policy which President Cleveland has established with reference to the preservation of our public lands from illegal appropriation by corporations and land speculators." Mr. Lamar then paid a tribute to President Cleveland as the actual author of the land reforms which had been inaugurated by this administration.

FIRES AND ACCIDENTS.

—Five colored laborers on the extension of the Nashville, Florence and Sheffield Railroad, says a Nashville (Tenn.) dispatch, were killed by being buried in a mass of rocks and earth loosened by an explosion of charges of dynamite in a side-cut on a road-bed. The fatality occurred near Wayland Springs, and was the result of a misunderstanding. The foreman had sent his hands away to a place of safety, with orders not to return until he sent for them. He, with one or two hands, remained to charge the holes in the rocks and fire the fuses. Five of the hands came back in the cut just below the facing where the blasting was to be done, and instantly tons of boulders and earth were hurled in on them, burying them so they were not gotten out for forty-eight hours.

—A loss of $150,000 was caused by the burning of the Ziegels Brewing company's establishment at Buffalo.

—By the explosion of a boiler in Heller Brothers' blast furnace at Woodside, New Jersey, one man was killed and three others were injured. The works were damaged to the extent of $30,000.

—Memphis has just been visited by the most destructive conflagration in the history of the city. It started in the buildings of the Merchants' Cotton Compress and Storage Company, and destroyed them, with 13,200 bales of cotton and several compresses. The loss will reach $800,000, on which there is not a great deal of insurance. W. E. Keffer's woolen mills and Patterson & Sessions' flour mill, at Canibus, N. Y., were destroyed by fire, entailing a loss of $100,000. Rothschild & Co.'s wholesale dry-goods store at Owensboro, Ky., was burned. The insurance foots up $43,500, while the loss is placed at $60,000. A business block at Decatur, Ala., was ruined, the losses aggregating $100,000. The Anchor Line steamer Arizona was almost entirely destroyed by flames at Marquette, Mich. The crew escaped.

—During the year ending Oct. 31 last, seventeen Gloucester (Mass.) fishing vessels were lost, 108 men perishing, who left over sixty fatherless children.

—Fire in the Cincinnati Southern Railway yards at Ludlow, Ky., caused a loss of $17,000. About 500 men are thrown out of employment, and it will take a long time to rebuild the property.

—Near Paducah, Ky., recently, the engine of a freight train on the Chesapeake and Ohio Southwestern Road fell through a trestle, the supports of which had been burned away, into the creek bed beneath, and the engineer and a brakeman were killed.

THE CRIMINAL RECORD.

—Lee Mosier was hanged at Wichita, Kan., for the murder of Hugh Lawler.

—A Louisiana, Mo., dispatch says that the crowd of armed farmers and citizens in pursuit of the two tramps who attempted to assault Mrs. Beauchamp and Mrs. Browning, in the southern portion of Pike County, Missouri, overtook them and hanged them to a tree.

—Thomas M. Green, of Maysville, Ky., correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial Gazette, and Col. L. D. Baldwin, of Nicholasville, had a shooting affray in the streets of Lexington, Ky., in which Baldwin was killed and Green seriously wounded. Mr. Polk, a would-be peace-maker, was shot twice, both of his wrists being wounded.

—A gang of eight or nine tramps boarded an east-bound freight train west of Utica, N. Y., and took possession of the cars, refusing to pay fare. They overpowered the conductor and compelled him to run them to Herkimer. An attempt was there made to arrest them, when they fired on the train men. Officers boarded the train, and it was run to Little Falls, where three of the tramps were arrested.

—August Rinckert, a wealthy German farmer, living near Hamrod's, N. Y., committed suicide by an arrangement so that when he jumped from a chair, with a rope about his neck, a gun was discharged at his side, blowing his heart away. The elopement of his only daughter with an ignorant railway trackman prompted the tragedy.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

—Typhoid fever is alarmingly prevalent at Albany, N. Y. The Mayor has issued a proclamation requesting citizens who use river water to boil it, as it is supposed to contain the seeds of the disease.

THAT there is to be a definite plan of tariff reduction submitted to Congress there can be no doubt, says a Washington special. The plan will be recommended in the President's message and outlined in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, and will have had the previous approval of Mr. Carlisle and of other Democratic leaders who will represent the Democratic majority in the House. What the details of the plan will be it is not yet possible to determine. There can be no doubt, however, that the general policy has been determined upon, and that it involves a reduction both in the internal revenue and in the customs duties.

—An aerolite, weighing three tons, dropped with a loud report in front of the Merchants' National Bank, in Amsterdam, N. Y., shortly before noon of Friday last, making a deep indentation in the ground. Great excitement was created by the occurrence, and large crowds viewed the celestial visitor. Local experts find traces of iron, nickel, aluminum, and other metals in the aerolite.

—At the National Convention of the W. C. T. U., at Nashville, Frances E. Willard was re-elected President, the old board being honored in like manner. A framed photograph of the temperance temple to be erected in Chicago, to cost $50,000, first proposed by Mrs. T. B. Carce, was exhibited and highly praised, and $6,000 toward its construction was pledged.

—The National Grange has just held its annual meeting at Lansing, Mich. Gov. Luken delivered an address of welcome, which was responded to by Worthy Master Darden. Addresses were also delivered by the Hon. O. M. Barnes, Congressman Allen, President Willets of the Agricultural College, ex-Gov. Robie of Maine, Col. J. H. Brigham of Ohio, and the Hon. J. M. Lipscomb of South Carolina. The Secretary and Treasurer made their reports. The former showed satisfactory progress of the order.

The report of the Secretary shows that 140 original charters, forty-seven duplicate charters, forty-nine deputation certificates, and dispensations of 143 new granges were issued during the year. The total receipts were $1,587. The Treasurer reported a balance on hand of $8,044. Illinois, Georgia, Delaware, Connecticut, and Alabama reported large gains during the year. The remaining States have not reported. Regulations were introduced and referred favoring the establishment of a postal telegraph; changing section 4 of the interstate law; asking for a law prohibiting the adulteration of food and dealing in futures, and asking for representation in the cabinet.

THE ANARCHISTS.

—The anarchists continue to spend most of their money in saloons, says a New York special. They continue to curse the police and newspaper men. Occasionally they try to get up an impromptu meeting, but as soon as they hear that the police are around they adjourn to their bar-room to resume the consumption of beer. Most was discussed at police headquarters Tuesday, and plans are maturing not only to check Messrs. Most and company in future, but to bring him to book if possible. Superintendent Murray did not believe that New York had anything to fear from anarchists.

—A New York dispatch says the heads of the police department have decided that hereafter the anarchists will not be allowed to meet, and that the carrying of banners or badges or the playing of any music, should they undertake to parade, will not be permitted. There are hints of speedy sensational developments. Herr Most declares that the published statements as to the tenor of his remarks at the anarchist meeting on Saturday night do him great injustice. He says that he made no such incendiary remarks as were attributed to him.

—Johann Most, the anarchist, was arrested by the police, at the office of his newspaper in New York, on Thursday last. He was taken directly to police headquarters and through the aldermen's gate and locked up in one of the cells in the basement. His arrest was made by direction of Inspector Byrnes on a warrant issued by Justice Cowing, for having made an incendiary speech calculated to incite a riot. The speech upon which Most was indicted was a particularly blood-curdling one, and was brought out by his indignation at the hanging of the Chicago anarchists.

—Johann Most, the anarchist, was liberated at New York, a woman named Ida Effular furnishing bonds of $1,500.

Avoiding Colds.

Wet feet are to be scrupulously guarded against. Few people are strong enough to avoid catching cold from such exposure, and when it is remembered that all the blood circulates through the feet every few minutes, it is easy to see how readily chill comes if the extremities are wet and cold. Should they accidentally get so, however, it is best to keep rapidly moving until dry stockings and boots can be reached, when a hot foot-bath and brisk rubbing will usually restore equilibrium.

It is surprising how certainly a cold may be broken up by a timely dose of quinine. When first symptoms make their appearance, when a little languor, slight hoarseness, and ominous tightening of nasal membranes follow exposure to draughts or sudden chill by wet, five grains of this useful, alkaloid are sufficient in many cases to end the trouble. But it must be done promptly. If the golden moment passes, nothing suffices to stop the weary sneezing, handkerchief using, red nose, and woe-begone looking periods that certainly follow. A pill in time.

Speaking of colds, I have a theory that no one need ever have one unless he chooses. In other words, that it is quite possible so to train the skin, that wonderful organ that is generally looked upon as the paper wrapper to our human bundle, as to render it nonsusceptible to sudden changes of temperature or atmospheric moisture, whence colds come.

And as this is exactly the season to commence such a system of pellar education, as it proved effective in many instances within my own knowledge, and as it is within easy reach of every one to try, I write it here. The theory is that no skin that has been exposed freely for half an hour at the beginning of a day to a temperature lower than it will encounter through the day will note small changes or be affected thereby.

A cold is simply a nervous shock, received by the myriads of minute nerve terminals that bristle over the surface of the human body, transmitted to the centers and so back again to the mucous membrane, the peculiar seat of this special irritation. Let us then so train these sensitive fibers that they will pass by, unnoticed, changes of atmospheric condition, and the matter is accomplished.

It is done by taking a daily air-bath, the entire naked body exposed for a few minutes to whatever temperature and dampness reigns outside the house, by opening every window and keeping in motion about the sleeping chamber directly after rising. If any part remains covered, that part remains sensitive; all must be bare. Beginning with five or even two minutes these warm mornings, the air bath should be gradually lengthened up to twenty or thirty, using gentle exercise all the time, and within two months the early hour will become a delightful one. Even as cold weather comes, there will be no suffering from lowering temperature. Entire freedom from colds is a boon well worth striving for.

This air-bath is by no means intended to replace one with water, but may best precede it, and the protective value is enhanced by a gentle sponging afterward. If this training is successfully carried out one feels warmer of a winter's morning unclad than all the day following with clothing on.

Care must be taken in case of an aged person or one suffering from debilitating disease; but the system has been practiced here with excellent effect in early stages of consumption, where a peculiar susceptibility to cold is common. —Family Physician, in American Magazine.

More Than One Mayflower.

Mayflower was a common name for a ship in early days, and the one examined for the East India Company in 1600, and the other possessed by the company in 1659, which is believed to have subsequently foundered in the Bay of Bengal, must both have been larger ships than the little craft of the Pilgrim Fathers. The Mayflower of 1600 must have, moreover, ceased to exist by 1620, and that of 1620 long before 1659. Only ships built of Indian teak could have kept the sea from 1600 to 1659 like those used by Phoenicians at Tylos, which Theophrastus tells us had continued sailing for more than 200 years. —The Athenaeum.

A YOUNG Mexican girl is soon to appear in the arena as a bull-fighter.

"DOCTORING OLD TIME."

A Striking Picture—A Revival of Old-Time Simplicity.

In one of Harper's issues is given a very fine illustration of Roberts' celebrated painting, known as "Doctoring Old Time." It represents a typical old-timer, with his bellows, blowing the dust from an ancient clock, with its cords and weights carefully secured. One of these clocks in this generation is appreciated only as a rare relic.

The suggestive name, "Doctoring Old Time," brings to our mind another version of the title, used for another purpose,—"Old Time Doctoring."

We learn, through a reliable source, that one of the enterprising proprietary medicine firms of the country, has been for years investigating the formulas and medical preparations used in the beginning of this century, and even before, with a view of ascertaining why people in our great-grandfathers' time enjoyed a health and physical vigor so seldom found in the present generation. They now think they have secured the secret or secrets. They find that the prevailing opinion that then existed, that "Nature has a remedy for every existing disorder," was true, and acting under this belief, our grandparents used the common herbs and plants. Continual trespass upon the forest domain, has made these herbs less abundant, and has driven them further from civilization, until they have been discarded as remedial agents because of the difficulty of obtaining them.

H. H. Warner, proprietor of Warner's safe cure, and founder of the Warner Observatory, Rochester, N. Y., has been pressing investigations in this direction, into the annals of old family histories, until he has secured some very valuable formulas, from which his firm is now preparing medicines, to be sold by all druggists.

They will, we learn, be known under the general title of "Warner's Log Cabin Remedies." Among these medicines will be a "Sarsaparilla," for the blood and liver, "Log Cabin Hops and Buchu Remedy," for the stomach, etc., "Log Cabin Cough and Consumption Remedy," a remedy called "Scal pine," for the hair; "Log Cabin Extract," for internal and external use, and an old valuable discovery for Catarrh, called "Log Cabin Cream." Among the list is also a "Log Cabin Plaster," and a "Log Cabin Liver Pill."

From the number of remedies, it will be seen that they do not propose to cure all diseases with one preparation. It is believed by many that with these remedies a new era is to dawn upon suffering humanity, and that the close of the nineteenth century will see these roots and herbs, as compounded under the title of Warner's Log Cabin Remedies, as popular as they were at its beginning. Although they come in the form of proprietary medicines, yet they will be none the less welcome, for suffering humanity has become tired of modern doctoring and the public has great confidence in any remedies put up by the firm of which H. H. Warner is the head. The people have become suspicious of the effects of doctoring with poisonous drugs. Few realize the injurious effects following the prescriptions of many modern physicians. These effects of poisonous drugs, already prominent, will become more pronounced in coming generations. Therefore we can cordially wish the old-fashioned new remedies the best of success.

On the Stairs.

"Let's see," said a woman who was inspecting an empty house in the eastern part of the city with a view to rent, "haven't several of your tenants died in the house?"

"Only two, madam."

"And they died of typhoid fever, I hear, caused by the drainage being so bad."

"Typhoid fever! Some one is trying to injure me, madam. They both fell down stairs and killed themselves."

"That's singular."

"Oh, no, madam. You see, they stood at the head of the stairs when I lowered the rent to $12 per month, and the sudden shock overbalanced them."

—Detroit Free Press.

Sam's Slang.

I have been frequently referred to as a slang slinger. I believe in taking the near cuts on everything except a straight road.

To get there we need—

First, a starting point,

Secondly, a route,

Thirdly, somebody to go it,

Finally, a destination.

God has not made something out of nothing since the evening of the sixth day. What a man has in him will determine largely how long it will take him to "get there." Some people have more in them just after dinner than at any other time.—Rev. Sam. Jones.

Throat Diseases commence with a Cough, Cold, or Sore Throat. "Brown's Bronchial Trachea" give immediate relief. Sold only in boxes. Prices 25 cts.

It $1.75 is sent now, it will pay for THE COMPANION to January, 1889, and you will receive the admirable Double Thanksgiving and Christmas Numbers, and other weekly issues to January 1st free.

Why Laura Lost Her Beau.

Laura once had an affluent beau, Who called twice a fortnight, or so. Now she sits, Sunday eve, All lonely to grieve. Oh, where is her recreant beau, And why did he leave Laura so?

Why, he saw that Laura was a languishing, delicate girl, subject to sick headache, sensitive nerves, and uncertain temper; and, knowing what a lifelong trial is a fretful, sticky wife, he transferred his attentions to her cheerful, healthy cousin, Ellen. The secret is that Laura's health and strength are sapped by chronic weakness, peculiar to her sex, which Ellen averts and avoids by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. This is the only remedy for woman's peculiar weaknesses and ailments, sold by druggists under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers that it will give satisfaction in every case or money will be refunded. See guarantee on bottle wrapper.

The Popular Thoroughfare.

The Wisconsin Central Line, although a comparatively new factor in the railroad systems of the Northwest, has acquired an enviable popularity. Through careful attention to details, its service is as near perfection as might be looked for. The train attendants seem to regard their trusts as individual property and as a result the public is served par excellence. The road now runs solid through fast trains between Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul, and Minneapolis with Pullman's best and unequalled dining cars; it also runs through solid sleepers between Chicago, Ashland, Duluth, and the famous mining regions of Northern Wisconsin and Michigan.

The Rock Island main line and branches include Chicago, Joliet, Ottawa, LaSalle, Peoria, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Fairfield, Ottumwa, Oskaloosa, West Liberty, Iowa City, Des Moines, Indianola, Winterset, Atlantic, Knoxville, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie, Centre and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Gallatin, Trenton, St. Joseph, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri; Leavenworth and Atchison, in Kansas; Albert Lea, Minneapolis and St. Paul, in Minnesota; Watertown in Dakota, and hundreds of intermediate cities, towns and villages.

THE GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE

Guarantees Speed, Comfort and Safety to those who travel over it. Its roadbed is thoroughly ballasted. Its track is of heavy steel. Its bridges are solid structures of stone and iron. Its rolling stock is perfect as human skill can make it. It has all the safety appliances that mechanical genius has invented and experience proved valuable. Its practical operation is conservative and methodical—its discipline strict and exacting. The luxury of its passenger accommodations is unequalled in the West—unsurpassed in the world.

ALL EXPRESS TRAINS between Chicago and the Missouri River consist of comfortable DAY COACHES, magnificent PULLMAN PALACE PARLOR and SLEEPING CARS, elegant DINING CARS providing excellent meals, and between Chicago, St. Joseph, Atchison and Kansas City—restful RECLINING CHAIR CARS.

THE FAMOUS ALBERT LEA ROUTE

Is the direct, favorite line between Chicago and Minneapolis and St. Paul. Over this route solid Fast Express Trains run daily to the summer resorts, picturesque localities and hunting and fishing grounds of Iowa and Minnesota. The rich wheat fields and grazing lands of interior Dakota are reached via Watertown. A short desirable route, via Seneca and Kanabek, offers superior inducements to travelers between Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Lafayette and Council Bluffs, St. Joseph, Atchison, Leavenworth, Kansas City, Minneapolis, St. Paul and intermediate points.

All classes of patrons, especially families, ladies and children, receive from officials and employees of Rock Island trains protection, respectful courtesy and kindly attention.

The contractor who put down the Garrett gas well, seems to have come the "shenanigan" over the directors by claiming to be down 2000 feet, when in fact he was only down about 1400 feet. He drew his pay and skipped.

Mrs. Starnen, the lady who has been visiting at A. Kribbill's for several weeks, and who had the misfortune to break her limb some time ago, has recovered so far as to be able to go to her home near Mansfield, Ohio, last Saturday.

The present exceedingly dry spell seems to be general all over the country, and in some parts the drouth is far worse than in this locality, as will be seen by the following item which we clip from an Ohio paper: "From all points comes the cry of water, water, and not a drop to drink. Farmers in some parts are slaughtering their stock, rather than have them die of thirst. Northwestern Ohio, because of its deep wells, is not suffering so much, yet water is getting to be a valuable element. Wells are drying up, and in many places, wheat is very badly stunted."

PERSONAL.—N. H. Frohlichstein, of Mobile, Ala., writes: I take great pleasure in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, having used it for a severe attack of Bronchitis and Catarrh. It gave me instant relief and entirely cured me and I have not been afflicted since. I also beg to state that I had tried other remedies with no good result. Have also used Electric Bitters and Dr. King's New Life Pills, both of which I can recommend.

Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, is sold on a positive guarantee. Trial bottles free at W. C. Patterson's Drug Store.

If any readers of the News propose to invest in some notes that are being offered for sale by parties over this way, they will find it to their interest to visit Paulding Center, Ohio before doing so.

R. G. Coburn lost one of his cows one day last week. If any of his friends propose to make his loss good, by furnishing him with another new milch cow, they can make it known through the News.

Wills and Al have gone into partnership for the purpose of training dogs to set. They now have a full blooded setter in training, and though they have had him only a few days, they have got him so he will set by the hour watching for a bone or a crust of bread. If they can make the business profitable they will no doubt advertise for dogs to train. Next.

A select few of Charley Coburn's friends met at his house last Monday, to celebrate his sixtieth birthday. Owing to the clemency of the weather quite a number of those invited failed to put in an appearance, but all who were there will unite with me in saying, we had a very enjoyable time. About three o'clock dinner was served, and such a dinner, very few house-wives are able to get up, and to which all did ample justice. After dinner a few presents were brought out and presented to him, which put him in such a flutter he could not even say thanks, but they were appreciated all the same. Charley was then requested to stand in a half bushel and shoulder two bushels of wheat to fulfill a promise he made some time ago, that he would do it on his sixtieth birthday; but he just crawled right out of it by saying it was only a peck of bran that he was to shoulder. Charley always could go through a mighty small hole if you would only let him go backward. Well, we hope he may live to see many more birthdays, and be able to bring up his large family of little children.

The 'Auburn' Courier seems to think that the present prosperity of St. Joe, to a certain degree, is due more to the efforts of the ladies of the place, than the men. Let that be as it may, there is one thing sure, our town is prosperous, and we know it, and are glad of it. St. Joe people are wide-awake, and always alive to the best interests of the town, and that's the reason why it is one of the liveliest little towns in the county.

Divine Services in the Brooklyn Tabernacle.

Dr. Talmage Rejoices That the Number of Christian Physicians Is Increasing—The Wild Oats of Youth Are Generally Sown in the Liver.

BROOKLYN, Nov. 20.—The Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D., opened the services at the tabernacle this morning by giving out the hymn beginning:

Should coming days be cold and dark,
We need not cease our singing;
That perfect rest nought can molest,
Where golden harps are ringing.

He then explained a passage in the Gospel of St. Matthew, concerning the inferior kind of salt that was cast out to make walks of, to be trodden under foot of men. The subject of Dr. Talmage's discourse was "The Gospel of Health," and his text from Proverbs vii, 23: "Till a dart strike through his liver." He said:

There is a fashion in sermons. A comparatively small part of the Bible is called on for texts. Most of the passages of Scripture, when announced at the opening of sermons, immediately divide themselves into old discussions that we have heard from boyhood, and the effect on us is soporific. The auditor guesses at the start just what the preacher will say. There are very important chapters and verses that have never been preached from. Much of my lifetime I am devoting to unlocking these gold chests and blasting open these quarries. We talk about the heart, and preach about the heart, and sing about the heart, but if you refer to the physical organ that we call the heart, it has not half so much to do with spiritual health or disease, moral exaltation, or spiritual depression, as the organ to the consideration of which Solomon calls us in the text, when he describes sin progressing, "till a dart strike through his liver."

Solomon's anatomical and physiological discoveries were so very great that he was nearly 3,000 years ahead of the scientists of his day. He, more than 1,000 years before Christ, seemed to know about the circulation of the blood, which Harvey discovered 1,619 years after Christ, for when Solomon in Ecclesiastes, describing the human body, speaks of the pitcher at the fountain, he evidently means the three canals leading from the heart that receive the blood like pitchers. When he speaks in Ecclesiastes of the silver cord of life, he evidently means the spinal marrow, about which in our day Doctors Mayo, and Carpenter, and Dalton, and Flint, and Brown-Sequard have experimented. And Solomon recorded in the Bible thousands of years before scientists discovered it, that in his time the spinal cord relaxed in old age, producing the tremors of hand and head: "Or the silver cord be loosed."

In the text he reveals the fact that he had studied the largest gland of the human system, the liver, not by the electric light of the modern dissecting room, but by the dim light of a comparatively dark age, and yet had seen its important function in the God built castle of the human body, its selecting and secreting power, its curious cells, its elongated, branching tubes, a divine workmanship in central, and right, and left lobe, and the hepatic artery through which God conducts the crimson tides. Oh, this vital organ is like the eye of God in that it never sleeps. Solomon knew of it and had noticed either in vivisection or post-mortem what awful attacks sin and dissipation make upon it, until with the fiat of Almighty God it bids the body and soul separate, and the one it commands to the grave, and the other it sends to judgment. A javelin of retribution, not glancing off or making a slight wound, but piercing it from side to side "till the dart strike through the liver." Galen and Hippocrates ascribe to the liver the most of the world's moral depression, and the word melancholy means black bile.

I preach to you this morning the Gospel of Health. In taking diagnosis of the diseases of the soul you must also take the diagnosis of the diseases of the body. As if to recognize this, one whole book of the New Testament was written by a physician. Luke was a doctor, and he discourses much of physical effects, and he tells of the good Samaritan's medication of the wounds by pouring in oil and wine, and recognizes hunger as a hindrance to hearing the Gospel, so that the 5,000 were fed; and records the sparse diet of the prodigal away from home and the extinguished eyesight of the beggar away from home, and lets us know of the hemorrhage of the wounds of the dying Christ and the miraculous post-mortem resuscitation. And any estimate of the spiritual condition that does not include also an estimate of the physical condition is incomplete. When the door-keeper of Congress fell dead from excessive joy because Burgoyne had surrendered at Saratoga, and Philip the Fifth of Spain dropped dead at the news of his country's defeat in battle, and Cardinal Wolsey expired as a result of Henry the Eighth's anathema, it was demonstrated that the body and soul are Siamese twins, and when you thrill the one with joy or sorrow you thrill the other. We might as well recognize the fact that there are two mighty fortresses in the human body, the heart and the liver; the heart the fortress of all the graces, the liver the fortress of all the furies. You may have the head filled with all intellectualities, and the ear with all musical appreciation, and the mouth with all eloquence, and the hand with all industries, and the heart with all generousities, and yet "a dart strike through the liver."

First, let Christian people avoid the mistake that they are all wrong with God because they suffer from depression of spirits. Many a consecrated man has found his spiritual sky befogged, and his hope of Heaven blotted out, and himself plunged chin deep in the Slough of Despond, and he said: "My heart is not right with God, and I think I must have made a mistake, and instead of being a child of light I am a child of darkness. No one can feel as gloomy as I feel and be a Christian." And he has gone to his minister for consolation, and he has collected Flavel's books, and Cecil's books, and Baxter's books, and read and read and read, and prayed and prayed and prayed, and wept and wept and wept, and groaned and groaned and groaned. My brother, your trouble is not with the heart, it is a gastric disorder or a rebellion of the liver. You need a physician more than you do a clergyman. It is not sin that blots out your hope of Heaven, but bile. It not only yellows your eyeball, and furs your tongue, and makes your head ache, but swoops upon your soul in dejections and forebodings. The devil is after you. He has failed to despoil your character, and he does the next best thing for him—he ruffles your peace of mind. When he says that you are not a forgiven soul, when he says that you are not right with God, when he says that you will never get to Heaven, he lies. You are just as sure of Heaven as though you were there already. But Satan, finding that he cannot keep you out of the promised land of Canaan, has determined that the spies shall not bring you any of the Eschol grapes beforehand, and that you shall have nothing but prickly-pear and crab-apple. You are just as good now under the cloud as you were when you were accustomed to rise in the morning at 5 o'clock to pray and sing, "Hallelujah, 'tis done!" My friend, Rev. Dr. Joseph H. Jones, of Philadelphia, a translated spirit now, wrote a book entitled "Man, Moral and Physical," in which he shows how different the same thing may happen to different people. He says: "After the great battle on the Mincio in 1859, between the French and Sardinians on the one side and the Austrians on the other, so disastrous to the latter, the defeated army retreated, followed by the victors. A description of the march of each army is given by two correspondents of the London Times, one of whom traveled with the successful host, the other with the defeated. The difference in views and statements of the same place, scenes, and events is remarkable. The former are said to be marching through a beautiful and luxuriant country during the day, and at night camping where they are supplied with an abundance of the best provisions and all sorts of rural dainties. There is nothing of war about the proceeding except its stimulus and excitement. On the side of the poor Austrians it is just the reverse. In his letter of the same date, describing the same places and a march over the same road, the writer can scarcely find words to set forth the suffering, impatience, and disgust existing around him. What was pleasant to the former was intolerable to the latter. What made all this difference? asks the journalist. 'One condition only: The French are victorious; the Austrians have been defeated. The contrast may convey a distinctive idea of the extent to which moral impressions affect the efficiency of the soldier.'"

So, my dear brother, the road you are traveling is the same you have been traveling a long while, but the difference in your physical conditions makes it look different, and therefore the two reports you have given of yourself are as widely different as the reports in the London Times from the two correspondents. Edward Payson, sometimes so far up on the mount that it seemed as if the centripetal force of earth could no longer hold him; sometimes, through a physical disorder, was so far down that it seemed as if the nether world would clutch him. Glorious William Cowper was as good as good could be, and will be loved in the Christian Church as long as it sings his hymn beginning: "There is a Fountain filled with Blood;" and his hymn beginning: "Oh, for a Closer Walk with God!" and his hymn beginning: "What Various Hindrances We Meet;" and his hymn beginning: "God Moves in a Mysterious Way." Yet so was he overcome of melancholy, or black bile, that it was only through the mistake of the cab driver, who took him to a wrong place, instead of the river bank, that he did not commit suicide.

Spiritual condition so mightily affected by the physical state, what a great opportunity this gives to the Christian physician, for he can feel at the same time both the pulse of the body and the pulse of the soul, and he can administer to both at once, and if medicine is needed he can give that—an earthly and a divine prescription at the same time—and call on not only the apothecary of earth, but the pharmacy of Heaven. Ah, that is the kind of doctor I want at my bedside when I get sick, one that cannot only pour out the right number of drops, but who can also pray. That is the kind of doctor I have had in my house when sickness or death came. I do not want any of your prodigate or atheistic doctors around my loved ones when the balances of life are trembling. A doctor who has gone through the medical college and in dissecting room has traversed the wonders of the human mechanism, and found no God in any of the labyrinths, is a fool; and cannot doctor me or mine. But, oh, the Christian doctors! What a comfort they have been in many of our households. And they ought to have a warm place in our prayers, as well as praise on our tongues. Dear old Dr. Skillman! My father's doctor, my mother's doctor, in the village home. He carried all the confidences of all the families for ten miles around. We all felt better as soon as we saw him enter the house. His face pronounced a benediction before he said a word. He welcomed all of us children into life, and he closed the old people's eyes when they entered the last slumber. I think I know what Christ said to him when the old doctor got through his work. I think he was greeted with the words: "Come in, doctor. I was sick and ye visited me!" I bless God that the number of Christian physicians is multiplying, and some of the students of the medical colleges are here to-day, and I hail you, and I bless you, and I ordain you to the tender, beautiful, heaven-descended work of a Christian physician, and when you take your diploma from the Long Island Medical College, to look after the perishable body, be sure also to get a diploma from the skies to look after the imperishable soul. Let all Christian physicians unite with ministers of the gospel in persuading good people that it is not because God is against them that they sometimes feel depressed, but because of their diseased body. I suppose David, the psalmist, was no more pious when he called on everything human and angelic, animate and inanimate, and from snowflake to hurricane, to praise God, than when he said: "Out of the depths of hell have I cried unto thee, O Lord," or that Jeremiah was any better when he wrote his prophecy than when he wrote his "Lamentations," or that Job was any better when he said: "I know that my Redeemer liveth," than when covered all over with the pustules of elephantiasis he sat in the ashes scratching the scabs off with a broken piece of pottery; or that Alexander Cruden, the concordist, was any better man when he compiled the book that has helped 10,000 students of the Bible, than when under the power of physical disorder he was handcuffed and straight waisted in Bethnal Green Insane Asylum.

"Oh," says some Christian man, "no one ought to allow physical disorder to depress his soul. He ought to live so near to God as to be always in the sunshine." Yes, that is good advice; but I warrant that you, the man who gives the advice, have a sound liver. Thank God every day for healthful hepatic condition, for, just as certainly as you lose it, you will sometimes, like David, and like Jeremiah, and like Cowper, and like Alexander Cruden, and like 10,000 other invalids, be playing a dead march on the same organ with which now you play a toccata. My object at this point is not only to emoliate the criticisms of the well against those in poor health, but to show Christian people who are atrabilious what is the matter with them. Do not charge against the heart the crimes of another portion of your organism. Do not conclude that because the path of Heaven is not arched with as fine a foliage, or the banks beautifully snowed under with exquisite chrysanthemums as once, that therefore you are on the wrong road. The road will bring you out at the same gate whether you walk with the stride of an athlete or come up on crutches. Thousands of Christians, morbid about their experiences, and morbid about their business, and morbid about the present, and morbid about the future, need the sermon I am now preaching.

Another practical use of this subject is for the young. The theory is abroad that they must first sow their wild oats, and afterward Michigan wheat. Let me break the delusion. Wild oats are generally sown in the liver and they can never be pulled up. They so preoccupy that organ that there is no room for the implantation of a righteous crop. You see aged men about us at 80 erect, agile, splendid, grand old men. How much wild oats did they sow between 18 years and 30? None, absolutely none. God does not very often honor with old age those who have in early life sacrificed swine on the altar of the bodily temple. Remember, O young man, that while in after life, and after years of dissipation, you may perhaps have your heart changed, religion does not change the liver. Trembling and staggering along these streets to-day are men, all bent and decayed and prematurely old, for the reason that they are paying for liens they put upon their physical estate before they were 30. By early dissipation they put on their body a first mortgage, and a second mortgage, and a third mortgage, to the devil, and these mortgages are now being foreclosed, and all that remains of their earthly estate the undertaker will soon put out of sight. Many years ago, in fulfillment of my text, a dart struck through their liver, and it is there yet. God forgives, but outraged physical law never, never, never. That has a Sinai, but no Cavalry. Solomon in my text knew what he was talking about. He had in early life been a prodigal, and he rises up on his throne of worldly splendor to shriek out a warning to all the centuries. David, bad in early life, but good in later life, cries out with an agony of earnestness: "Remember not the sins of my youth."

Stephen A. Douglas gave the name of "squatter sovereignty" to those who went out West and took possession of lands and held them by right of preoccupation. Let a flock of sins settle on your heart before you get to 25 years of age, and they will in all probability keep possession of it by an infernal squatter sovereignty. "I promise to pay at the bank $500 six months from date," says the promissory note. "I promise to pay my life thirty years from date at the bank of the grave," says every infraction of the laws of your physical being.

What? Will a man's body never completely recover from early dissipation in this world? Never. How about the world to come? Perhaps God will fix it up in the resurrection body so that it will not have to go limping through all eternity; but get the liver thoroughly damaged and it will stay damaged. Physicians call it cancer of the liver, or hardening of the liver, or cirrhosis of the liver, or inflammation of the liver, but Solomon puts all these pangs into one figure and says: "Till the dart strike through his liver."

Hesiod seemed to have some hint of this when he represented Prometheus for his crimes fastened to a pillar and an eagle feeding on his liver, which was renewed again each night, so that the devouring went on until finally Hercules slew the eagle and rescued Prometheus. And a dissipated early life assures a ferocity pecking away and clawing away year in and year out, and death is the only Hercules who can break the power of its beak or unclench its claw. So also Virgil and Homer wrote fables about vultures preying upon the liver, but there are those here to-day with whom it is no fable, but a terrific reality.

That young man smoking cigarettes and smoking cigars has no idea that he is getting for himself smoked liver. That young man has no idea that he has by early dissipation so depleted his energies that he will go into the battle only half armed. Napoleon lost Waterloo days before it was fought. Had he attacked the English army before it was re-enforced and attacked division by division, he might have won the day, but he waited until he had only 100,000 men against 200,000. And here is a young man who, if he puts all his forces against the regiment of youthful temptations, in the strength of God might he drive them back, but he is allowing them to be re-enforced by the whole army of mid-life temptations, and when all these forces are marched against him and no Grouchy comes to help him, and Blucher has come to help his foes, what but immortal defeat can await him?

Oh, my young brother, do not make the mistake that thousands all around you are making in opening the battle against sin too late—for this world too late, and for the world too come too late. What brings that express train from St. Louis into Jersey City three hours late? They lost fifteen minutes early on the route, and that effected them all the way, and they had to be switched off here and switched off there, and detained here and detained there, and the man who loses time and strength in the early part of the journey of life will suffer for it all the way through, the first twenty years of life damaging the following fifty years.

Some years ago a scientific lecturer went through the country exhibiting on great canvas different parts of the human body when healthy, and different parts when diseased. And what the world wants now is some eloquent scientist to go through the country showing to our young people on blazing canvas the drunkard's liver, the idler's liver, the libertine's liver, the gambler's liver. Perhaps the spectacle might stop some young man before he comes to the same catastrophe, and the dart strike through his own liver.

My hearer, this is the first sermon you have heard on the Gospel of Health, and it may be the last you will ever hear on that subject, and I charge you in the name of God, and Christ, and usefulness, and eternal destiny, take better care of your health. When some of you die, if your friends put on your tombstone a truthful epitaph, it will read: "Here lies the victim of late suppers," or it will be: "Behold what chicken salad at midnight will do for a man," or it will be: "Ten cigars a day closed my early existence," or it will be: "Sat down in a cold draught and this is the result," or it will be: "I died of thin shoes last winter," or it will be: "Went out without an overcoat and took this last chill," or it will be: "Thought I could do at 70 what I did at 20, and I am here," or it will be: "Here is the consequence of sitting half a day with wet feet," or it will be: "This is where I have stacked my harvest of wild oats," or, instead of words, the stone-cutter will chisel for an epitaph on the tombstone two figures, namely: a dart and a liver.

There is a kind of sickness that is beautiful when it comes from overwork for God, or one's country, or one's own family. I have seen wounds that were glorious.

After the battle of Antietam in the hospital a soldier in reply to my question: "Where are you hurt?" uncovered his bosom and showed me a gash that looked like a badge of eternal nobility. I have seen an empty sleeve that was more beautiful than the most muscular forearm. I have seen a green shade over the eye shot out in battle that was more beautiful than any two eyes that had passed without injury. I have seen an old missionary worn out with the malaria of African jungles who looked to me more radiant than a rubicund gymnast. I have seen a mother after six weeks' watching over a family of children down with scarlet fever, with a glory around her pale and wan face that surpassed the angelic. It all depends on how you got your sickness and in what battle your wounds. Frederick T. Frelinghuysen, the pride of New Jersey—aye, of the nation and one of the pillars of the Christian Church, and for nearly four years practically President of the United States, although in the office of Secretary of State, in his determination to make peace with all the governments on this American continent, wore himself out, and while his brain was as keen as it ever was, and his heart beat as regularly as it ever did, he was according to the bulletin of his physicians at Washington and Newark, dying of hardening of the liver. Satan, who does not like good men, sent a dart through his liver. The last my dear friend—for he was my friend and my father's friend before me—the last he was seen in Washington was in the President's carriage, leaning his head against the shoulder of the President on his way to the depot to take the train to go home to die. Martyr of the public service, he died for his country, though he died in time of peace. In his earlier life he was called the nephew of his uncle, Theodore Frelinghuysen, but he lived to render for God and his country a service that will make others proud to be his nephew, and which will keep his name on the scroll of history as the highest style of Christian statesman that this century or any other century has produced. My Lord and my God! if we must get sick and worn out, let it be in thy service and in the effort to make the world good and happy. Not in the service of sin. No! No! One of the most pathetic scenes that I ever witness, and I often see it, is that of men or women converted in the fifties or sixties or seventies wanting to be useful, but they so served the world and Satan in the earlier part of their life that they have no physical energy left for the service of God. They sacrificed nerves, muscles, lungs, heart, and liver on the wrong altar. They fought on the wrong side, and now, when their sword is all backed up and their ammunition all gone, they enlist for Emmanuel. When the high mettled cavalry horse which that man spurred into many a cavalry charge with clamping bit and flaming eye and neck clothed with thunder, is worn out and spavined and ring-boned and spring-halt, he rides up to the great Captain of our salvation on the white horse and offers his services. When such persons might have been through the good habits of a lifetime crashed the battle ax through helmeted iniquities, they are spending their days and nights in discussing the best way of breaking up their indigestion, and quieting their jangling nerves, and rousing their laggard appetite, and trying to extract the dart from their outraged liver. Better converted late than never! Oh, yes; for they will get to Heaven. But they will go afoot when they might have wheeled up the steep hills of the sky in Elijah's chariot. There is an old hymn that we used to sing in the country meeting house when I was a boy, and I remember how the old folks' voices trembled with emotion while they sang it. I have forgotten all but two lines, but those lines are the peroration of my sermon:

"Twill save us from a thousand snares
To mind religion young."

A Chemical Anomaly.
An astonishing result has been reached by Dr. Richardson, the English physiologist, in some experiments on the respiration of animals in pure oxygen. In most cases, a steady flow of fresh oxygen rendered the animals confined in it excited and feverish, and none were quieted or made sleepy. When, however, the oxygen, after having been passed once through the chambers containing the animals, such as the cat, dog, guinea-pig, rabbit and pigeon, became drowsy and fell quietly asleep; and when the gas was again used after another purification, the sleep became deeper, and some of the animals soon died. The oxygen appeared chemically pure at each time of using, and the cause of its remarkable change in effect is as yet a mystery. Whether some peculiar modification of oxygen is formed during respiration, or whether the toxic properties are due to some active product of respiration which has escaped detection in the inhaled gas, is a problem which will doubtless be studied with much interest.—Arkansas Traveler.

An Able Protector.
If there is a more able protector against the incursions of disease than Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, we have yet to learn of it. Against the periodic attacks of fever and ague it affords a sure defense, it renews waning vitality, and counteracts the infirmities of age; it prevents dyspepsia from becoming chronic, and eventually annihilates it. It rouses the liver and kidneys when dormant, and insures a regular habit of body. To the nervous it is of inestimable benefit, imparting steadiness and vigor into an enfeebled physique. The term, "delicate health," is usually another name for debility. While the Bitters is procurable, the weak need never despair of physical reinforcement. Persons whose avocations are sedentary and laborious, or involve exposure to unfavorable climatic influences, will also find the Bitters an able protector.

A Mutually Enjoyable Time.
Omaha Girl—Oh, shopping in Paris is such fun. I never laughed so much in all my life.
Friend—Why, what made it so enjoyable?
"Hearing the French shopkeepers trying to speak English."
"Oh!"
"Yes, and the queer part of it is they seemed to realize the ridiculousness of their blunders just as much as we did, they laughed themselves almost into fits over them. Wasn't it strange?"
"Did you talk English?"
"No, indeed, I talked French."—Omaha World.

A Flat Contradiction.
Some one has told you that your catarrh is incurable. It is not so. Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy will cure it. It is pleasant to use, and it always does its work thoroughly. We have yet to hear of a case in which it did not accomplish a cure when faithfully used. Catarrh is a disease which it is dangerous to neglect. A certain remedy is at your command. Avail yourself of it before the complaint assumes a more serious form. All druggists.

Chronic Coughs and Colds.
And all diseases of the Throat and Lungs, can be cured by the use of Scott's Emulsion, as it contains the healing virtues of Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites in their fullest form. Is a beautiful creamy Emulsion, palatable as milk, easily digested, and can be taken by the most delicate. Please read: "I consider Scott's Emulsion the remedy par excellence in Tuberculous and Strumous Affections, to say nothing of ordinary colds and throat troubles."—W. R. S. CONNELL, M. D., Manchester, Ohio.

Why is a newborn baby like a gale of wind? Because it begins with a squall.
WHATEVER name or designation is given to Fever and Ague, or other intermittent diseases it is safe to say that Malaria or a disordered state of the Liver is at fault. Eliminate the impurities from the system and a sure and prompt cure is the immediate result. Prickly Ash Bitters is the safest and most effective remedy for all bilious troubles, kidney diseases, and like complaints that has ever been brought before the public. A trial is its best recommendation.

In this world joy is measured by the cup; trouble by the peck.
Consumption Surely Cured.
To the Editor:—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above-named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy FREE to any of your readers who have consumption if they will send me their Express and P. O. address. Respectfully,

Eyes Ears Nose
Are all more or less affected by catarrh. The eyes become inflamed, red and watery, with dull, heavy, pain between them; there are roaring, buzzing noises in the ears, and sometimes the hearing is affected; the nose is a severe sufferer, with its constant uncomfortable discharge, bad breath, and loss of the sense of smell. All these disagreeable symptoms disappear when the disease is cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla, which expels from the blood the impurity from which catarrh arises, restores the organs to health, and builds up the system. "I have suffered with catarrh in my head for years, and paid out hundreds of dollars for medicines. I was weak, and my eyes were so sore that I could not sew or read much. I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, and now my catarrh is nearly cured, the weakness of my body is all gone, my appetite is good—in fact, I feel like another person. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine that has done me permanent good." Mrs. A. CUNNINGHAM, Providence, R. I.

CAN'T GO BEHIND THEM.
There is great intensity of the physical condition sometimes, and there are facts which we cannot go behind. In illustration further of facts which settle the points of a prompt and permanent cure, the following cases are cited: In 1884 Mrs. Mary K. Sheed suffered terribly with chronic neuralgia. She writes from 1110 Maryland Avenue, Washington, D. C. In the first instance she states: "I suffered terribly with neuralgia in the face; very severe attack extending to back and shoulders; suffered intensely. Tried St. Jacobs Oil; had parts well rubbed at night; in the morning all pain gone, magically." June 10, 1887, she writes from 224 Eleventh Street, S. W., as follows: "Four years ago I sent you a voluntary certificate setting forth the fact that I had been a great sufferer with neuralgia in my face, neck and shoulders. I obtained a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil, and after three applications I was entirely relieved from all pain, and from that time to the present I have never had a return. The effect was miraculous." Again, Feb. 6, 1887, Mr. R. G. Troll, St. Louis, Mo., writes: "In March, 1881, I suffered terribly with neuralgia; had suffered nearly three years. Applied St. Jacobs Oil at 8:15 A. M.; at 8:40 took the rag off; at 9 A. M. went to work. In less than five minutes after that the pain was gone. The one application cured me. Have not had return of it since." Mr. E. W. Spangler, York, Pa., June 17, 1887, writes: "Years ago had neuralgia; am not subject to it now. The cure by the use of St. Jacobs Oil was permanent. There has been no recurrence of the painful affliction." Chas. W. Law, Jr., Pottstown, Pa., April 19, 1887, writes: "Was troubled for years with neuralgia in neck and head. Tried St. Jacobs Oil; had tried different kinds of remedies without effect. One bottle of the former did the business. No return of pain and aches." In almost every instance the reports are the same.

HUSBANDRY AND HOUSEWIFERY.

Matters of Interest Relating to Farm and Household Management.

Information for the Plowman, Stockman, Poulterer, Nurseryman, and Housewife.

THE FARM.

Through Work.

There is little use to hope for success without using proper efforts. In the growing of crops there must be a suitable preparation of soil, and if there are cultivated crops the soil must be well worked.

We have in mind a field planted to corn; it is well plowed, thoroughly manured, and the planting properly attended to, but the crop was hoed only once. The early growth was vigorous and promising, but the failure to hoe the second time caused a partial failure in the earing.

A neighbor thought to secure a crop of rye by sowing a cornfield after simply harrowing the field on the removal of the corn, and the present condition fully shows the lack of a suitable seed bed. The rye is thin and small, short growth, while the other and well prepared fields show the plant six feet in height, with heads fully developed and promising a good crop upon soil no better than the field first named. There is no kind of business that shows neglect sooner than farming.

Harvesting Castor Beans.

The beans are produced in small prickly pods or capsules, which are borne in pyramidal spikes or clusters. Ripening is indicated by the turning brown of the pods, which soon burst open and scatter the seeds. As soon as the pods at the base of a cluster begin to turn brown, the cluster must be harvested. The stem of the spike or cluster is cut with a sharp knife, and the cluster thrown into a cart on which a barn sheet or other cloth is spread to save the beans that shell out. Many growers prefer to use a sled in harvesting; a sled is made with plank runners, large enough to hold two large dry goods boxes. A single horse draws this along the lanes, and the clusters are thrown into the boxes. When the boxes are filled they are taken to the "popping yard." A piece of hard ground, say 100 feet square, is burned over, swept and rolled to get a hard surface, and surrounded by a board fence. The clusters are placed in the center of this. After two days the spikes must be turned, using rakes for the purpose. At the end of four or five days the beans will have popped out, when the refuse is removed. The beans are swept up, to be cleaned by a fanning mill, and another lot of clusters brought in.—American Agriculturist.

Business Principles.

A man's farm, writes a correspondent of the Germantown (Pa.) Telegraph, is exactly like a merchant's store and stock of goods. The merchant deals in a promiscuous lot of merchandise. Once in a while he takes account of stock in hand, and overhauls every kind of goods he has. As he comes to each sort he looks at the cost and selling marks, and if there is not difference enough between them, he says: "That don't pay, I'll discard it in future." But when he comes to an article that does pay, he pays more attention to buying that line of goods and to selling it also. He is able to decide nicely on every article in his whole stock, because he keeps an account of its cost and what it brings, and therefore he knows the profit to a penny. He will have nothing in his stock which will not pay. Now, how does the farmer manage? In the first place, he does not know what it costs to grow a single article on his whole farm, therefore does not know whether he makes or loses on it. Two-thirds or three-fourths of everything he markets is very likely sold at a loss, or at so small a profit that they don't pay. Why is this? The farmer don't keep any account of cost of crops, of raising stock, of butter-making, of eggs, milk, or in fact anything; therefore he don't know what he makes his living from, and if he finds times hard he don't know where to retrench, what to discard, or how to help himself. The similarity between the merchant's stock in trade and the farmer's stock in trade is still perfect, but because the merchant is a business man he gets rich and because the farmer is not a business man he half starves. Now, it is not worth while for me to say another word, except that of all the farmers who read this, if there is one who can't see what I am driving at, he will never be a business man.

THE STOCK-RANCH.

Age and Size of Pigs.

A stunted pig never fully regains what it has lost. The trouble is that the pig poorly fed has his digestion impaired, so that efforts to force him by subsequent high feeding only make the matter worse. Over-feeding with pig is a more common fault than is generally supposed. A young pig will always be stunted if fed with all the corn or corn-meal it can eat. The food is too concentrated, and after a few surfeits the stomach refuses to act and the pig will never be thrifty afterward. Hence the common remark that some pigs are not worth as much at six months as they were at the age of six weeks. To keep a young pig thrifty, its feed should be largely composed of wheat bran, middlings, and either grass or roots.

Weight of Cattle by Measurement.

An English journal in answer to a correspondent gives the manner of arriving at the weight of cattle by measurement. To find the weight of a fat animal the square of the girth is multiplied by the length, and the product by .238. The explanation, which will be interesting to many feeders and breeders, is as follows:

The length and depth of the animal being measured—the first from the shoulder-top to the tail-head, and the second immediately behind the shoulder—these dimensions bring the figure of the animal into the form of a cylinder, or nearly so. The rule for finding the contents of a cylinder is to find the area of the end, and to multiply that sum by the length. The common method is to multiply the square of the diameter by .7854 (the area of a circle whose diameter is unity), and this product by the length for the solid contents.

But in measuring cattle the girth or circumference, and not the diameter, is obtained; and as the rule for finding the diameter correctly from the circumference involves itself into long decimal multipliers the process, especially when feet and odd inches are the dimensions, is complicated and tedious. The more simple method, therefore, is to multiply the square of the circumference by .0795775, and that product multiplied by the length gives the contents; which again multiplied by the established weight of a cubic foot or other measure will give the weight of the animal.

To find the proportional weight of a cubic foot: Find by the above rule the number of cubic feet which the animal contains; and the former divided by the latter will give the weight per cubic foot. Thus, if an ox measures 8 feet girth, 6 feet length; 8x8 equals 64x.0795775 equals 5.092836 equals 30.55768 cubic feet in the animal; and if the forequarters of the killed animal weighed 91 Smithfield stones, 63 pounds (735) pounds at 8 pounds per stone. This weight divided by the number of cubic feet in the animal gives the weight of a cubic foot. Hence 915 stones 63 pounds equals 91.462857 divided by 35.5576 gives 2.573 stones per cubic foot. And this is the actual weight assumed for a cubic foot.

The calculation may be shortened. As .0795775, and 2.573 are both constant multipliers in the operation, they may be multiplied together and the product used in one multiplier, thus: .0795775x2.573 equals .2048751675. But .238, or three figures only, may be near enough for a multiplier. Thus, 8x8 equals 64x.238 equals 15.248 equals 91.392, or 91 st. 63 lb. In place of .238 some use .24, which gives a higher weight. Thus, then, to find the weight of a fat animal, multiply the square of the girth by the length, and that product by .238, or take 238-1000th part of it, or use any lower and more convenient denomination of the same value.

Another popular rule is to multiply the square of the girth by five times the length, and divide the product by 21, to get the weight of the four quarters—i. e., multiply the square of the girth by the length, and take the 5-21st part of the product for the weight. Now 5-21 converted into decimals is .23809523, which exactly agrees, in as far as the decimal numbers necessary for the calculation are required, with the numbers given in the other rule.

*This number is obtained in the following way: The area of a circle equals the square of the circumference divided by four times 3.1416 (the circumference of a circle whose diameter is unity), or 1 divided 12.5664 (equals 4x3.1416) equal .0795775. Hence the square of the circumference multiplied by .0795775 gives the area of the circle.

Bounty for Timber Culture.

The Territory of Dakota has made very liberal provisions for the encouragement of timber culture. Chapter 145 of the session laws of 1885 provides that any person planting one acre or more of prairie land, within five years after this act, with any kind of trees except black locust or cottonwood, and successfully growing and cultivating for three years, shall be entitled to receive for ten years thereafter an annual bounty of $2 for each acre so planted and cultivated, to be paid out of the territorial treasury, but such bounty shall not be paid any longer than such trees are maintained and kept in growing condition. The code further provides that any one-fourth part of any quarter section of prairie land, the same being a legal subdivision, on which five acres of timber shall be planted by either sowing seed or by setting trees or cuttings, and the same to be kept in growing order by cultivation and not to be more than twelve feet apart each way, together with all improvements thereon not to exceed in value $1,000, shall be exempt from taxation for a period of ten years from and after the planting of said timber, and any change of ownership of such land shall in no way effect the exemption from taxation as herein provided. To secure the benefit of this exemption, the applicant shall file an affidavit with the assessor that he has in every way complied with the requirements of the law, whereupon the assessor shall therein state in effect the following words, to-wit: "Exempt from taxation by virtue of tree culture," and shall describe the particular tract or tracts of land so exempt.

THE VETERINARIAN.

Flaxseed for Pigs.

Flaxseed is a preventive of disease—a food medicine. Its oil is very soothing to the stomach and intestines, and is also rich in blood for muscle and bone. One of the best ways to use flaxseed is to boil it in six times its bulk of water till it forms a jelly; now mix a little of this jelly with wheat bran and you have an excellent food for growing a pig. This is also good for the brood sow, promoting her yield of milk. If used in this way, one pound of boiled flaxseed is mixed with ten pounds of bran. Pigs very soon get a liking for the taste of flaxseed. Another way is to grind one bushel of flaxseed with eight bushels of oats, or all the flaxseed that can be ground without sticking to the millstones. Then mix 100 pounds of the ground oats and flaxseed with 200 pounds of bran. This will be the best kind of feed for young pigs; and it will be good for them all the time up to fattening, and besides this they will be smooth, rangy pigs, making good roasters at any time. In other words, they will grow and fatten every day of their lives.—Prof. Stewart, in Country Gentleman.

The Horse's Feet.

Few farmers give that attention to their horse's feet that they should give. Most men rub and curry well enough, perhaps, and many take great pride and plenty of time in smoothing the horse's hide; but seldom is it that they think of that most indispensable part, the horse's feet, and stop to give them that little attention and inspection that is almost daily necessary.

The feet of the horse require as much attention as the body, and some horse's feet much more. Without sound feet the horse is not of much service for labor. A horse's feet may become unsound by having to stand in a filthy stable. The floor and bedding of the stable should always be dry, and the manure that is caked under the foot every morning should be carefully removed by the groom. As often as necessary the foot should be pared, and the frog examined as to soundness and hardness. A little alum water and brine should be kept at hand, and the frog of the foot mopped with it once a week to keep the frog sound and hard. A soft frog causes the animal to get lamed easily, and so he cannot travel or work well.

Sometimes stones or other hard substances get fastened in the foot, and if not removed cause lameness. Copperas thrown over the manure of the stable to destroy smell, will tend to keep the hoof sound. It is well to sprinkle it over the stable frequently, if for no other purpose to cure the unpleasant smell that often attaches to the feet of the horse. Plaster will have the same effect, and is very useful to prevent the loss of ammonia from the manure.

THE HOUSEKEEPER.

For Farmers' Wives.

Farmers' wives are probably as much in need of money as any other class of women. To such, then, the discovery of any way of adding to their pin-money is a desirable discovery. While not a new thing, planting small fruits is doubtless new to a great many women who have abundant opportunity to try it. That it is fully feasible to a great many needs only a trial to prove. A woman writes in the Colorado Farmer on the subject as below: Evidently the thing most needed now by women "is to learn how to be healthy, strong, good-tempered, and helpful," educating not only the brain, but also the whole being as well. All women cannot marry and be the helpless idol of an indulgent husband. Some will not marry, and many who do must be a willing helpmeet.

Out-door work is not to be despised by women, for it is positively necessary to health and happiness. Of all the pursuits now followed by woman there is perhaps no other that offers more or greater inducements, or for which she is naturally better qualified, than the growing of small fruits.

There is no more money-making crop than fruit when rightly managed, and strawberries, raspberries, gooseberries, currants, and grapes can each be made to yield a rich harvest. Only a small plot of ground is necessary for a beginning, increasing the area as means are afforded.

Almost any woman can do much of the work herself, even though not very strong. She can set the plants and gather the fruit and get it ready for market. Much depends on the way it is prepared.

If, in addition to raising fine berries, they are set off to advantage by careful packing and a tasteful arrangement of green leaves, they will sell more readily. When berries are cheap she can with her own hands make them into jams, jellies, marmalade, etc., to be sold later, even if sold at a very small profit.

Women do not despise the minutest matters, and the study of the botany of plants, of bird, and insects injurious and otherwise will all receive their careful attention.

The example we have had of women who have tried the experiment show that they are eminently successful raising the finest fruit, arranging it in the most tasteful manner, and receiving the highest market price for their products.

The net profits from the sale of small fruits by two young ladies in California last year, one of whom was a consumptive when she began, amounted to the handsome sum of $15,000.

It is but a few years since they began the experiment, and beside accumulating a fortune, they have what is better, a comfortable home of their own and complete restoration to health.

The growing of small fruits on a small scale is especially recommended to those married women who can obtain a small plot of ground for the purpose, who feel the desire so common among women for pecuniary independence. To the growing of small fruits might be added a few stands of bees, which almost any woman can care for, thus adding to her income and placing her in a position to realize comparative independence.

Hints to Housekeepers.

GOOD fresh buttermilk made from sweet cream is a serviceable drink in diabetes.

SALT and vinegar, applied hot, are good for cleaning brass, which should afterward be polished with fine ashes.

THE best thing to polish eye-glasses and spectacles with is a bit of newspaper. Moisten the glasses and rub dry.

TO TEST nutmegs, prick them with a pin, and if they are good the oil will instantly spread around the puncture.

YELLOW soap and whiting if mixed together with a little water into a thick paste will stop a leak as effectually as will solder.

NEVER use lye to clean tin; it will soon spoil it; make it clean with soap and water and rub with whiting, and it will look well and last longer.

A REFRESHING and nourishing drink for an invalid: Stir the yolk of an egg into a glass of lemonade. If this is too rich use more lemonade, and drink part at a time.

TO MAKE glossy starch melt together one ounce white wax and two ounces spermaceti. Melt starch, and to a good-sized panful add a lump of the mixture about the size of a pea.

FOR earache take a bit of cotton-batting, put upon it a pinch of black pepper, gather it up and tie; dip it in sweet oil and insert in the ear. Put a flannel bandage over the head to keep it warm. It will give immediate relief.

ANY kind of a bath, or any other process that will produce a general perspiration, and thus bring about a reaction, will cure a cold. Simply inhaling fresh air largely, by deep inspiration, is sufficient to nip an incipient cold in the bud.

A DAMP broom is often an excellent thing with which to sweep a carpet after the first dirt has been removed, but a wet broom is a very bad one. If dirt and water make mud, a wet broom will be the means to spread that compound wherever it travels.

THE COOK.

Bouquet.

One egg, one cup sugar, two teaspoonfuls melted lard, one-half cup thick milk, same of sweet milk, three teaspoonfuls of cream of tartar, one and one-half teaspoonfuls of soda, mix soft.

Cookies.

Two heaping cups of sugar, one-half cup of lard, one cup of buttermilk; dissolve one teaspoonful of soda and two of baking-powder in the buttermilk, flavor with lemon, flour enough to roll easy.

Taffy.

Three pounds of treacle, two pounds of moist sugar, one-half pound of butter, flavor with a few drops only of essence of lemon or of peppermint; boil it one and a half hours, watching all the time that it does not boil over (as it is apt to do if not attended to and stirred now and then).

Rice Cake.

One pound flour, one pound ground rice, three teaspoonfuls baking-powder, one-half pound moist sugar, one-quarter pound butter, one-quarter pound drippings, one egg, a very small quantity nutmeg; mix with milk or with cold water, and bake in a quick oven, first having pulled the mixture into little rough cakes about the size of a breakfast cup.

Cocoanut Pound-Cake.

Beat half a pound of butter and one pound of pulverized sugar to a creamy froth; stir in gradually one pound of sifted flour in which you have thoroughly mixed two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, a pinch of salt and a teaspoonful of grated lemon peel—this may be fresh or dried; four well-beaten eggs, a cupful of sweet milk, and a quarter of a pound of grated cocoanut; beat this in rapidly; bake in buttered tins in a moderate oven.

INDIANA STATE NEWS.

—Recently Henry Lockwood and wife, residing ten miles east of Marion, were summoned before the prosecutor to give evidence in a criminal case. They are wretchedly poor, and their three children, aged 8, 4, and 18 months, were left alone in a hovel that admitted the snow that accompanied the late blizzard. On their way home Lockwood and wife were nearly frozen, and stopped with an acquaintance over night. On their arrival home, next morning, they found the youngest child, a little girl, frozen to death, and the other two so badly chilled and frost-bitten that they could scarcely move or speak. The eldest boy said he awoke during the night and found his sister out in the snow beside the bed, and that when he pulled her in she was stiff. She was doubtless dead then.

—The city of Fort Wayne, with a population of 40,000, seems about to experience a water famine. Because of the long drought the water in the supply basin, as well as the small streams that contribute to it, has so failed that not enough pressure is given to the mains to operate the elevators in the hotels and other tall buildings, and their use has been abandoned. The local electric light company has served notice upon the city that not enough water can be had from the mains to supply their engines, and the inconvenience of complete or partial darkness at night is attributed to the water famine. Meanwhile, when a fire or two would find the department crippled, the City Council and Water-works Trustees are at loggerheads, and abuse each other in the public prints.

The State Auditor has just completed his annual report. It is very voluminous. Warrants were drawn during the year to the amount of $3,975,944. The net cash receipts were $3,866,257. The total disbursement from the State House fund was $291,647. Advance payments have been made by the counties to relieve the temporary embarrassment of the general fund, and the December settlements will enable the Treasurer to meet current expenses. There have been drains on the public funds consequent upon the building of various new benevolent institutions, but careful estimates indicate that the revenues of the coming fiscal year will be sufficient to maintain the State credit and meet all obligations, all reports to the contrary notwithstanding.

—The big canal, which is to drain the water off Four-mile Prairie, near Smitz City, has just been completed. The land has been purchased by Indianapolis men, who are reclaiming marsh lands in the State. The draining of Four-mile Prairie ruins one of the finest duck-shooting grounds in the world. For years it was the resort of geese, mallards, and teal, and a great place for shooters from the East. The marsh is now dry, and the ducks which are now coming from the north circle over it with a disappointed look and go croaking south. The draining will have the same effect as the recent ditching of the Sangamon bottom, in Mason County, Ill., which has destroyed about 200,000 acres of ducking ground.

—Miss Amanda English, of Switzerland County, has in her possession a bureau that was made for Miss Lucretia Hart, in her girlhood, more than one hundred years ago, and before she became the wife of Henry Clay. The bureau was given to Miss English by Mrs. Clay sixty-seven years ago, and is in a good state of preservation. It was made by a Lexington carpenter named McElwane, who did his work well. Miss English, who is needy, wishes to sell this relic, and persons desiring to purchase may address Joseph D. Froman, Markland, Ind.

—The city of Fort Wayne having arranged to begin the erection, next spring, of a new city hall, to cost $60,000, an injunction suit has been commenced, putting a stop to preparations. The petitioners are owners of property adjoining the market space, on which the new building was to be erected. They allege that by the will of the late Judge Samuel Hanna the ground was given to the city for market purposes only, and its use cannot be diverted; also, that access to their property would suffer by reason of erection of the proposed building.

—Frank Hooks, a young married man living near Bunker Hill, was found dead in the woods. He had been out hunting, and the supposition is that, while resting on a stump, his gun in some way was discharged, the contents of which entered his heart, killing him instantly. He had only been married about one week.

—Patents have been issued to Indiana inventors as follows: Alfred A. Benardin, Evansville, bottle cap; James F. Hatfield, Dublin, grain separator; William H. McGrew, assignor of one-half to J. Myers, Peru, wire and picket fence; Peter Rader, Kirklin, coupling for cultivators.

—A revival meeting is in progress at the Methodist Church in Tipton. The church is aroused, and the entire town is interested. Fifty persons have joined the church in the last two weeks and the interest in the meeting is constantly increasing.

—The Presbyterian congregations of Colfax and Burlington, which have been without a pastor for some time, have secured the services of Rev. Johnson, of Illinois, who will preach at both places alternately. Both churches are in a thriving condition.

Seth Wolf, aged 19, was instantly killed near Briant. He was assisting to load logs on a wagon when one rolled back, and before he could make his escape, passed over his body, crushing the life out of him.

—Crookedness is charged in the selection of the late grand jury at Indianapolis. The Court has ordered an investigation.

—While sawing wood with a buzz-saw, near Mechanicsburg, in Washington Township, Boone County, the saw burst and two pieces struck and almost instantly killed Emsley Hamm.

—George Rich, aged about 65 years, employed in a saw-mill at Uniondale, fell on a circular saw and was cut to pieces. He was horribly mangled and death occurred instantly.

—Mrs. Rebecca Charman, one of the most respected and aged women of Muncie, was found dead in bed. She retired for the night apparently in good health.

—Miss Priscilla Griers was found murdered and burned near Vincennes, and Frank Miller, his wife, and Simon Mull have been arrested for the crime.

—At Marion, saloon-keepers are presented with dangerous-looking bombs. It is taken that the business is objectionable to the bomb-makers.

—While John Turner and Ira Tanner, of Adams, were hunting, Turner accidentally shot Tanner in the side, inflicting a dangerous wound.

—Forest fires are doing immense damage in Floyd, Washington, Scott, Harrison, Crawford, Dubois, and Perry Counties.

—The sum of $1,400 has been secured for the purpose of opening a Y. M. C. A. gymnasium and reading-room at Crawfordsville.

—The residents of Fisher's Station are greatly terrified over the sinking of earth since the opening of a natural-gas well there.

—At Cambridge City, Levi Beard, a saloon-keeper, shot and killed Cleaves Straub, son of the City Marshal.

—There have been over one hundred dwelling-houses built in Lebanon this season.

—At Princeton, Gibson County, natural gas was struck at a depth of 600 feet.

EVENTS OF A WEEK.

THE OLD WORLD.

—The London Times, referring to an interview with Mr. Parnell, says that his statements have confirmed its suspicions that he is really not the leader, but only an old Parliamentary hand retained by the leaders of the Irish National party to do work they are unable to do themselves, namely: to manage the work of the party in the House of Commons.

—The Government has decided to prosecute Mayle and Sheehy, Nationalist members of Parliament.

—One hundred and thirty of the Gweedore tenants have been reinstated. Their arrears of rent have been reduced £2,500. There is great rejoicing among the tenantry.

—Mr. Mandeville has put on the prison garb in the Tullamore Jail. Mr. O'Brien is suffering from insomnia.

—Lord Mayor Sullivan has received seven summonses for publishing in his paper, the Nation, the proceedings of suppressed branches of the League. The proceedings will begin the 1st of December.

—One hundred and fifty deputies were present at the opening of the Reichstag in Berlin. In the speech from the throne references were made to the peaceful foreign policy of the country, and to the gratifying improvement in its financial condition. The serious illness of the Crown Prince was touched upon at some length, and a forecast was given of what is expected in the way of legislation during the coming winter.

—A cable dispatch from Paris says: "M. Grevy requested M. Ribot to form a Cabinet and charged him to convey to the Chamber his message of resignation. M. Ribot consented, but advised M. Grevy that as the message was a political act, the tenor of which required the approval of the Cabinet, the President ought to confer with the retiring Ministers. M. Grevy accordingly summoned M. Rouvier and his colleagues."

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Secretary Whitney has returned to Washington in improved health.

—A Detroit special to the Chicago Daily News says:

Ex-United States Senator Charles F. Jones of Florida, who has for some unexplained reason squandered in Detroit for two years past, is practically a beggar upon the streets, and but for the charity of a friend would be without food or shelter. When Mr. Jones came to Detroit he was very free with his money, and gave lavishly to benevolent and church purposes. With a man he boarded at the best hotel until a few months ago, when he was unable to pay his bills. He then went to a cheaper house, and last night his room was locked on him and he slept on the floor in the hall. He had been previously refused further credit at the last of the long line of caterers whom he owes, and was absolutely hungry. He was observed by a man whom he had befriended in his better days, and has been taken to the man's home. Mr. Jones is almost a mental wreck. He is pursued with the idea that some enemies, whom he never names, are following him and that he will yet "down them."

—Brevet Brigadier General Randolph B. Marcy died at Orange, N. J. The old soldier was 76 years of age, and his death is ascribed to general debility. He was in a feeble condition long before fears were entertained of the death of his son-in-law, Gen. George B. McClellan.

FINANCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL.

—Jas. Jenks & Co., dealers in machinery at Detroit, have failed for $40,000. J. S. Fay & Co., of Cincinnati, being the principal creditors.

—The schedules of James Cowlin, an insolvent lace importer of New York, show $415 assets and $172,277 liabilities.

—Chicago telegram: The work of reorganizing the Knights of Labor on an anti-Powderly basis is making good progress, according to Charles F. Seib, Secretary of the Provisional Committee. Mr. Seib is daily in receipt of letters from local assemblies in different parts of the country, and most of the communications express discontent with the present head of the order and the methods of the present administration. "What progress are you making in the reorganization?" Mr. Seib was asked. "First rate," he answered. "We intend to hold a national convention some time during the winter, and it will be called as soon as five or six district assemblies have been organized. Every large trade center in the country will be represented."

—A special telegram from New York says: Senator Louis Tanco of the Colombian Legation at Washington, and now in this city, says that the expense account of the work on the Panama Canal up to June 30, 1886, was $151,500,000.

Some of the items are peculiar as well as interesting. For example: The excavating cost, $25,000,000; the offices at New York, Paris, and Panama, $8,400,000. The purchase of the Panama Railroad $18,000,000; and of hospitals $7,000,000. Materials have caused an outlay of $22,000,000; servants for employees, $2,700,000. Mules and wagons figure up a total of $152,000; the building for offices, private residence for manager, country seat for same, grounds, etc., $5,250,000. Carriages and horses for employees cost $215,000; a parlor-car for manager $42,000; and interest on the capital $30,000,000. The encampments on the line foot up $9,000,000; the police, for encampments, $2,300,000; and the pharmaceutical staff, $4,800,000. It cost the company $2,000,000 to indemnify the commissioners sent at the company's expense to report on the canal, in other words to defray the expense of entertaining the guests invited to accompany De Lesseps to Panama, to inspect the canal; and $5,000,000 to indemnify contractors for the company's failure to carry out certain contracts, and $5,000,000 for employees on the line. Senator Tanco believes the canal, if ever finished, will cost $300,000,000. As the work advances greater difficulties are met, and now what remains is mostly solid rock. He doubts if the canal will ever be finished by the present administration. The financial outlook of the company, Senator Tanco says, is quite alarming.

POLITICAL POINTS.

—The American party has now been in existence in Philadelphia for five weeks, and there are nearly 10,000 members up to date. Says a telegram from the Quaker City:

The promoters are nearly ready to effect permanent organization in several assembly districts, and within a few days this will be perfected. It is said that the movement is principally among the business men of the city. The working classes have not been interested to a very great extent. The committee claim that as soon as the laboring men find that one of the objects of the party is to keep out pauper labor, they will join in large numbers. The men interested in the success of the party have never before interested themselves in politics. James Gillilan, ex-United States Treasurer, has accepted the position of Treasurer of the Provisional Committee. Andrew Powell is its Chairman, and George F. Shaver is Secretary. The demand for cards is very great, and the committee reports that 15,000 have already been distributed. Outside of New York City converts are being made.

FIRES AND ACCIDENTS.

—Fire at Mound City, Ill., destroyed thirty-five buildings, including two hotels, the Mayor's residence, the Patriot office, and three dry goods stores. A negro has been arrested for causing the conflagration by setting fire to an unoccupied hotel.

—The main building of Barnum & Bailey's "Greatest Show on Earth" was entirely destroyed by fire at Bridgeport, Conn. Says a dispatch from that city:

The first intimation of the fire was given by the roaring of the lions and tigers, which seemed to realize the impending danger. Next the elephants struggled in their chains, but in an incredibly short time the flames swept from one end of the huge structure to the other. No one dared to approach the building, being fearful of the cruel animals. Three elephants were burned up and thirty-six broke from their fastenings and dashed through the sides of the burning building. Their roars, and trumpeting and sounds of torment were terrific. Six elephants and a large African hippopotamus rushed about the streets presenting a sickening appearance. Their sides were burned, and great pieces of flesh a foot square fell off. Thirty elephants and one large lion made their escape from the town and started off across the country. In the horseroom were all the ring animals, trained stallions, ponies, etc. These were all burned. In the upper rooms were the tents, poles, seats, harness, etc., for the entire show, and these too were all destroyed. In the cat room were the birds, monkeys, three rhinoceros, hyenas, tigers, lions, and all the menagerie, which fell a prey to the flames. So rapid did the flames leap across the main building that the firemen made no attempt to save it, but turned their streams upon the chariot buildings and car sheds, which they succeeded in saving, but the heat was so intense that this was accomplished with the greatest difficulty. The total loss is estimated at $700,000, upon which there was but $100,000 insurance.

—A terribly fatal accident occurred on the Cleveland and Pittsburgh Road, near Bellaire, Ohio. A wrecking train plunged into a landslide, and Engineer Dick Johnson, Fireman James Russell, and Brakeman Hugh Niles were killed and the train badly wrecked. The fireman lived for several hours after the wreck, but the other two were killed outright.

—A London dispatch says: "There is now no doubt that Capt. Taat went down with his steamer. Mr. Robson, one of the passengers saved, stated to a reporter that the W. A. Scholton had just weighed anchor when the collision occurred. There were 800 life-belts on board, and most of the passengers were supplied with them, but they proved useless in a majority of cases, as the people were engulfed with the ship. The steamer's decks burst when she was foundering. The sunken vessel lies in twenty fathoms of water."

—A J. McCrea's pork-packing establishment at Cleveland, Ohio, was burned, with a loss of $35,000.

—The Newark (Ohio) wire cloth works were destroyed by flames.

—The steamer Charles P. Chouteau was burned at Sunflower Landing, Miss., 150 miles below Memphis. Her cargo at the time consisted of 4,500 bales of cotton. Two of the crew were burned. The Chouteau was the largest cotton-carrier afloat.

THE CRIMINAL RECORD.

—A Woodbine (Ky.) special says: "The town of Jellico, a mining settlement on the Kentucky and Tennessee border, is in a state bordering on riot over a desperate and bloody affray that resulted in the death of four persons. Noah Miller and a number of miners were gathered in a saloon at the outskirts of the village freely spending their week's earnings in drinking and gambling. They soon became engaged in a quarrel, and Marshal Woolwine attempted to arrest Miller and some of the other miners. A desperate fight ensued, and Woolwine, seeing that he was about to be overpowered, drew his revolver and shot Miller dead. His friends now rallied and drove the officer away. Subsequently the friends of the slain man Miller collected together and attacked the Marshal, wounding two of his posse, James and John L. Smith. Frank Kincard, Press Willoughby, and Richard Kerr were killed."

—Henry V. Leslie and James A. L. Wilson, formerly Secretary and Treasurer, respectively, of the Delaware and Chesapeake Canal Company, at Philadelphia, pleaded guilty of embezzlement and were sentenced to eight and six years, respectively, in the penitentiary. By their operations the concern lost nearly $700,000.

—A Wilkesbarre (Pa.) special says: Jack Gilmore and Ed Dennison, miners, fought a desperate prize-fight at Luzerne Borough. The fight lasted one hour and ten minutes, and forty-four rounds were passed. When the forty-fifth round was called, a constable broke into the ring and declared the men under arrest. Both were terribly punished. While the fight was in progress a dog owned by Dennison, which viewed the battle from between the legs of the bystanders, broke through the ropes, and, on seeing his master knocked to the ground, bit Gilmore in the face. The dog refused to loosen his hold, and his jaws had to be pried open by an iron bar. Dennison was taken to a coal-breaker, where he was left without care and attention, and a physician called to attend him says he may die. It is said that the men quarreled over a girl, the daughter of a mining boss.

—A New Orleans telegram gives the following particulars of a sanguinary conflict between citizens and a body of negro strikers at Thibodaux, La.:

About daylight the colored strikers in a body started toward the white pickets which had been stationed here to protect property, and opened fire upon them, seriously wounding two estimable young men. When the news was brought to headquarters a general alarm was sounded and on all sides men and boys fully armed fell into ranks and at a double quick marched to the scene where the deed had been perpetrated. This party drew fire from an ambush, whereupon they returned the fire, and a general fusillade followed, which was kept up till the negroes were dispersed. Ten negroes are known to have been killed and several more were wounded. While the New Orleans communists, who are morally responsible for this service of life, are denounced on every side, nothing but praise is heard for the conduct of the gallant pickets. Their prompt acts saved the town, and undoubtedly also saved the lives of hundreds of innocent women and children. It was a moment fraught with great danger to the citizens, and had the pickets hesitated or failed to do their duty it is certain that the list of killed would have run up into the hundreds. The Governor has again ordered the militia to the scene of the troubles.

—John H. Bigus, a colored man, charged with felonious assault on Mrs. Yeakle, an aged white woman, was taken from jail at Frederick, Md., and hanged to a tree about a quarter of a mile from the prison. The masked lynchers secured their victim by battering down the jail doors.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

—The Executive Committee of the National Grange, in session at Lansing, Mich., reported $4,581 expended during the past year for lecturers, and recommended the establishment of a permanent headquarters at Washington, where records, etc., could be kept. It also favored changes in the patent laws.

—A Dominion Senator asserts that nearly every French decoration worn by French-Canadians has been purchased. Some of the money used in this peculiar traffic was taken from a fund raised for the purchase of books in France for a parliamentary library.

—The North Alabama conference of the Southern Methodist Church adopted at Tuscaloosa a resolution requesting Dr. D. C. Kelley of Nashville, one of the most eminent Methodist divines in America and missionary treasurer of the general conference, to resign his official position because he defended the conduct of Emma Abbott in rising in church recently to defend herself against harsh utterances from the pulpit.

—Engineer Markham and his fireman were attacked by a panther between Artell and Minden, Iowa, on the Burlington and Missouri Road. The men had left the locomotive to repair a wheel, when the feline sprang upon them and severely lacerated both before being dispatched with a bullet. The animal measured six feet and weighed over 200 pounds.

—A Cairo (Ill.) dispatch says: "The woods are on fire for a radius of fifty miles in every direction from that place. The smoke from the burning forests is very dense, and interrupts navigation on the river to a great extent."

LINCOLN AS A LAWYER.

His Repugnance to Overcharging Dissatisfied His Fellow-Lawyers and the Court.

Among the most prominent of Mr. Lincoln's traits was his tender-heartedness, which during the war often overrode discipline and caused great embarrassment to the army officials. Justice was his, strongly tempered with mercy. Ward H. Lamont, formerly Mr. Lincoln's law partner, relates an incident in Mr. Lincoln's law practice, years before he attained the Presidency, that well illustrates the inflexible conscientiousness which was the rule of Lincoln's whole life:

Although Mr. Lincoln was my senior by eighteen years, in one important particular I certainly was, in a marvelous degree, his acknowledged superior. One of the first things I learned, after getting fairly under way as a lawyer, was to charge well for legal services—a branch of the practice that Mr. Lincoln never could learn. In fact, the lawyers of the circuit often complained that his fees were not at all commensurate with the service rendered. He at length left that branch of the business wholly to me; and to my tender mercy clients were turned over to be slaughtered according to my popular and more advanced ideas of the dignity of our profession. This soon led to serious and shocking embarrassment.

Early in our practice a gentleman named Scott placed in our hands a case of some importance. He had a demoted sister who possessed property to the amount of $10,000, mostly in cash. A conservator, as he was called, had been appointed to take charge of the estate, and we were employed to resist a motion to remove the conservator. A designing adventurer had become acquainted with the girl, knowing that she had money, and sought to marry her—hence the motion. Scott, the brother and conservator, before we entered upon the case, insisted that I should fix the amount of the fee. I told him that it would be $250, adding, however, that he had better wait; it might not give us much trouble, and in that event a lesser amount would do. He agreed at once to pay $250, as he expected a hard contest over the motion. The case was tried inside of twenty minutes; our success was complete; Scott was satisfied and cheerfully paid over the money inside the bar, Mr. Lincoln looking on. Scott then went out and Mr. Lincoln asked: "What did you charge that man?" I told him $250.

Said he: "Lamont, that is all wrong. The service was not worth that sum; give him back at least half of it." I protested that the fee was settled in advance; that Scott was perfectly satisfied and so expressed himself. "That may be," retorted Mr. Lincoln, with a look of distress and of undisguised displeasure; "but I am not satisfied. This is positively wrong. Go, call him back and return half the money at least, or I will not receive one cent of it for my share."

I did go, and Scott was astonished when I handed back half the fee. This conversation had attracted the attention of the lawyers and the Court. Judge David Davis, then on our circuit bench, called Mr. Lincoln to him. The Judge never could whisper, but in this instance he probably did his best. At all events, in attempting to whisper to Mr. Lincoln, he trumpeted his rebuke in about these words, and in rasping tones that could be heard all over the court-room: "Lincoln, I have been watching you and Lamont. You are impoverishing this bar by your picayune charges of fees, and the lawyers have reason to complain of you. You are now almost as poor as Lazarus, and if you don't make people pay you more for your services you will die as poor as Job's turkey!"

Judge O. L. Davis, the leading lawyer in that part of the State, promptly applauded this malediction from the bench; but Mr. Lincoln was immovable. "That money," said he, "comes out of the pocket of a poor demoted girl; and I would rather starve than to swindle her in this manner."

That evening the lawyers got together and tried Mr. Lincoln before a moot tribunal, called "The Ogmorthorial Court." He was found guilty and fined for his awful crime against the pockets of his brethren of the bar. The fine he paid with great good humor, and then kept the crowd of lawyers in uproarious laughter until after midnight. He persisted in his revolt, however, declaring that with his consent his firm should never, during its life, or after its dissolution, deserve the reputation enjoyed by those shining lights of the profession, "Catchem & Cheatem."

Comicalities in Plants.

There is Jack-in-the-Pulpit, the flowers of the plant known as the Indian turnip (Arisema triphyllum), who could never look at one of these singular blossoms without that same stirring of the risible faculties which one experiences in pursuing a parody or caricature, or witnessing a pantomime? The very sight of one is provocative of mirth. How many times in my school-days did I challenge the teacher's frown by involuntary giggles at the whimsical look of the imprisoned Jack! Monk's hood of the genus aconitum has quaint, comical flowers, suggestive of an old lady's head in a night-cap. The well-known fly-trap (Dionaea muscipula) strikes the mind with all the effect of a joke. The leaves of this plant are fringed with stiff bristles, and fold together when certain hairs on their upper surface are touched, thus seizing insects that light on them. Seeing the leaf stand temptingly open, a poor fly pops in for shelter or food. No sooner has it touched its feet than some sensitive fibers are affected, and the cilia at the top closes in upon the intruder, imprisoning him as effectually as if a boy had taken and closed him in a box. The pitcher-plant or monkey-cap of the east, although not particularly ludicrous, has a whimsical arrangement which borders closely upon the human economy. To the foot-stalks of each leaf of this plant, near the base, is attached a kind of bag, shaped like a pitcher, of the same consistence and color as the leaf in the earlier state of its growth, but changing with age to a reddish purple. It is girt around with an oblique band or hoop, and covered with a lid neatly fitted, and movable on a kind of hinge or strong fiber, which, passing over the handle, connects the vessel with the leaf. By the shrinking or contracting of this fiber the lid is drawn open whenever the weather is shadowy or damp. When sufficient moisture has fallen and the pitcher saturated, the cover falls down so firmly that evaporation cannot ensue. The water is thus gradually absorbed through the handle in the foot-stalk of the leaf, giving sustenance and vigor to the plant. As soon as the pitchers are exhausted, the lids again open to admit whatever moisture may fall; and when the plant has produced its seed, and the dry season fairly sets in, it withers, with all the covers of the pitchers standing open. The flower of the bee orchis is like a piece of honeycomb, and the bees delight in it. Then there is the snap dragon, the corolla of which is cleft, and turned back so as to look like a rabbit's mouth, especially if pinched on the sides, when the animal appears as if nibbling. The flower of the cock's comb and the seed pod of the mostynia proboscidea bear curious resemblance to the objects which have suggested their names. Some kinds of the mendicago have also curious seed-pods, some being like bee hives, some like caterpillars, and some like hedgehogs—the last being itself an essentially ludicrous object.—Floral Cabinet.

To Clean Silver.

Dissolve a lump of carbonate of ammonia in a pan of absolutely boiling water, pass the silver through it and dry immediately. Once a week rub the spots with fine whiting dissolved in spirits of wine. When this is quite well dried on the silver rub each piece carefully with clean towels and then with soft chamois. It will be beautifully bright. Still better than whiting is the jeweler's rouge, made in bars for the express purpose of cleaning silver. Wash the silver every time it is used, in a pan by itself, with plenty of boiling water, a brush and silver soap. Dry each piece as it is taken out of the water and rub with the chamois cloth before putting it away. Treated in this way silver never becomes dim and the weekly polishing is not a formidable affair.

"AND yet," said he, "it is almost as good bathing weather as it was two months ago." "True," said she, "but then there is nobody at the beaches to see you when you are going into the water."—Boston Courier.

It would not be a "muddy stream of politics" if good citizens would lend a hand and help to keep it clean.

WHICH DO YOU BELIEVE?

Both Sides of an Absorbing Controversy Clearly Stated:

According to "Scribner's Statistical Atlas of the Census of 1880," there was not a single death from kidney disease in the entire United States from 1870 to 1880!

But can this be possible? If we are to believe the articles of one of our best advertisers, kidney disease, and diseases arising from kidney derangements, is actually responsible for the majority of deaths!

Why, then, such a discrepancy? Fortunately for these people their statements are confirmed.

The suspicion is nourished by them, and we confess with good reason, that because the medical profession is not able to cure extreme kidney disorders, the profession officially disavows from the public the fact of their prevalence; meanwhile its journals are filled with regrets at this prevalence and the impotency of the profession to treat it successfully!

Why is the public misled? These advertisers shrewdly say it is because the profession, if it concedes what they claim, that kidney disease is universal, fears, that the people will desert the powerless doctors and use the advertised preparation!

We do not know but they are right! But what should the people do? Do? Read the evidence and guide themselves accordingly!

The advertisers claim to have cured hundreds of thousands of cases of Bright's disease and all lesser forms of kidney, liver, and blood derangements. They offer $5,000 for proof that their statements of cures, in every quarter of the globe, are not true, so far as they know. These statements are from prominent men and women all over the world, and the closest scrutiny is invited!

If a physician cures a man and he knows it and says it, people believe him. If Warner's safe cure cures a man and he knows it and says it over his own signature, it is just as conclusive evidence in the latter case as in the former.

A few years ago, after having broken down prejudices in England, Canada, the United States, Australia, India, and China, the owners of this great remedy applied for the privilege of its manufacture and sale in Germany. The laws of that great country are very stringent, and nothing can be manufactured or sold until it wins permission from the government, and this will not be granted until the government is satisfied that the best interests of the public and its individuals will be served by such a preparation.

The medicine was chemically and microscopically analyzed (as accurately as possible) the formulae were examined (with perhaps a secret prejudice against them) by the government chemists, searching inquiry was everywhere made at home and abroad to verify its past record and reputation. Finally, it was triumphant even under the most critical examination, and full permission was given to make and sell Warner's safe cure in the Fatherland—the only life privilege of the kind ever granted to any American proprietary preparation.

Unprejudiced people will say that this favorable consideration of the merits of Warner's safe cure by the German government was a very significant as well as a very distinguished compliment to its merits, and so it is.

The evidence is all in favor of these intelligent advertisers, who have certainly won universal public approval, because of their straightforward course in proclaiming the merits of their remedies.

Birds Enjoy Exercise.

That birds enjoy the exercise of their powers their can be no manner of doubt. But, as a fact, bird life presents innumerable instances of the maintenance of the powers of flight in species to whose existence it is by no means essential. The skylark does not soar from mercenary motives; pigeons, domesticated for generations, fly about all day long, though they need to seek neither food nor shelter. It is not necessary to watch birds on the wing for very long to convince one's self the act of flight is one of pure enjoyment; that it is cultivated and adorned with the refinements which characterize an "accomplishment." Such is the evolution of the tumbler pigeon, such the more refined and masterly hovering of some birds who possess the power of so balancing themselves on a slanting breeze as to remain motionless with respect to the earth, without apparently moving a wing or a feather, floating all the time, still and calm.

Successful Whaling Voyage.

The days of successful whaling are not over, though the business has become very risky. The substitution of steamers for sailing vessels has resulted in some very good voyages lately. One of the most fortunate skippers of the day is Capt. Bauldry, of the New Bedford steam whaler Orea, who has just returned with all the oil and bone his ship can carry. He actually gave away two whales that his crew had killed to a rival because his own storage room was full.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

MORE helpful than all wisdom is one draught of simple human pity that will not forsake us.

When everything else fails, Dr. Sago's Catarrh Remedy cures.

THE pass that railroad stockholders unanimously object to is the passing of a dividend.—Boston Commercial.

FRIDAY DECEMBER 2, 1887.

Walter S. Maxwell has purchased the Butler Record. We don't know Walter, but wish him success.

The new Methodist church at Waterloo is nearly enclosed. The work is being pushed rapidly forward.

The Garrett Clipper don't seem to have a very brotherly feeling for Wash Woodcox. Why is this thusly?

Look after your chimneys, and see that there is no danger of fire. A little precaution in this way may save you from burning out some time.

W. C. Patterson attended the K. of L. Lodge at Butler, Monday evening. He is a member of that organization, and went up to see some new recruits ride the goat.

The Paulding Gazette says that the democrats carried Indiana this fall, by a small majority. Is that so? Indiana people will be surprised to hear that they had an election this fall.

The Auburn Dispatch wants to know whether we have any anarchists in St. Joe? Well no, not exactly; but we have a few men here who believe in free whiskey, and that is a pretty big step in that direction.

The Edgerton gas well is said to have a capacity of 158,000 feet per day—enough to supply eighty families; two stoves to the family. They are piping through the town, and in consequence Edgerton is experiencing quite a boom.

There is to be some kind of a circus at Waterloo during the holidays. We haven't been able to catch onto just what it is, or whether there is to be a menagerie with it or not. We think there is though, however, as we see that Billy Fisher is connected with it, and he is a sort of a menagerie, himself.

Joe Russell, a Fort Wayne traveling man, with a crushed-pumpkin colored moustache, came down from Avilla on No. 16, Monday morning, and he says that the engine that pulled the train was paralyzed on one side, and that every time the train made a stop, the fireman had to get out and start her up with a crow-bar. They expected a new engine at Garrett, but there was none to be had, so they made the trip on through with a crippled locomotive. The Billy O must be close run for engines, or else they have more than usual out on the road.

We neglected to mention last week that the pay car passed through on Tuesday. Other papers along the line made mention of it, but owing to the rush and hurry of getting out our large Thanksgiving edition, (something considerable less than 2000 copies,) the railroad editor forgot to report the item. This was a bad blunder of ours, and no doubt there are people to this day that don't know that the pay car has gone through. It is not our intention to leave out such important items and we promise our readers that it shall not occur again very soon.

OUR CORRESPONDENTS:

CONCORD.
Mrs. Sepp Hull is quite a cripple, caused from erysipelas in her foot. Rev. Langley and family, of St. Joe, spent Thanksgiving with F. Buchanan and family.

Mrs. John Guysinger entertained her father and mother, brothers and sisters, Thanksgiving day.

Mrs. James Rickett has been quite sick for the past week, and is but very little better at present.

George Draggoo was quite sick for a few days last week, but was able last Tuesday to over-see his butchering affairs.

About fifteen ladies went in by invitation last Tuesday, and assisted Mrs. John Hull in quilting and sewing carpet rags.

Mrs. Hannah Draggoo returned to her home in Michigan last Thursday. Her nephew Frank Draggoo accompanied her and will probably remain all winter.

Jim Hennessy and family, Nelson Tustison, and wife and Mrs. Joe Baker, who is visiting here from Dakota, ate roast turkey Thanksgiving day with Henry Baker and wife.

A quiet little wedding occurred at the residence of Mr. Hiltbrand last Sabbath afternoon. It was the marriage of his daughter Sadie to Mr. Wilnot Coburn of Coburntown. Rev. Thomas tied the conjugal knot in the presence of no one except members of the family. We join a multitude of friends in extending congratulations, and wish them smooth sailing all their lives. The happy couple left for their future home in Coburntown last Monday.

SPENCERVILLE.

John Carnes steps high. It's a boy.

G. A. Bishop spent part of the week in Chicago.

Esquire Beery moved into his new house this week.

George Hollabaugh went to Fort Wayne Tuesday.

Nelson Lake has a sister from Ohio visiting him.

Miss Maud Murray spent Thanksgiving at Garrett.

Mrs. Fryberger went to Van Wert Thursday to visit her daughter Florence.

Elias Zimmerman, wife and daughter Bessie, of Auburn, Sundayed at this place.

Will Tindall and Miss Rena Fryberger spent a few days at Hudson last week.

Mrs. David Sanders has been visiting friends and relatives in and near this place.

Miss Becca Johnson will take rooms at Mrs. Fairfield's, and spend the winter in town.

Prof. C. N. W. Wearne is giving a course of lectures on Phrenology every evening this week.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society will be entertained by Mrs. Ben Zimmerman, Saturday afternoon Dec. 3rd, 1887. All are invited.

The young people of the M. E. church, will give a White Slave Social at Provines' Hall, Saturday evening, Dec. 3rd, 1887. Every one is especially invited to attend.

In spite of the inclemency of the weather the Thanksgiving services at this place, were quite well attended and the ladies were well pleased with the success of their dinner and oyster supper.

Murray Bros., would announce to the public that their mill is now in running order, and they are prepared to furnish the best of flour. The roller process that has just been put in is one of the finest, and the machinery throughout the mill is new. Now who can say that Spencer-ville is on the decline?

August Kinsey, St. Joe, Ind.

"Mum" socials are all the rage now. Let's have one in St. Joe, by all means. It would be quite a curiosity to see some folks in this town keep mum for a few minutes.

Coal is very scarce and hard to get. Some of our citizens who have coal stoves have been compelled to abandon them this cold weather, and hustle pretty closely around the old reliable wood stove. A coal stove is indeed often a cold stove, now days.

Although it was a very disagreeable evening, the modest little sum of $25 was taken in at the oyster supper, given by the young people on last Thursday evening; notwithstanding the fact that some kind hearted persons had prophesied that they would not take in enough to pay expenses. You can't sometimes most always tell about these things.

Mervin Widney and Frank Sechler were down at the big woods last week, hunting. They came home minus a good deal of powder and shot, but no game to speak of. They saw one deer, but it was so wild that they could not get close enough to get a shot at it. The fact is, this deer to the big woods to hunt is all played out; there is just as game to be found in the woods here as here at home.

A WOMAN'S DISCOVERY. Another wonderful discovery, has been made, and that to by a lady in this county. Disease fastened its clutches upon her and for seven years she withstood its severest tests, but her vital organs were undermined, and death seemed imminent. For three months she coughed incessantly and could not sleep. She bought of us a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery, for Consumption and was so much relieved on taking first dose that she slept all night and with one bottle has been miraculously cured. Her name is Mrs. Luther Latz. Thus write W. C. Hamrick & Co., of Shelby N. C. Get a free trial bottle at W. C. Patterson's Drug Store.

The Misses Delora Pottit and Ida Filer, of Hudson, Michigan, are the guests of George Wilnot and family this week.

Wilnot Supervisor Coburn got a rousing good belling on Monday evening. It served him just right—any one who has been as long about getting married as he has.

Any one desirous of taking a good church and home paper, should send for a sample copy of the Herald and Presbyterian, published at Cincinnati, Ohio. Send five one cent stamps to their address, and get a handsome Calendar for 1888.

The township institute will be held at the school house in this place, on Saturday Dec. 10th, 1887. All teachers in the township are expected to be present. County Superintendent Merica will have charge of the institute. An interesting time is expected.

It will cost about $25,000 to pipe the town of Auburn for gas.

One of Hicksville's former saloonists has opened up a fine saloon at Defiance.

The Methodist Sunday school will have a Christmas ship on Christmas eve.

Auburn papers quoted the price of wheat at 72 cents last week, while our dealers were paying 74 and 75 cents.

Manford Monroe, formerly a resident of Coburntown, was married last week at Hicksville to Miss Sweet. Manford got Sweet.

Two-thirds of the people in this part of the county take the News, the other third borrow it, and so you see they all read it. Advertisers take notice.

Hicksville papers both had full page home advertisements last week, besides their regular weekly advertising matter. People over that way are strong believers in the efficacy of printer's ink.

A London barber is said to have accomplished the extraordinary feat of shaving seventy-five men in less than an hour, the other day, on a wager. That sounds like an old, dry, wormy chestnut.

L. B. Goldsmith of Mt. Hope, was in and renewed his subscription to the News, this week. Mr. Goldsmith is an old and highly respected citizen of that vicinity, but has always done the most of his trading at this place, and was one among the first subscribers to the News.

A man by the name of Godfrey Lawrence, near Van Wert, Ohio, last week was at work in the bottom of a well when it caved in and 28 feet of earth and stone covered him. It was 13 hours before he could be reached, and he was then found standing on his feet, completely wallowed, his hands were raised over his head and his tongue had been bitten off in his death struggle.

M. T. Bishop is preambulating in the pine regions of Michigan, this week, laying in a supply of lumber and shingles for next season's trade. M. T. usually goes north about this time of the year, and by paying spot cash, he secures special low prices, which enables him to sell building material lower than the neighboring towns. He has had an excellent trade the past season, and expects to boom things in the year to come.

Prof. Wedan has really gone, and left quite a number of friends to mourn his departure. It seems there are several persons at Auburn who hold claims against him, and in all probability they will continue to hold them. The Professor undertook to organize a class here some time ago, but our people did not seem to be in a singing mood, and he failed to get up a class, and it was fortunate for the town that he did not succeed. Such fellows ought to be given a wide berth.

Some one has advanced the idea that gas is usually found along some stream, and from that standpoint they claim that we are likely to strike it here, as we are right on the bank of the St. Joe river. Auburn's famous gas well is near Cedar Creek, Edgerton's well is right on the line of the St. Joe river, and so they claim that it is usually along some stream where gas is found in paying quantities. We hardly think that kind of reasoning will pan out, but after all, we are just as likely to find gas in this locality as at many other points where it has been found. We stand one chance in fifty and may as well take that chance.

Farmers, get your grists ground at the Anchor Mills, Hicksville, Ohio, where you get first class work. Remember the location, below grain elevator.

When the Auburn gas well No. 2 was down about 225 feet, they struck a vein of water that raised in a ten inch pipe fully twelve feet above the surface of the ground. It was rather remarkable, and would have no doubt made a fine flowing fountain. They can, however, at some future time, bore down near the same place and probably strike the same vein. A fountain such as that would likely make, could be made of great benefit to the town, as well as a thing of beauty.

THE VERDICT UNANIMOUS.

W. D. Sult, Druggist, Bippus, Ind., testifies: "I can recommend Electric Bitters as the very best remedy. Every bottle sold has given relief in every case. One man took six bottles, and was cured of Rheumatism of 10 years standing. Another man, druggist, Bellville, O., writes: 'The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my 20 years experience, is Electric Bitters. Thousands of others have added their testimony, so that the verdict is unanimous: Electric Bitters do cure all diseases of the Liver, Kidneys or Blood. Only a half dollar a bottle at W. C. Patterson's Drug Store.'

The pig is the greatest navigator on top of soil. He can discover more small holes, and crawl thru them in less time than any politician I ever heard of. He is a skemer, and is always just pig-headed enough to have his own way. # THE WELL OF BETHLEHEM.

Discourse by Rev. Dr. Talmage at the Tabernacle.

The Gospel the Fountain of Perpetual Youth Skeptics Measure Eternity with an Hour Glass and the Throne of God with a Yard Stick.

BROOKLYN, Nov. 27.—This morning at the Tabernacle, after explaining appropriate passages of Scripture, the Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D., gave out the following hymn, that was sung by the congregation with great heartiness:

Buried in sorrow and in sin
At hell's dark door we lay;
But we arise by grace divine,
To see a glorious day.

The subject of the sermon was: "Thirst in a Cavern;" and the text: "Oh that one would give me drink of the water of the Well of Bethlehem, which is by the gate!"—II. Samuel xxi. 15.

War, always distressing, is especially ruinous in harvest time. When the crops are all ready for the sickle, to have them trodden down by cavalry horses and heavy supply trains gulling the fields is enough to make any man's heart sick. When the last great war broke out in Europe, and France and Germany were coming into horrid collision, I rode across their golden harvests and saw the tents pitched and the trenches dug in the very midst of the ripe fields; the long scythes of battle sharpening to mow down harvests of men in great winrows of the dead. It was at this season of harvest that the army of the Philistines came down upon Bethlehem. Hark to the clamor of their voices, the neighing of their chargers, the blare of their trumpets, and the clash of their shields!

Let David and his men fall back! The Lord's host sometimes loses the day. But David knew where to hide. He had been brought up in that country. Boys are inquisitive, and they know all about the region where they were born and brought up. If you should go back to the old homestead, you could with your own eyes shut, find your way to the meadow, or the orchard, or the hill back of the house, with which you were familiar thirty or forty years ago. So David knew the cave of Adullam. Perhaps, in his boyhood days, he had played "hide and seek" with his comrades all about the old cave; and though others might not have known it, David did. Travelers say there is only one way of getting into the cave, and that is by a very narrow path; but David was stout, and steady headed, and steady nerved; and so, with his three brave staff officers, he goes along that path, finds his way into the cave, sits down, looks around at the roof and the dark passages of the mountain, feels very weary with forced march, and water he must have or die. I do not know but there may have been drops trickling down the side of the cavern or that there may have been some water in the goat-skin slung to his girdle, but that was not what he wanted. He wanted a deep, full, cold drink, such as a man gets only out of an old well with moss-covered bucket. David remembered that very near that cave of Adullam there was such a well as that, a well to which he used to go in boyhood—the well of Bethlehem; and he almost imagines that he can hear the liquid splash of that well, and his parched tongue moves through his hot lips as he says: "Oh, that one would give me drink of the water of the well of Bethlehem, which is by the gate."

It was no sooner said than done. The three brave staff officers, bound to their feet and start. Brave soldiers will take even a hint from their commander. But between them and the well lay the host of the Philistines; and what could three men do with a great army? Yet where there is a will there is a way, and, with their swords slashing this way and that, they make their path to the well. While the Philistines are amazed at the seeming foolhardiness of these three men, and cannot make up their minds exactly what it means, the three men have come to the well. They drop the bucket. They bring up the water. They pour it in the pail, and then start for the cave. "Stop them!" cried the Philistines. "Clip them with swords! Stab them with your spears! Stop those three men!" Too late! They have got around the hill. The hot rocks are splashed with the overflowing water from the vessel as it is carried up the cliffs. The three men go along the dangerous path, and with cheeks flushed with the excitement and all out of breath in their haste they fling their swords, red with the skirmish, to the side of the cave, and cry out to David, "There, captain of the host, is what you wanted, a drink of the well of Bethlehem, which is by the gate."

A text is no use to me unless I can find Christ in it, and unless I can bring a Gospel out of these words, that will arouse, and comfort, and bless, I shall wish I had never seen them; for your time would be wasted, and against my soul the dark record would be made that this day I stood before a great audience of sinning, suffering and dying men, and told them of no rescue. By the cross of the Son of God, by the throne of the eternal judgment, that shall not be! May the Lord Jesus help me to tell you the truth to-day!

You know that carrier pigeons have sometimes letters tied under the wing, and they fly hundreds of miles—100 miles an hour—carrying a message. So I have thought I would like to have it now. Oh, heavenly Dove! bring under thy wing to-day, to my soul and to the souls of this people, some message of light, and love, and peace!

It is not an unusual thing to see people gather around a well in summertime. The husbandman puts down his cradle at the well curb. The builder puts down his trowel. The traveler puts down his pack. Then one draws the water for all the rest, himself taking the very last. The cup is passed around, and the fires of thirst are put out; the traveler starts on his journey, and the workman takes up his burden.

My friends, we come to-day around the Gospel well. We put forth our pack or burdens and our implements of toil. One man must draw the water for those who have gathered around the well. I will try and draw the water to-day; and if, after I have poured out from this living fountain for your soul, I just taste of it myself, you will not begrudge me a "drink from the water of the well of Bethlehem, which is by the gate."

This Gospel well, like the well spoken of in the text, is a well of Bethlehem. David had known hundreds of wells of water, but he wanted to drink from that particular one, and he thought nothing could slake his thirst like that. And unless your soul and mine can get access to the fountain open for sin and uncleanness we must die. That fountain is the well of Bethlehem. It was dug in the night. It was dug by the light of a lantern—the star that hung down over the manger. It was dug not at the gate of Caesar's palaces, not in the park of a Jerusalem bargainmaker. It was dug in a barn. The camels lifted their weary heads to listen as the work went on. The shepherds, unable to sleep, because the heavens were filled with bands of music, came down to see the opening of the well. The angels of God, at the first gush of the living water, dipped their chalices of joy into it and drank to the health of earth and Heaven, as the cried, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace!" Sometimes in our modern barns that water is brought through the pipes of the city to the very nostrils of the horses or cattle; but this well in the Bethlehem barn was not so much for the beasts that perish as for our race: thirst smitten, desert traveled, and simoon struck. Oh, my soul, weary with sin, stoop down and drink to-day out of that Bethlehem well!

As the heart panteth after the water brooks, so my soul panteth after thee, O God. You would get a better understanding of this amidst the Adirondacks in summer time. Here comes a swift-footed deer. The hounds are close on the track; it has leaped chasms and scaled cliffs; it is fagged out; its eyes are rolling in death; its tongue is lolling from its foaming mouth. Faster the deer, faster the dogs, until it plunges into Schroon Lake and the hounds can follow it no farther, and it puts down its head and mouth until the nostril is clean submerged in the cool wave, and I understand it: "As the heart panteth for the water brook, so panteth my soul after thee, O God." O God, bring me water from this well! Little child, who has learned of Jesus in the Sabbath-school, bring me some of that living water. Old man, who fifty years ago didst find the well, bring me some of that water. Stranger in a strange land, who used to hear sung amidst the highlands of Scotland, to the tune of "Bonnie Doon," "The Star, the Star of Bethlehem," bring me some of that water. Whosoever drinketh of that water shall never thirst. "Oh, that one would give me drink of the water of the well of Bethlehem, which is by the gate."

Again, this Gospel well, like the one spoken of in the text, is a captured well. David remembered the time when that good water of Bethlehem was in the possession of his ancestors. His father drank there, his mother drank there. He remembered how the water tasted when he was a boy and came up there from play. We never forget the old well we used to drink out of when we were boys or girls. There was something in it that blessed the lips and refreshed the brow better than anything we have found since. As we think of that dear old well the memories of the past flow into each other like crystalline drops, sun glistened, and all the more as we remember that the hands that used to lay hold the rope and the hearts that beat against the well curb are still now. We never get over these reminiscences. George F. Morris, the great song writer of this country, once said to me that his song, "Woodman, Spare That Tree," was sung in a great concert hall, and the memories of early life were so wrought upon the audience by that song that, after the singing was done, an aged man arose in the audience, overwhelmed with emotion, and said: "Sir, will you please to tell me whether the woodman really spared the tree?" We never forget the tree under which we played. We never forget the fountain at which we drank. Alas for the man who has no early memories!

David thought of that well, that boyhood well, and he wanted to drink of it, but he remembered that the Philistines had captured it. When these three men tried to come up to the well in behalf of David, they saw swords gleaming around about it. And this is true of this Gospel well. The Philistines have at times captured it. When we come to take a full, old-fashioned drink of pardon and comfort, do not their swords of indignation and sarcasm flash? Why, the skeptics tell us that we cannot come to that fountain! They say the water is not fit to drink, anyhow. "If you are really thirsty now, there is the well of philosophy, there is the well of art, there is the well of science." They try to substitute, instead of our boyhood faith, a modern mixture. They say a great many beautiful things about the soul, and they try to feed our immortal hunger on rose leaves, and mix a mint julep of worldly stimulants when nothing will satisfy us but "a drink of water of the well of Bethlehem, which is at the gate." They try to starve us on husks, when the father's banquet is ready, and the best ring is taken from the casket, and the sweetest harp is struck for the music, and the swiftest foot is already lifted for the dance. They patronize Heaven and abolish hell, and try to measure eternity with their hour glass, and the throne of the great God with their yard stick! I abhor it. I tell you the old Gospel well is a captured well. I pray God that there may be somewhere in the elect host three anointed men, with courage enough to go forth in the strength of the omnipresent God, with the glittering swords of truth, to hew the way back again to that old well. I think the tide is turning, and that the old Gospel is to take its place again in the family, and in the university, and in the legislative hall. Men have tried worldly philosophies, and they have found out that they do not give any comfort, and that they drop an Aetna midnight upon the death pillow. They fail when there is a death chill in the house; and when the soul comes to leap into the fathomless ocean of eternity, they give to the man not so much as a broken spar to cling to. Depend upon it, that well will come into our possession again, though it has been captured. If there be not three anointed men in the Lord's host with enough consecration to do the work, then the swords will leap from Jehovah's buckler, and the eternal three will descend—God the Father, God the Son, God the Holy Ghost—conquering for our dying race the way back again to "the water of the well of Bethlehem, which is by the gate." "If God be for us, who can be against us?" "If God spared not his own Son, but freely gave him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?" "For I am persuaded that neither height, nor depth, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come," shall take from us, into final captivity, the Gospel of my blessed Lord Jesus Christ.

Again, the Gospel well, like the one spoken of in my text, is a well at the gate. The traveler stops the camel to-day, and gets down and dips out of the Valley of the East some very beautiful, clear, bright water, and that is out of the very well that David longed for. Do you know that the well was at the gate, so that nobody could go into Bethlehem without going right past it? And so it is with this Gospel well—it is at the gate. It is, in the first place, at the gate of purification. We cannot wash away our sins unless with that water. I take the responsibility of saying that there is no man, woman, or child in this house to-day that has escaped sinful defilement. Do you say it is outrageous and ungallant for me to make such a charge? Do you say, "I have never stolen, I have never blasphemed, I have never committed unchastity, I have never been guilty of murder?" I reply you have committed a sin worse than blasphemy, worse than unchastity, worse than theft, worse than murder. We have all committed it. We have, by our sin, re-crucified the Lord, and that is decisive. And if there be any who dare to plead "not guilty" to the indictment, then the hosts of Heaven will be impaneled as a jury to render a unanimous verdict against us; guilty one, guilty all. With what a slashing stroke that one passage cuts us away from all our pretensions—"There is none that doeth good; no, not one." "Oh," says some one, "all we want, all the race wants, is development." Now I want to tell you that the race develops, without the Gospel, into a Sodomy, a Five Points, a great Salt Lake City. It always develops downward and never upward, except as the grace of God lays hold of it. What, then, is to become of our souls without Christ? Banishment. Disaster. But I bless my Lord Jesus Christ that there is a well at the gate of purification. For great sin, great pardon. For eighty years of transgression, an eternity of forgiveness. For crime deep as hell, an atonement high as Heaven; that where sin abounded, so grace may much more abound; that as sin reigned unto death, even so may grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord. Angel of the covenant, dip thy wing in this living fountain to-day and wave it over this solemn assemblage, that our souls may be washed in "the water of the well of Bethlehem, which is by the gate."

Again, the Gospel well is at the gate of Heaven. I have not heard yet one single intelligent account of the future world from anybody who does not believe in the Bible. They throw such a fog about the subject that I do not want to go to the skeptic's heaven, to the transcendentalist's heaven, to the worldly philosopher's heaven. I would not exchange the poorest room in your house for the finest heaven that Huxley, or Stuart Mill, or Darwin ever dreamed of. Their heaven has no Christ in it; and a heaven without Christ, though you could sweep the whole universe into it, would be a hell! Oh, they tell us there are no songs there; there are no coronations in Heaven—that is all imagination. They tell us we will do there about what we do here, only on a larger scale—geometrize with clearer intellect, and with alpenstock go clambering up over the icebergs in an eternal vacation. Rather than that, I turn to my Bible, and I find John's picture of that good land that heaven which was your lullaby in infancy, that heaven which our children in the Sabbath-school will sing about this afternoon, that heaven which has a "well at the gate."

After you have been on a long journey, and you come in all bedusted and tired to your home, the first thing you want is refreshing ablution; and I am glad to know that after we get through the pilgrimage of this world—the "hard, dusty pilgrimage" we will find a well at the gate. In that one wash, away will go our sins and sorrows. I do not care whether cherub or seraph or my own departed friends in that blessed land place to my lips the cup, the touch of that cup will be life, will be heaven. I was reading of how the ancients sought for the fountain of perpetual youth. They thought if they could only find and drink out of that well, the old would become young again, the sick would be cured, and everybody would have eternal juvenescence. Of course, they could not find it. Eureka! I have found it—"the water of the well of Bethlehem, which is by the gate."

I think we had better make a bargain with those who leave us, going out of this world from time to time, as to where we will meet them. Travelers parting appoint a place of meeting. They say, "We will meet at Rome, or we will meet at Stockholm, or Vienna, or Jerusalem, or Bethlehem." Now, when we come to stand at the death pillow of those who are leaving us for the far land, do not let us weep as though we would never see them again, but let us, there standing, appoint a place where we will meet. Where shall it be? Shall it be on the banks of the river? No. The banks are too long. Shall it be in the temple? No; no. There is such a host there—ten thousand times ten thousand. Where shall we meet our loved ones? Let us make an appointment to meet at the well by the gate. Oh, Heaven! Sweet Heaven! Hear Heaven! Heaven, where our good friends are! Heaven, where Jesus is! Heaven! Heaven!

But while I stand here there comes a revulsion of feeling when I look into your eyes and know there are souls here dying of thirst, notwithstanding the well at the gate. Between them and the well of Heaven there is a great army of sin; and though Christ is ready to clear a way to that well for them, they will not have his love or intercession.

But I am glad to know that you may come yet. The well is here—the well of Heaven. Come; I do not care how feeble you are. Let me take hold of your arm, and steady you up to the well curb. "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come." I would rather win one soul to Christ this morning than wear the crown of the world's dominion. Do not let any one go away and say I did not invite him. Oh, if you could only just look at my Lord once, if you could just see Him fall in the face, ay, if you could only do as that woman did whom I read about at the beginning of the services—just come up behind Him and touch His feet—methinks you would live. In Northern New Jersey, one winter, three little children wandered off from home in a snow storm. Night came on. Father and mother said, "Where are the children?" They could not be found. They started out in haste, and the news ran to the neighbors, and before morning it was said that there were hundreds of men hunting the mountains for those three children, but found them not. After a while a man imagined there was a place that had not been looked at, and he went and saw the three children. He examined their bodies. He found that the older boy had taken off his coat and wrapped it around the younger one, the baby, and then taken off his vest and put it around the other one; and there they all died, he probably the first, for he had no coat or vest. Oh, it was a touching scene when that was brought to light! I was on the ground a little while after, and it brought the whole scene to my mind; and I thought to myself of a more melting scene than that; it is that Jesus, our elder brother, took off the robe of his royalty, and laid aside the last garment of earthly comfort, that he might wrap our poor souls from the blast. Oh, the height, and the depth, and the length, and the breadth of the love of God!

TOM ROCHFORD, an enthusiastic supporter of Candidate Baird, who wanted to be Mayor of Brooklyn, ate a whole crow in that city the other night in payment of a wager. A large crowd watched the performance, which was enlivened by the diner's grimaces at every bite.

MR. HALDEMAN, publisher of the Louisville Courier-Journal, lately directed his pastor, by telegraph to draw upon him for the full amount of the church's indebtedness.

A Chronic Tendency Overcome.
Many persons are troubled with a chronic tendency to constipation. They are of bilious temperament. The complaint to which they are subject, though easily remediable by judicious treatment, is, in many cases, aggravated by a resort to drastic purgatives and cholagogues. As the human stomach and bowels are lined with a delicate membrane, and not with vulcanite, they cannot stand prolonged drenching with such medicines without serious injury. Nothing restores and counteracts an habitual tendency to constipation so effectively as Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Its laxative effect is gentle and progressive. It neither convulses nor weakens the intestines, and its effects are accompanied by gripping pains. It arouses the liver when the organ is sluggish, promotes digestion, and encourages appetite and sleep. For fever and ague, kidney troubles, nervous complaints, and incipient rheumatism, it is incomparable. Take a wineglass before meals and see how soon you will relish them.

Sealing Wax Causing Trouble.
In a notice just issued the postoffice recommends the disuse of sealing wax on ordinary letters for countries over the sea. It often happens that the wax is melted by the heat under the tropics or by the fumigations to which mail bags are subjected. In La Plata, for instance, the letters are found to stick together so that they cannot be separated without injury to the address, and are in this way often lost. Ordinary letters are quite sufficiently sealed with gum or wafers, and registered letters, for which wax seals are required, are carefully handled on the way.—Paris Cor. London News.

"What Drug Will Scour These English Hens?"

Wicked Macbeth, who murdered good King Duncan, asked this question in his despair. Thousands of victims of disease are daily asking "What will scour the impurities from my blood and bring me health?" Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will do it. When the purple life-tide is sluggish, causing drowsiness, headache, and loss of appetite, use this wonderful vitalizer, which never fails. It forces the liver into perfect action, drives out superfluous bile, brings the glow of health to the cheek, and the natural sparkle to the eye. All druggists.

Killing Off Their Husbands.
Young married farmers have been dying off with dreadful suddenness in villages of Syria, in eastern Croatia. These young farmers were all brand new husbands, and at last their deaths, all coming so soon after marriage, excited suspicion, and the matter was investigated. It was found that an old woman had conceived the idea of getting pretty young girls to marry farmers and poison them and divide the spoils. The old woman is now in jail, and so far seven young widows, to whom she had furnished poison with which to kill their husbands.—Foreign Letter.

An Extended Popularity. Brown's BRONCHIAL TROCHES have for many years been the most popular article in use for relieving Coughs and Throat troubles.

A STOCK-BROKER can not expect to feel bully when he has more troubles than he can bear.

Chronic Coughs and Colds.
And all diseases of the Throat and Lungs, can be cured by the use of Scott's Emulsion, as it contains the healing virtues of Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites in their fullest form. Is a beautiful creamy Emulsion, palatable as milk, easily digested, and can be taken by the most delicate. Please read: "I consider Scott's Emulsion the remedy par excellence in Tuberculous and Strumous Affections, to say nothing of ordinary colds and throat troubles."—W. R. S. CONNELL, M. D., Manchester, Ohio.

PUT a man in prison and you've got him where the hair is short. The prison barber sees to that.—St. Joseph Gazette.

The Popular Throughfare.
The Wisconsin Central Line, although a comparatively new factor in the railroad systems of the Northwest, has acquired an enviable popularity. Through careful attention to details, its service is as near perfection as might be looked for. The train attendants seem to regard their trusts as individual property and as a result the public is served par excellence. The road now runs solid through fast trains between Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul, and Minneapolis with Pullman's best and unequalled dining-cars; it also runs through, solid sleepers between Chicago, Ashland, Duluth, and the famous mining regions of Northern Wisconsin and Michigan.

Itching Piles.
Symptoms—Moisture; intense itching and stinging; most at night; worse by scratching. If allowed to continue tumors form, which often bleed and ulcerate, becoming very sore. Swayne's Ointment stops the itching and bleeding, heals ulceration, and in many cases removes the tumors. It is equally efficacious in curing all Skin Diseases. Dr. Swayne & Son, Proprietors, Philadelphia. Swayne's Ointment can be obtained of druggists, or by mail.

Consumption Surely Cured.
To the Editor:—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above-named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy FREE to any of your readers who have consumption if they will send me their Express and P. O. address. Respectfully,

A Pleasure Shared by Women Only.

Malherbe, the gifted French author, declared that of all things that man possesses, women alone take pleasure in being possessed. This seems generally true of the sweeter sex. Like the ivy plant, she longs for an object to cling to and love—to look to for protection. This being her prerogative, ought she not to be told that Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the physical salvation of her sex? It banishes those distressing maladies that make her life a burden, curing all painful irregularities, uterine disorders, inflammation and ulceration, prolapsus and kindred weaknesses. As a nerve, it cures nervous exhaustion, prostration, debility, relieves mental anxiety and hypochondria, and promotes refreshing sleep.

A CORSET is nothing more than a waist basket without any poetry in it.

WHATEVER name or designation is given to Fever and Ague, or other intermittent diseases it is safe to say that Malaria or a disordered state of the liver is at fault. Eliminate the impurities from the system and a sure and prompt cure is the immediate result. Prickly Ash Bitters is the safest and most effective remedy for all biliary troubles, kidney diseases, and like complaints that have ever been brought before the public. A trial is its best recommendation.

THE missing links will arrive when the sausage season opens.

Catarth Cured.
A clergyman, after years of suffering from that loathsome disease, Catarth, and vainly trying every known remedy, at last found a prescription which completely cured and saved him from death. Any sufferer from this dreadful disease sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Prof. J. A. Lawrence, 212 East Ninth street, New York, will receive the recipe free of charge.

Ringing Noises

In the ears, sometimes a roaring, buzzing sound, or snapping like the report of a pistol, are caused by catarrh, that exceedingly disagreeable and very common disease. Loss of smell or hearing also result from catarrh. Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier, is a peculiarly successful remedy for this disease, which it cures by purifying the blood. If you suffer from catarrh, try Hood's Sarsaparilla, the peculiar medicine.

"I used Hood's Sarsaparilla for catarrh, and received great relief and benefit from it. The catarrh was very disagreeable, especially in the winter, causing constant discharge from my nose, ringing noises in my ears, and pains in the back of my head. The effort to clear my head in the morning by hawking and spitting was painful. Hood's Sarsaparilla gave me relief immediately, while in time I was entirely cured. I am never without the medicine in my house, as I think it is worth its weight in gold." Mrs. G. B. GIBB, 1029 Eighth St., N. W., Washington, D. C.

Some Practical Suggestions for Our Agricultural Readers.

Information of Value to the Farmer, Stock-Breeder, Housewife, and Kitchen-Maid.

AGRICULTURE.

Digestibility of Hay.

The Germantown Telegraph summarizes some digestion experiments made at the Maine Experiment Station, from which we find that in the consumption of hay and clover, there is, perhaps, under ordinary circumstances, a less proportion digested and so rendered available in the growth or fattening of animals than is generally supposed. The composition of timothy hay is given as follows: Protein compound, 5.94; crude fiber, 28.89; nitrogen free extract, 47.41; fat, 2.97. Of the above there is under ordinary circumstances digested, protein compounds, 2.7; crude fiber, 12.4; nitrogen free extract, 27.9; fat, 1.4.

By the above it appears that only about one-half of the nutritive principles of timothy are digested. In the case of clover hay, the result is very nearly the same, the only difference of any account being in the fact that clover hay furnishes about twice as much of the protein compounds as the timothy. Assuming that 3,875 pounds of timothy is cut from an acre, there will be digested 104.6 pounds of protein matter, while from an acre of 4,075 pounds of clover hay would be digested 288.2 of protein, with but little difference in the fat and nitrogen free extract. As the protein contains the substance of animal tissue, this is important in the feeding of growing and young animals.—Stockman.

Farm Notes.

TREES from distant nurseries can be ordered safely in the fall, and if packed properly they will come in the best condition. As there will usually be no special hurry, they can come by freight, and the transportation will not be very expensive. They carry best in boxes.

It is not necessary that a pig-house should not freeze, but it is necessary that the air should be free from dampness and the chilliness which is connected with a cellar in warm, damp places. Hogs are very susceptible to colds, both inward and outward, and to rheumatism.

AMONG the leading breeds of domestic ducks the Aylesbury is worthy the highest commendation. They are an improved English product, popular in their own country and fast gaining friends among our American breeders. In them the farmer, cottager, and fancier have a large-sized bird for market or home use, and one that is remarkably hardy and productive.

ONE of the principal causes of heaves in horses is the feeding of dusty or dirty hay. Ordinary clean hay can always be fed with safety if properly cut up, moistened, and mixed with ground grain, but to feed the dusty or dirty sorts is very injurious. Clover, owing to its liability to crumble, often gets dirty, even after storage, and should never be fed without previously being moistened.

FEATHERS are very rich in nitrogen, and should be used to add to the strength of the manure heap. Like bones, they may be quickly reduced by soaking them in a solution of sulphuric acid and covering them with a coarse compost, with which they may be subsequently mixed. Indeed, so strong are they that if properly distributed and applied the results on a crop of corn will be surprising.

THE latest plan with ensilage is to cut the entire corn crop—stalks, ears, and all—into the silo. The kernels of the corn will be wholly digested by the cattle, as it does not dry out nor lose its milky character, which gives it succulence for rapid digestion. A farmer who has made this point one of special investigation so reports, and affirms that there is not a visible trace of corn in the voidings.

EDWARD BURNETT, Deerfoot Farm, claims that to the cow that makes the most butter from a given amount of food belongs the honors. Yes, but "butter tests" are made to boom a family of stock by a sort of ledgerdom that aims to make the public believe that the record comes from the cow rather than the feed. When honors must be placed on profitable results there will be no more public tests.

STOCK BREEDING.

Kicking Cows.

Says a writer in the American Cultivator: The most convenient, the best, and most effective remedy that I have tried is the use of a plow line or cord drawn tight around the body, forward of the udder, which prevents the cow from arching her back, consequently she cannot lift her foot to kick. The same may be accomplished by a person pressing on the cow's spine. The method of using the plow line is as follows: Take a common round plow line and double it; then pass it around the body of the cow forward of the udder. Bring the ends through a loop, draw the cord tight, and make a slip-knot to hold it. I have had cows that, after using this device on them, could be milked for a while by simply laying the cord over their back.

Mortality of Swine.

About 10 per cent. of the swine of this country die annually of disease. Perhaps one-half of this fatality is due to specific swine plague; the other half to various disorders, clearly occasioned by unwholesome conditions. These same divisions favor the multiplication and preservation of the bacillus which produces swine plague. The loss from disease among swine makes the prevention of disease a matter of great moment to the swine growers, and I have found in practice what theory indicates, that the removal of unwholesome conditions prevents disease at the same time that it largely increases the thrift of the animals. During the last eighteen years I have raised swine largely and have not lost 1 per cent. from disease. The fact that specific swine plague has raged several years in my immediate neighborhood, sick and dead hogs being separated from mine by only an open fence, would show that this disease is not so highly contagious as the veterinarians would make us believe. He who would prevent swine disease has only to adopt those methods of feeding, watering, sheltering, and breeding which would be the most economical, were no disease to be guarded against.—Mirror and Farmer.

FORESTRY.

When Fall Planting Is Best.

The question of fall planting of trees periodically occupies the columns of the leading agricultural journals; and during the early fall months no question is oftener asked by purchasers of trees than, "Do you recommend fall planting?" The answers, "no" and "yes," may both be applicable if the situation and condition of the soil where the trees are to be planted are known.

On soils imperfectly drained, in which an over-abundance of water remains from the time our autumn rains fall until the 1st of May, then I would say "no"—leave your planting alone until spring. Be the tree ever so carefully lifted, there are a good many mutilated roots; these broken roots, if the soil in which they are placed is in good condition, will callus and be in a suitable state for making a new growth on the first approach of warmth in the soil in spring. If, however, too much moisture is present in the soil, instead of forming a callus, it blackens and decays back to the main root.

On all well-drained soils, either natural or artificial, and where the trees to be planted are well matured, I prefer fall planting; the trees get settled in their position and are ready to commence root-growth before spring-planted trees are moved, and if a dry time occurs during May or June they stand it better than the spring-planted ones, especially the late planted ones.

One point I would impress upon tree planters—to pack the soil closely around the roots if shoveled in on top of the roots and the feet used to pack the soil, a great many empty spaces are left around the roots which prevent the production of new ones and leave the old in a good condition to easily dry up. I generally use in filling up these empty spaces a short, round stick about an inch or so in diameter.

VETERINARY.

Termin on Cattle.

E. B. writes from Port London: "Will you kindly tell me of some remedy to destroy lice on pigs, horses, and cattle, and ticks on sheep?" Carbolic acid is a good remedy for lice on live stock. A simple way to use it on a small scale is to mix ten per cent. of strong acid with butter or lard, and after thorough mixing, rub a little of this upon the animal where the lice are found. A very nice carbolic soap may be made for this purpose, and for coming scratches in horses, foul in the foot in cattle, hoof rot in sheep, etc., by taking two pounds of a pleasant hand washing bar soap; cut this up fine, and mix with it one-fourth pound of castile soap, which has been cut fine; when these are mixed well together, then mix into this soap one-tenth part in bulk of liquid carbolic acid. This will not be more than one-twelfth part of crystallized acid. When this is well-mixed, exclude the air from it by putting it in a self-sealing fruit jar. The crude acid can be used if any large amount is required. When the cheap acid can be had, it is the best deodorizer for the stable. One thousandth part of the acid will deodorize a manure vault. A small amount sprinkled over a hen-house and its roosts will keep it sweet, destroy lice, and prevent many diseases.—Canada Farmer.

Thrush.

Thrush is defined by veterinarians as "a diseased condition of the secretions from the frog characterized by the discharge of a foul and fetid material." A frequent cause of this complaint is standing in stable refuse and wet straw. Many farmers have a thick layer of manure mixed with bedding in the stalls of young stock, so as to prevent the feet from drying. When this practice is followed for any length of time, thrush, indicated by lameness, is very apt to result. The victim should first be given a dry, well-littered stall, and the bedding should be changed or dried in the sun daily. Remove the shoes, pare the feet and clean the affected parts thoroughly, but do not apply water. Take one pint of pine tar, one ounce of gum camphor, and one ounce of blue vitriol (sulphate of copper). Place the gum camphor in the tar. Powder the vitriol as finely as possible. When the camphor has been cut add the powdered vitriol, and stir the ingredients until thoroughly mixed. Apply a coating of this to the diseased frog and bottom of the foot. Renew the application occasionally until a cure is effected. After applying the mixture cut a piece of cloth to fit the bottom of the foot, lay it upon the tar, press it in closely and let it remain.

APICULTURE.

Bee-Keepers Meet in Convention and Discuss Their Common Interests.

The bee-keepers recently held a national convention in Chicago. About seventy-five delegates, representing every section of the country, were in attendance. Dr. C. C. Miller, of Marengo, Ill., who devotes his time exclusively to bees, was in the chair, and W. L. Hutchinson, of Flint, Mich., acted as Secretary. Among the delegates were Prof. A. J. Cook, who occupies the chair of entomology in the Michigan Agriculture College; A. I. Root, Medina, Ohio; E. J. Oatman, Dundee, Ill.; Prof. N. N. McLean, Hinsdale, Ill.; T. G. Newman, Chicago; T. S. Bull, of Valparaiso, Ind., and others. J. A. Green, of Dayton, Ill., read a paper upon the subject of "Production of Comb and Extracted Honey in the Same Apiary."

Dr. C. C. Miller followed with a paper upon "Legislation for Bee-keepers," in which he took the ground that they should be protected by some legislation in cases where crops of clover and other bee-food were made serviceable by bee-keepers rival to the interest of those who maintained such crops.

Mr. Thomas G. Newman delivered an address on "The Objects and Methods of a Thorough Organization of the Bee-keepers of America." Mr. Newman held that the pursuit of modern and progressive apiculture is yet in its infancy. It has grown rapidly, and its development has been accompanied by science, art, and invention at every step; so that to-day, those interested in bee-keeping in North America number fully 300,000 persons, its annual product of honey amounting to 10,000,000 pounds, and its value being about $15,000,000. Mr. Newman strongly urged that the association should be made a thoroughly representative one by embracing within it a plan for the organization of county and State societies. Some of the principal wants of bee-keepers were felt to be a systematic encouragement of bee and honey shows at fairs; providing bee tents for such bee exhibitions; inaugurating a system of education of bee-keepers, and by certificate or otherwise guaranteeing to those who wish to hire assistants that they possess a practical knowledge of the business for which they are wanted. These wants could all be provided for and satisfied in a better manner by a well-organized society than in any other way. In the opinion of the author of the paper some legislation protecting certain territory for the benefit of bee-keepers especially was necessary to the remunerative pursuits of this culture. In London, England, there is a "honey company" which receives and sells at the highest market prices the honey belonging to its members either by sample or in bulk, and such a company may also be deemed desirable in America, and some arrangements may be made, perhaps, whereby the company could make advances on consignments and thus help producers in more ways than one. This might also be made a feature of the proposed organization, if deemed desirable by the members of this convention of American apiarists. It was most desirable that representation should be perfectly carried out by auxiliary county and State societies.

DAIRYING.

Washing Butter.

The experience of experts in butter making has been freely given of late years. Experiments have not been neglected. Mr. F. D. Curtis, well known in dairy circles, communicates the following to the Rural New Yorker on the subject:

Many things about butter-making have been learned within the last few years. One thing is how to wash and handle butter. Henceforth there will be no theories or practices about washing butter. Some used to think it injured the butter by washing the sugar out of it, and they would actually add sugar to make up for the loss. Some do this even now. But sugar is not wanted in butter. It is too unstable a compound, and soon decomposes, to enter into new combinations and play the mischief. The first change is for the sugar to change to lactic acid, and one of the strongest arguments in favor of sour-cream butter is the fact that this change occurs, and the sugar is largely disposed of before churning. Washing takes out the buttermilk and the lactic acid—composed of the sugar—with it, as it does other materials that will not keep like the pure butter fat. This improves the flavor and keeping quality of the butter. This is true now, and will always remain true. But before this, washing or not washing was merely empirical and controlled by whim or prejudice, the dairymen not knowing precisely the effect produced by washing any more than he did the effect of sugar upon the butter. It is not difficult to establish general rules when the facts are known and the principles are understood. But there are certain things depending upon conditions which cannot be governed by specific rules, and which, therefore, call for the exercise of judgment on the part of the dairyman. When we can dispense with the use of brains we can dispense with the dairyman.

HOUSEKEEPING.

Rugs and Matting.

The variety of rugs from which one may choose is wide even when excluding the "real" Persian and Turkish ones, which are beyond the purses of most people. The Smyrna rugs manufactured in Philadelphia are too well and favorably known to need much comment, but the large sizes in this make are not cheap, although their durability makes them well worth the purchase. An excellent substitute may be made by buying the plain ingrain filling, sewing it into a square of the dimensions desired, and surrounding it with a border to match.

When, for any reason, a bare floor with rugs is out of the question, the next best thing is matting. It is easily kept clean, for the dirt lies on top and can be brushed off instead of becoming ground into the fabric, as is the case with carpets. As it grows dingy it may be freshened by wiping it with a cloth dampened in salt and water.

Matting may not be the best floor-covering for a hall where the constant tramping back and forth is apt to break the straw and wear it in spots. Nor can it be recommended for use in the dining-room unless protected under the table by a rug or drugget. The pushing back of heavy chairs soon leaves its mark even on the stoutest carpet, and matting cannot stand such rough usage. But in sitting-rooms, and especially in sleeping apartments, it is far preferable to a carpet. In the bedrooms small rugs laid by the bed, bureau, and wash-stand are all that is really needed, even for delicate people who dread to have their feet come in contact with the cold surface. In the other rooms larger rugs may be placed where it seems best, by fire-place, sofa, or sewing-chair.

Matting is in thorough harmony with the present style of cottage plainishings. It is in keeping with serim and Madras draperies, wicker and Fayal chairs, bamboo easels and screens, and the many other light articles that are superseding upholstered furniture.

Household Hints.

WHERE cockroaches are abundant sprinkle lime powder.

THE quality of food has much to do with the quality of the milk.

If you are troubled with slugs or worms strew soot on the soil around the plants.

WHITING or ammonia in the water is preferable to soap for cleaning windows or paint.

To wash dishes without putting the hands in the water, make a mop of cord or twine with a wooden handle about a foot long.

THE juice of half a lemon makes a very pleasant addition to either food or warm tea. Of course milk should not be used with it.

THE KITCHEN.

Egg Pudding.

Half a pound of bread crumbs, half a pound of raisins, a pound of chopped apples, four eggs, a cup of sugar, piece of butter the size of an egg, spice. Boil in a mould. Serve with hard sauce.

Gingerbread.

One-half cup of sugar, one cup of molasses, one cup of butter, one egg, two-thirds of a cup of hot water, two cups of flour, two-thirds of a teaspoonful each of ginger and cinnamon, one teaspoonful of soda.

Biscuits.

One quart of flour with two large teaspoonfuls of baking powder mixed into it, add a tablespoonful of lard or butter, a little salt, and water enough to make the dough. Bake in a hot oven twenty minutes.

Cocoanut Pudding.

Grate the meat of a large cocoanut. Roll fine five Boston crackers and mix with the cocoanut, add milk enough to beat, and a teaspoonful of butter. Beat five eggs, add a cup of sugar, mix, and bake like a custard.

Ginger Cookies.

One pint best baking molasses, one-half pint lard, one teacup sugar, one tablespoon soda, one tablespoon ginger, one teacup hot water; dissolve soda in the hot water, and stir the whole with a spoon in sufficient flour to make a medium soft dough.

Veal Loaf.

Four pounds chopped veal, half-pound salt pork, chopped fine, four eggs, four tablespoonfuls of bread crumbs, half a pint of milk, one and one-half teaspoonfuls of sage, half teaspoonful of black pepper; mix thoroughly, put in a bread pan, spread the top with butter and bake three hours.

INDIANA STATE NEWS.

—Commissioner of Agriculture Colman, in his monthly report upon the condition of the crops of the country, has this to say of the State of Indiana: "The weather has favored the gathering of the corn crop, and a large portion has already been secured. The quality is fair and the yield will be greater than the appearance indicated some months ago. The yield of Irish potatoes is above what was expected, with quality medium and no reports of rot. Sweet potatoes have generally yielded fair and of good quality. The hay crop will compare favorably with that harvested in 1886, both as regards quantity and quality, but a greater per cent. will be required for home consumption. The yield of buckwheat will be light. The drought can scarcely be said to be broken; as there has not been sufficient rain to cause the wheat to make a satisfactory growth, and much of it will go into the winter with a poorly developed plant. Much uneasiness is manifested by farmers on this account. From failure of wells and water-courses, stock water is becoming a matter of serious concern in many portions of the State."

—The owners of the silver mine near Jasper, Dubois County, have purchased a patent smelter and all the other machinery necessary to reduce the ore. The machinery arrived at Jasper last Monday, and was hauled to the mine the following day. A large quantity of the silver-bearing ore has already been taken out of the mine and is piled up ready for the works, which will be in operation in ten days. The ore is said to be very rich, and the owners of the mine are confident they have struck a bonanza.

—The Tipton Gas Company has been incorporated with a capital stock of $75,000, and operations have been commenced. The company is leasing all lands within a radius of five miles of the city, and will pay for the leasing of such lands, whether they use them or not. The company is a foreign company, but some of the most prominent citizens have taken stock in it. Sharpsville and Windfall, small towns in Tipton County, are using gas for heating purposes.

—Capt. J. W. Cummins, of the Elkhart Veteran Artillery, L. D. Miller and O. D. Chambers, all of Elkhart, were in Indianapolis last week endeavoring to get the next annual encampment of the State militia held in that city. They urge its railroad facilities, and fine camping-ground adjacent to the Elkhart and St. Joseph rivers. Evansville has been making some endeavor to get the encampment also, but the question is in a wide-open condition as yet.

—Patents have been issued to Indiana inventors as follows: John C. Ballew, of Evansville, machine for setting saws; John H. Barth, of Terre Haute, lamp for decorating and illuminating purposes; Davis B. Beaty, of Moore's Hill, assignor of one-half to O. M. Hubbard, of Cincinnati, automatic gate; Samuel Brown, of Washington, water elevator; Thomas C. Fisher, of Anderson, fastener for scythes; Henry Mater, of LaGro, fence post.

—The grand jury of Tippecanoe County has returned an indictment against the Trustees of the old Wabash and Erie Canal—A. W. Dukes, Milton Shirk, and T. J. Immel—charging them with maintaining and permitting a pernicious, health-destroying nuisance to exist, the same being the old State ditch. The owners of the canal recently turned the water out of the canal to shut off Lafayette's source of supply.

—The boiler at the Cushman & Crowder flouring-mill, at Shelburn, exploded recently. Frank Montague, one of the engineers, was scalded, but it is thought he will not die. None of the other employees were injured. The shed in which the boiler was located was demolished, but the main building was not damaged. The boiler was an old one, and had been overhauled several times.

—Omar Gandy, freight brakeman, fell from the cars while coming through a bridge over Whitewater at Connersville, and was ground to death under the wheels. His body was found hanging head downward under the bridge, held by one foot, forty feet from the ground. His home was near Longwood, where he leaves a wife. He had been on the railroad only a few days.

—Belle Reynolds, of Rochester, aged 16, has disappeared. She has, since her infancy, resided with her aunt, Mrs. John Gottschalk. The girl is supposed to have been abducted by a stranger who has been shadowing the Gottschalk residence for some time past. The disappearance of the girl is enshrouded in mystery, and a thorough search is being made to get trace of her.

A very peculiar damage suit has been filed in the Scott Circuit Court. Almond Phillips sues Allen M. Peeler for $400 damages for breaking his horse's tail. The horse is a fine stallion. The case is the first of the kind ever brought in that Court, and is creating much talk. The case will not be tried until the January term.

—The season for selling brick is nearing a close, and manufacturers of the State say that there are 50 per cent. fewer bricks to carry over than in the fall of 1886. The weather has been so pleasant that building has been carried on to a much larger extent than usual and this has largely reduced the supply.

—The merchants and others directly interested in Markleville, have organized a stock company and a contract has been let for drilling a natural-gas well. Work at boring will probably be commenced within the next few days.

—James B. Chess, of Indiana, has been appointed by the President to be United States Consul at Durango, Mexico.

—With the completion of the Vincennes and New Albany road it is expected that a good market will be opened up for the fine coals in Pike County. The coals will be transported by rail to the river and then sent down the river on barges in immense quantities.

—Gov. Gray has quietly investigated the management of the Female Reformatory, and discovered that inmates have been cruelly punished and neglected.

—David Smeltzer, a farmer living near Elkhart, was found dead in his barn. His death was caused by heart disease.

—Harry Brown, switchman, employed in the Chicago and Atlantic yards at Huntington, was run over by the cars and killed. He was about 35 years of age, and it is said he had a wife and three children in Kent, Ohio.

—Considerable anxiety is felt for the safety of a party of hunters from Dubois and Warrick counties, who were in the cypress swamps of Arkansas. It is feared they may have perished in the forest fire.

—The wife of Frederick Surencamp, of Seymour, gave birth to three girl children. The dispatch states that he is a prosperous man, which he undoubtedly is.

—John Black, a farmer, of Owen County, while attempting to cross the I. & V. Railroad track with a four-horse team, was struck by a freight train and seriously if not fatally injured.

—Abraham Hecht, of Madison, died recently from the effects of injuries received in boarding an Ohio and Mississippi train at North Vernon, in March, 1886. He was 61 years old.

—A seven-foot vein of lead was struck at Royal Center, Cass County, at a depth of 160 feet.

—A strong flow of natural gas was struck at well No. 2, Xenia, at a depth of 950 feet.

EVENTS OF A WEEK.

THE OLD WORLD.

The unionist banquet in Limerick Hall was a brilliant affair, says a Dublin despatch. The leading merchants and professional men and a number of Catholic unionists were present. The balconies were crowded with ladies. Lord Harrington and Mr. Goschen were given an ovation. The toast to the Queen was received with enthusiasm, everybody rising and joining in the singing of the national anthem and "God bless the Prince of Wales." Mr. Kenny, an eminent Catholic barrister, in proposing a toast to the Unionist cause, denounced Home Rule as an insidious misnomer, simply meaning the dismemberment of the empire and the utter ruin of Ireland. Agitation, he said, had already destroyed Irish credit, but there were hopeful symptoms that the people were beginning to find out the real tendencies of the agitator's work.

The congress of the Senators and Deputies at Versailles, France, elected M. Sadi-Carnot to succeed President Grevy. The successful candidate is a Republican who has been prominent in politics ever since the downfall of Louis Napoleon, but his influence in his party has been far inferior to that of his principal rivals for Republican support in the contest for the Presidency. A Paris cablegram says:

The ministry have formally tendered their resignations, and President Sadi-Carnot has requested them to remain in office for the present for the dispatch of public business. The President stated that it was his intention, after the new ministry was formed, to at once close the present session of parliament until after the coming senatorial elections. Probably the result of the election is the best thing that could have happened for France. M. Sadi-Carnot is the second best known economical writer in France, and has had practical public experience far superior to M. Leroy Beaulieu, the most famous economical writer. He is under 50; a Republican without being radical or visionary. He is a distinguished engineer, having held his class at the Ecole Polytechnique, instead of being a lawyer, which in itself is a great thing; he is rich, and lives like a gentleman. He is not religious, but his wife is a Catholic. He has a 22-year-old son in the army. He is a free-trader. The newspapers of Paris generally approve the election of M. Sadi-Carnot and consider it an augury of peace. The telegrams from the provinces, without exception, testify to the satisfaction felt at the result of the election. The news created an excellent impression at the principal European capitals.

FINANCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL.

Another letter from Mr. Powderly on the "Works of Knighthood" has appeared in print. In the course of its three columns he says:

From an organization numbering less than 10,000 members when the first General Assembly was held we have seen the Knights of Labor grow until over 700,000 men and women claimed membership at one time. While that vast industrial army was being gathered together, while the seed was being sown, men who were pioneers were making sacrifices that the order might live in history as a power for good. Men good and true were blackmailed and discharged, but they never murmured. They were not working for self nor the present; they worked for posterity and the future. When I hear men talk of seceding from the organization, with the threat of starting an improved order, I fancy that they know but little of the trials, the dangers, and the odds against which they have to contend, and I feel that the amount of energy necessary to build up a new order, if properly applied to the old one, would make it invincible. It is true that in the old organization all who aspire cannot be officers; all who pull wires cannot succeed in getting positions; but it is equally true that if they secede and if they succeed in building up a new order they only make it possible for other men to pull wires and aspire to the places which they continually hope to secure for themselves. If in the new order they succeed better than in the old one, and secure offices, they do so only to find at their elbows men, who, like themselves, will stop at nothing mean or low to compass their ends.

The trust of sugar refiners is said to be already at work buying and closing smaller refineries.

POLITICAL POINTS.

The National Conference Committee of the Prohibition party, at Chicago, drew to that city more than a thousand workers more or less prominent in the temperance cause. It was decided to hold the National Convention for the nomination of a candidate for President at Indianapolis the first Wednesday in June next. Professor Samuel Dickie was chosen, to preside over the convention. Professor Dickie formally accepted the nomination as Chairman, providing that every delegate present would pledge his word that he would work for the cause as he had never worked before, and that under no consideration would a fusion with any other party be countenanced. His salary was fixed at $2,000 per annum. He will leave his chair as Professor in Albion College, and from now devote his energies solely to the cause of prohibition. The following resolution from the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, which was unanimously passed at the late convention at Nashville, Tenn., was adopted:

Resolved, That with a deep sense of the significance of such action, we women, representatives of thirty-seven States and five Territories, do most solemnly urge upon all political parties and partisan papers the duty of avoiding in the pending Presidential campaign the personal vilification and abuse that characterized the last; and we call upon them to consider the fact that the women of the North and the South have clasped hands in concord and co-operation, which is the most practical proof that war issues are dead, and that the land should have rest from reviving them for campaign purposes. We protest as women against this outrage upon the growing spirit of fraternity, and reiterate the cry of the great General: "Let us have peace."

The question of representation in the next National Convention was warmly debated. In spite of the vigorous opposition of those who hailed from States in which the party was thoroughly organized, it was finally determined to give two delegates to every Congressional district, and that each State should have delegates at large. Another subject upon which there was a diversity of opinion was that of woman suffrage. The amount of business transacted was small, but there was no end to the speech-making. The orators waxed particularly warm in their denunciations of the Republican and Democratic parties, and took a most uncompromising stand on the question of high license. The conference closed with an immense mass meeting, at which ex-Governor St. John named General Clinton B. Fisk, of New Jersey, as the Presidential candidate. The announcement was received with prolonged cheers. Six thousand dollars was raised toward a campaign fund of $4,000.

FIRES AND ACCIDENTS.

The burning of the Stowbridge Lithographing Company's building at Cincinnati caused a loss of about $20,000, on which there is an insurance of $15,000. Fire in a tenement-house in New York Thursday, damaged the building to the extent of $2,000, and a little boy perished in the flames.

Four men were badly hurt, one of them fatally, it is thought, and others were severely shocked and bruised, by an explosion near Dodgeville, Wis., on the Neepore, Dodgeville and Northern Railroad. The most seriously injured men are: Eric Ostrom, crushed by a rock; may die; Antony Nelson, face and jaw badly mangled; Peter Johnson, scalp badly cut; Andrew Theager, body severely bruised; Meyer, body severely bruised. The men were working in a twenty-five-foot cut. A small rock dropped into a blasting hole containing seven kegs of powder, and in trying to dislodge it with an iron bar the powder was ignited. The men at the blast were blown high into the air, but not seriously hurt, while those in the pit were buried beneath a mass of rocks and dirt.

The engine of a locomotive exploded at Tamaqua, Pa., while running at full speed. There were five men on the locomotive. The machinery was scattered, and the bodies of five men who were on the engine were sent flying in every direction. They were literally blown to atoms.

The town of Hurley, Wis., has been visited by another destructive conflagration. The Commercial Hotel at Guelph, Ontario, was totally destroyed by fire, and several guests were injured in escaping from the building by jumping from the windows of the upper stories.

THE CRIMINAL RECORD.

There is a large number of anarchists in Newark, New Jersey, considering the size of the city, and they have become so outspoken in their denunciation of the authorities that the police fear they may cause trouble.

Johann Most appeared in the witness-box in his own behalf at New York, and denied that he had made use of the violent language attributed to him. In his charge to the jury, the Judge said that he failed to find anything in the speech of the defendant as he gave it at the trial that came within the statute; but after being out over four hours they returned with the verdict that he was guilty as charged in the indictment. Most, while on the witness-stand, was asked by the prosecuting officer to state his views.

"We do not fight against any particular Government," said Most. "We do not especially fight the Government of the United States. We are opposed to Government as such; we think that the power held by the Government should be abolished." Most said that the "ruling classes" were in rebellion, and it was possible that even what the people had—the Constitution of the United States—would be taken away. His motto was, "Education for organization; organization to put down the rebellion of the capitalistic class." "We do not expect that they have peacefully. There will be fierce fighting on both sides." "Bombs and dynamite," asked Mr. Nicol. "Yes, on both sides." "Your idea is to conquer peacefully if you can, by force if you must." "That is history. We believe force will be necessary in time." Mr. Nicol asked Most as to his belief in a supreme being. Answer—"I do not." Mr. Howe, his counsel, tried to mislead him. He said: "Do you believe in a great First Cause?" "I say," said Most, as Socrates did, "we know that we do not know."

At Alamosa, Colo., Michael O'Brien, a tramp who brutally outraged Miss McGregor, was taken from the jail by a mob of citizens and hanged. The recovery of the girl is doubtful.

In the little town of Charleston, Miss., says a Memphis special, three negroes, Joe Tribble, Monroe Harris, and Charles Taylor, were confined in jail on a charge of attempting to kill a white man named Frank Mountz. A mob of forty or more men, well armed, rode into town, forced the jailer to give up the keys to the cells, and took the prisoners out. The bodies of Taylor and Harris were found on the road about a mile from town, riddled with buckshot, both dead. Tribble has not been heard from but it is considered certain that he was also shot to death.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

A Detroit dispatch says the Journal, of that city, publishes a two-and-a-half column sensation as the result of its investigation into the Michigan swamp-land matters and the Chandler claim against the Calumet and Hecla Mining Company. The investigation shows, it is said, that J. H. Chandler, E. W. Sparrow and the Seager estate are entitled to locate six hundred acres of swamp lands, and also that the State of Michigan is prosecuting claims against the General Government which cannot fail eventually to bring into the State Treasury at least $2,000,000 as payment for 1,700,000 acres of swamp lands due from the United States to the State of Michigan. The fact also transpires that certain Michigan railroads and corporations are now holding or have sold upward of three hundred thousand acres of land to which they have had no just title, and that suits are to be brought by the State of Michigan against the Flint and Pere Marquette, the Jackson, Lansing and Saginaw, and the Grand Rapids and Indiana Railroads to recover 18,000 acres of land illegally held by them through grants of Congress.

Speaker Carlisle expresses the opinion that an equitable reduction on imports will be effected during the coming session of Congress, though he anticipates a later fight on the part of the protectionists. A Washington special says:

Senator A. P. Gorham announces positively that a tariff reform bill will be passed by the incoming Congress, which will cut off certain custom duties and provide for a reduction in the internal-revenue tax. He advises Mr. Carlisle to decline the Speakership and take the chairmanship of the Committee on Ways and Means as leader of the Democratic forces on the floor. Mr. Crisp, of Georgia, is recommended for the Speakership.

John B. Loring & Co., one of the largest wholesale dry-goods firms in Western Ontario, have failed. Liabilities, $100,000; assets, $50,000.

A party of surveyors have left New York for Nicaragua, where they will be employed in making the final survey for the proposed ship canal.

There are 12,000 cattle quarantined in Crawford, Washington and Sumner counties, Kansas, where Texas fever is said to exist. Nearly all the animals are the property of a Chicago firm.

The report that the United States Government had made certain demands growing out of the Cuiting affair which might imperil the friendly relations existing between this country and Mexico proves to be without foundation. It is in fact nothing more than an election story originated by opposition newspapers for the purpose of injuring President Diaz.

Third Assistant Postmaster General Harris holds that the practice of newspaper publishers in sending papers directly to the trains is not a sufficient compliance with the law. He will issue an order that such papers must be sent to the local postoffice.

CONGRESS.

At the caucus of Democratic Congressmen in Washington Saturday night, the 3d inst., Mr. Carlisle was renominated for Speaker, General Clark for Clerk, and John K. Leonard for Sergeant-at-Arms. There was a contest over the nomination of Doorkeeper, in which Breckinridge of Arkansas and Blount of Georgia came to blows. Donelson of Tennessee, the present incumbent, and A. R. Hurt of Mississippi were the candidates. Breckinridge opened the fight in caucus by a vigorous attack upon Donelson's personal and official record, and was replied to by Blount and others. In the course of Breckinridge's reply he expressed surprise that any gentleman should continue to support Donelson, knowing his record. Blount, who was standing near, planted a square blow upon the nose of the little Arkansas member, and brought the blood. Breckinridge promptly responded thus by a blow that skinned Blount's cheek-bone. The combatants strove to continue the fight, but only succeeded in battering pretty badly. Mr. Rusk, of Maryland, who had stepped between them, was rescued, and after the pugilists were separated and the excitement and the discussion proceeded, Hurt was finally chosen. Mr. Milburn, the blind preacher, was renominated for Chaplain. The Republican Congressional caucus nominated Mr. Reed, of Maine, as their candidate for the Speakership. The other nominations for House officers were Edward McPherson, of Pennsylvania, for Clerk; Daniel Shepard, of Illinois, for Sergeant-at-Arms; W. F. Fitch, of Ohio, for Doorkeeper; and Gray, of Dakota, for Postmaster. Mr. Cannon, of Illinois, was re-elected Chairman of the caucus for the present Congress.

HELPS TO HEALTH.

Opening of the Fort Wayne Medical and Surgical Sanitarium.

[Fort Wayne Gazette, Dec. 1, 1887.]

Yesterday Dr. G. W. McCaskey opened to the public the Fort Wayne Medical and Surgical Sanitarium, at 24 West Berry street. Several thousand dollars have been expended in fitting the place to be the paradise for invalids it now is, and the public will experience a grateful surprise upon its inspection, and the sick will be glad to know that at this invalids' home can be found the rest, the medical attention and the appliances for special treatment of diseases that only the best sanitariums afford.

The entrance is at 24 West Berry street, but enough rooms of the adjoining building are used to provide excellent accommodations for nearly twenty-five patients. These rooms are furnished with much taste and an elegance that is expected at hotels of the first-class.

On the east side of the principal building the rooms which were formerly used by the Park House as office, dining-room and kitchen have been converted into bath-rooms. Mr. M. F. Teague, of Indianapolis, manages this department and is assisted by polite and skillful persons, who furnish the visitors electric baths, Turkish baths, hot air baths, vapor baths, medicated baths, or such other treatment of this character as their condition may require. The massage treatment is here made a specialty.

Patients will be furnished with a dietary specially adapted to each case, and those requiring operations will be furnished well lighted and well ventilated apartments, kept with a scrupulous regard to the teachings of antiseptic surgery.

"MR. PRESIDENT and fellow-sufferers," spoke Landlord Gates, of the Brewster House, Freeport, Ill., at a convention of hotel men in Chicago—the hotel dead-beat and sharper being at the moment under discussion. "Fellow-sufferers, we must do something. For years we have suffered at his hands and have no redress. Why should we submit? Why? Because the law is against us. Lord, the many times the slickery feller has given me the slip. Sometimes in the early morning when the porter, trust him, is asleep behind the stove, I've had him beat me a million ways, but the meanest is when he plays hifalutin', fills himself with my good 'chuck,' and then comes into the office and kicks about the 'meenyu.' With the fat of my good table streaking down his chops he has told me that my beefsteak was so tough that he couldn't stick his fork in the 'gravy.' And when I asked him what made him come to my place he says the butter pulled him in off'n the street. Such things I have stood, as many of you have, for years, and I now think it about time to call a halt."

An ugly complexion made Nellie a fright. Her face was all pimply and red. Though her features were good and her blue eyes were bright. "What a plain girl is Nellie!" they said. But now, as by magic, plain Nellie has grown. As fair as an artist's bright dream. Her face is as sweet as the flower now-blown. Her cheeks are like peaches and cream. As Nellie walks out in the fair morning light, Her beauty attracts every eye. And as for the people who called her a fright. "Why, Nellie is handsome," they cry. And the reason of the change is that Nellie took Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which regulated her liver, cleared her complexion, made her blood pure, her breath sweet, her face fair and rosy, and removed the defects that had obscured her beauty. Sold by druggists.

The wife of the King of Holland has a bad trick of winking her eyes. The courtiers do not know which way to look when the pretty Queen winks at them, and some very sad blunders frequently occur, owing to this physical defect. A young attache of the Belgian minister who returned the Queen's wink found himself "returned with thanks" to his native land by the next mail, and since then none of the Hollanders has dared to saunter back.

A MASSIVE monument to the late Chief Justice Taney is being erected in Baltimore by William T. Walters of that city. The statue is a duplicate of the famous bronze figure of Taney by Rinehart in the State Capitol grounds at Annapolis, Md.

OSPREYS.

Feathers Used for Decorations Traced
Through the Slaughter of Birds.
(London Exchange.)

The source and mode of procuring the little tufts of feathers not much bigger than a hairpin, and worn in the hats and bonnets of women of all ages under the name of ospray, egret, and nigrette, should cause considerable qualms of conscience even to the thoughtless devotees of fashion. It would appear that the plumes are not derived from the ospray, or fishing eagle (although it would be equally cruel to wear them if they were), but from the egrets and smaller herons, who wear them, like the "wanton lapwing," only in the spring and during the breeding season. These beautiful birds, we are told, breed generally in companies or "rookeries," and one of their principal nesting places is, or was, Florida. An ornithologist, writing recently, says: "Plume hunters have destroyed about all the Florida rookeries. I saw one whole wagon load of the scapular plumes, of ardea wardi at one point. It is a burning shame, and it would make your heart ache to hear the wails of the starving young birds whose parents have been killed. Two years more of the present work, and ardea wardi as well as the large and small egrets will be scarce, as ardea vanderdemanni is now." Another well-known naturalist, Mr. Scott, in a paper on the bird rookeries of Florida, says: "An old Frenchman came in with a boat and killed off the old birds (the brown pelican), as they were feeding their young, obtaining about one hundred and eighty of them. The young—about three weeks old—to the number of several hundreds at least, and utterly unable to care for themselves, were simply left to starve to death in their nests or to be eaten by raccoons and buzzards." The price of "ospray" in London a year or two ago was about £136 a pound, and it is obvious that a wagon load must be a perfect fortune to a man, and nothing short of refusing to wear the nuptial plumes of these poor egrets will put an end to their slaughter. But there is going on at the present moment an equally barbarous destruction of the beautiful sea birds on our Yorkshire coast, for the very same purpose of providing trimmings for girls' and women's hats and bonnets. This heartless destruction is the more deplorable, as it had been anticipated, and efforts have been made, but in vain, to induce the magistrates of the East Riding to follow the example of their brother magistrates of the North Riding, and I believe of every other part of the British coast where sea birds breed, to extend the close time from August 1 to September 1, and thus allow the young birds to get well on the wing, and the old birds to recover from the tameness and fearlessness of man incident to the breeding season and the subsequent moulting of their feathers.

This destruction of sea birds for ladies' hats is by no means a craze of to-day, but has been going on for many years, as the following extract from "Yarrell's Birds" shows:

The eggs of kittiwakes are seldom laid until the last week in June, so that many of the young are still in the nest, or barely fliers, when the Sea Birds' Protection Act expires on August 1. Some years ago, when the plumes of birds were much worn in ladies' hats—a fashion which any season may see revived—the barred wings of the young kittiwake were in great demand for this purpose, and vast numbers were slaughtered at their breeding haunts.

At Clovelly, opposite Lundy Island, there was a regular staff for preparing the plumes, and fishing smacks with extra boats and crews used to commence their work of destruction at Lundy Island by daybreak on August 1, continuing this proceeding for upward of a fortnight.

In many cases wings were torn off wounded birds before they were dead, the mangled victims being thrown back into the water. The editor has seen hundreds of young birds dead or dying of starvation in their nests through want of their parents' care, for in the heat of the fusillade no distinction was made between old and young. On one day 700 birds were sent back to Clovelly, in another 500, and so on; and, allowing for the starved nestlings, it is well within the mark to say that at least 9,000 of these inoffensive birds were destroyed during the fortnight.

We hope that the London dealers and taxidermists may be disappointed in their efforts to revive the fashion of wearing sea birds during the coming winter. It is some satisfaction to know that some of the principal ladies' hatters of London have declared their intention of not using the plumes, wings, and skins of wild birds in future.

BANKER OUVARD AND NAPOLEON.

Napoleon once sent for Ouvard, the banker, ostensibly on diplomatic business. After a brief interview Napoleon asked:

"Can you give me any money?"

"How much does your Imperial Majesty require?"

"To begin with," replied the Emperor, "50,000,000 of francs."

"I could get that amount within twenty days in return for 5,000,000 rentes (of which the price was more than fifty-three francs) to be given me at fifty francs and under the condition that the treasury shall pay Dumerc, whose creditor I am, the 15,000,000 it owes him."

The agreement was at once concluded. Napoleon, who had made himself acquainted with the condition of the public credit on the Paris Bourse, doubted the success of Ouvard's scheme; but when the great banker continued for seventeen days to pay in 2,000,000 of francs daily to the treasury, Napoleon could scarcely master his astonishment. This was the first time that the great warrior, who had never known any other way of filling the treasury than by contributions from the countries he overran, and the taxation of his own subjects, formed a correct idea of the power of credit.

HEATING POWER OF FUEL.

The process consists in burning one gramme of the coal or fuel in a small platinum crucible, supported on the bowl of a tobacco pipe and covered by an inverted glass test tube, through which is passed a stream of oxygen, while the whole is placed under water in a glass vessel. The oxygen is fed into the test tube by a movable copper tube, which may be pushed into the test tube so as to come immediately over the crucible. The coal burns away in a few minutes with very intense heat, and the hot gases escape through the water, the bubbles being broken up by passing through sheets of wire gauze which stretch between the test tubes and the walls of the vessel containing the water in which it is placed. The temperature of the water is taken before and after the experiment, and from the figures thus obtained the heating power of the coal is calculated.

Bridget—An' what would ye be wantin' wid the broom, mum?

Waste of Tissue Without Repair.

Vigor begins to decline when dyspepsia invades the stomach. The disease, prolonged through neglect, entails grievous loss of flesh and serious waste of the muscular tissue. To invigorate thoroughly and speedily, a sound stomachic is required. There is none comparable to Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, since it institutes, and if continued, perpetuates a repair of the tissues, which have declined in bulk, vigor and elasticity in consequence of non-assimilation of the food. No time should be lost in beginning the reparative process, nor should there be any delay in removing those ailments of frequent occurrence, which contribute to and foster an enfeebled condition of the stomach and nerves, viz.: constipation and liver complaint, disorders which the Bitters will assuredly extinguish. It also remedies and prevents malarial and kidney troubles, and is a prime auxiliary in the recovery of strength for convalescents from wasting disease.

Regulating the Seal Industry.

A Californian, largely interested in the fur seal industry, says that seal-skins are expensive, not because they are scarce, but because the trade limits the supply. If all the skins that could be taken were poured on the market, the fur would become so common that it would cease to be desired by the wealthy. So the seal catchers agree upon the total number that they will put upon the market, and they make their report to the furriers of London and Paris, who meet each spring and decide upon prices.—Chicago News.

The Popular Thoroughfare.

The Wisconsin Central Line, although a comparatively new factor in the railroad systems of the Northwest, has acquired and enviable popularity. Through careful attention to details, its service is as near perfection as might be looked for. The train attendants seem to regard their trusts as individual property and as a result, the public is served par excellence. The road now runs solid through fast trains between Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul, and Minneapolis with Pullman's best and unequaled dining-cars; it also runs through, solid sleepers between Chicago, Ashland, Duluth, and the famous mining regions of Northern Wisconsin and Michigan.

Sherman, Rickett and Charley Gill have returned from the west.

Joe Koch butchered twelve hog one day last week for family use.

Maggie Koch has been quite sick for several days with chills and fever.

Vill what is that joke about the stocking getting lost? We are anxious to know.

Mrs. G. W. Morr is in Auburn this week, being treated for throat and lung trouble by Dr. Sebring.

A Concord citizen says he would like to procure some of the "holdover" chickens, for he believes them to be the "pure" breed.

If reports are true, Uncle Moses will have to give up his last and youngest daughter in a short time. We do not know who Frank is, but whoever he may be, we hope he is worthy of so good a girl.

SPENCERVILLE.

Miss Mabel Murray is on the sick list.

Mrs. Allen was at Fort Wayne a part of the week.

Miss Rena Fryberger is visiting at Van Wert Ohio.

Rev. Fryberger returned from Canton Ohio, Monday.

George Dilley is learning the jewelry trade with Arthur James.

Miss Mary Baitz has been suffering with a severe sore throat during the past week.

There were no services in the Lutheran church last Sunday, Rev. Fryberger being called away to attend the funeral of his father.

The White Slave social Provinces' Hall, on last Sunday evening was well attended, considering the bad weather, and a very pleasant time was enjoyed.

We are glad to learn that at last the people of Spencerville are aroused on the temperance question. We only hope that they will keep on until the liquor traffic in this town will be put entirely out of the...

COBURNSTOWN.

A hop at Freem Abels' Monday night.

Killing hogs seems to be the order of the day over this way.

The band boys were at Wilmot Coburn's Thursday evening.

There was a birthday party at Jonathan Shull's Tuesday evening.

A goodly number of Coburntowners attended the sale at Joel Davis last Saturday, notwithstanding the rain.

Any one having a fresh milk cow to sell, can find a buyer by calling on R. G. Coburn, two miles east of St. Joe.

Stanley Platter took time by the forelock, and went to Auburn Sunday, in order to head off "Holdover." Hope he will succeed.

Augustus Coburn left for Kansas City last Friday night. He expects to stay through the winter, and return in the spring if his health will permit.

Wash Hart has a contract with Wilmot Coburn, to chop and grab about ten acres of bottom land, and swamp, for which he gets the brush and three crops for his labor. Wilmot is doing a nice thing in having that swamp cleaned off, as it is the last link in a long chain of swamps running through this neighborhood.

An engine and two cars got off

A remonstrance was filed against the granting of a liquor license to Wm. Rhodes of Spencerville, and it is altogether probable that he will be denied a license; at least it is sincerely hoped so by a majority of the people of that town.

An ancient omen says that if two marriages are celebrated simultaneously, one of the husbands will die.
This omen is no doubt verified in every instance; but we are propen-se to believe that the other husband will die, too, if he lives long enough.

Those who are having deeds writ-the fact that that obliterates aniline ink, and that, in after-years, they may look in vain for that upon the existence of which depends their title to property.

and the bride and groom received a number of presents.

For the first time in many a Sunday there was no preaching in this place last Sunday. We don't know whether the ministers thought that the citizens of St. Joe were good enough without preaching, or whether some other poor souls needed it worse than we did.

Christmas is near at hand, and in consequence, the attendance at the Sunday schools is on the increase.
Even O. H. Widney was out last Sunday, and we heard him getting off something or other about it being near Christmas, and he thought perhaps the teacher was going to give the scholars in the bible class each a present.

The prices asked for gas at An-burn are as high, if not more so, than it cost to burn wood. Eighteen dollars is the price charged for an ordinary cook stove for a year. We pay here, one dollar a cord for wood, and there are very few stoves that burn eighteen cords of wood in a year. Unless the price is reduced gas isn't such very cheap fuel after all.

The Courier correspondent from Spencerville last week pitches into the Dispatch correspondent from that place and the St. Joeites for poking fun at their town, and especially their prospects for a gas well. This certainly must be a mistake so far as our citizens are concerned, for Spencerville is the father of this town, and surely, St. Joeites were too well raised to poke fun at their poor old dad, in his declining years.

"IS THINE HEART RIGHT?"

Sunday Morning Services in the Brooklyn Tabernacle.

Dr. Talmage Makes a Spiritual Diagnosis—Our Nature All Atwist and Askew and Unjoined—The More We Think About Heavenly Things the Better.

BROOKLYN, Dec. 4.—This is sacramental day in Brooklyn Tabernacle. The more than 4,000 communicant members and many strangers from all parts of the world make it a memorable scene. New members were received and some of them were baptized this morning.

The congregation, led by organ and cornet, sang:

Dear dying Lamb, thy precious blood
Shall never lose its power
Till all the ransomed church of God
Be saved to sin no more.

The Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D., preached. His subject was "Salvation from the Chariot," and his text II. Kings x. 15: "Is thine heart right?"

With mettled horses at full speed, for he was celebrated for fast driving, Jehu, the warrior and king, returns from battle. But seeing Jehonadab, an acquaintance, by the wayside, he shouts "Whoa! whoa!" to the lathered span. Then, leaning over to Jehonadab, Jehu salutes him in the words of the text: "Is thine heart right?"

Is thine heart right? I should like to hear of your physical health. Well myself, I like to have everybody else well; and so might ask: Is your eyesight right, your hearing right, your nerves right, your lungs right, your entire body right? But I am busy to-day taking diagnosis of the more important spiritual conditions.

I should like to hear of your financial welfare. I want everybody to have plenty of money, ample apparel, large storehouse, and comfortable residence. And I might ask: Is your business right, your income right, your worldly surroundings right? But what are these financial questions compared with the inquiry as to whether you have been able to pay your debts to God; as to whether you are running yourself by the long-credit system of the soul? I have known men to have no more than one loaf of bread at a time, and yet to own a government bond of Heaven worth more than the whole material universe.

The question I ask you to-day is not in regard to your habits. I make no inquiry about your integrity, or your chastity, or your sobriety. I do not mean to stand on the outside of the gate and ring the bell; but coming up the steps I open the door and come to the private apartment of the soul; and with the earnestness of a man that must give an account for his day's work, I cry out, O man, O woman immortal: Is thine heart right?

I will not insult you by an argument to prove that we are by nature all wrong. If there be a factory explosion and the smoke-stack be upset, and the wheels be broken in two, and the engine unjoined, and the ponderous bars be twisted, and a man should look in and say that nothing was the matter, you would pronounce him a fool. Well, it needs no acumen to discover that our nature is all atwist and askew and unjoined. The thing doesn't work right. The biggest trouble we have in the world is with our souls.

Men sometimes say that though their lives may not be just right, their heart is all right. Impossible! A farmer never puts the poorest apples on top of his barrel; nor does the merchant place the meanest goods in the show-window. The best part of us is our outward life. I do not stop to discuss whether we all fell in Adam, for we have been our own Adam, and have all eaten of the forbidden fruit, and have been turned out of the paradise of holiness and peace; and though the flaming sword that stood at the gate to keep us out has changed position and comes behind to drive us in, we will not go.

The Bible account of us is not exaggerated when it says that we are poor and wretched and miserable and blind and naked. Poor: the wretch that stands shivering on our doorstep on a cold day is not so much in need of bread as we are of spiritual help. Blind: why, the man whose eyes perished in the powder blast, and who for these ten years has gone feeling his way from street to street, is not in such utter darkness as we. Naked: why, there is not one rag of holiness left to hide the shame of our sin. Sick: why, the leprosy has eaten into the heart and the hands and the feet, and the marasmus of an everlasting wasting away has already seized on some of us.

But the meanest thing for a man to do is to discourse about an evil without pointing a way to have it remedied. I speak of the thirst of your hot tongue only that I may show you the living stream that drops crystalline and sparkling from the Rock of Ages, and pour a river of gladness at your feet. If I show you the tents in your coat, it is only because the door of God's wardrobe now swings open, and here is a robe, white with the fleece of the Lamb of God, and of a cut and make that an angel would not be ashamed to wear. If I snatch from you the black, moldy bread that you are munching, it is only to give you the bread made out of the finest wheat that grows on the celestial hills, and baked in the dew of the cross, and one crumb of which would be enough to make all Heaven a banquet. Hear it, one and all, and tell it to your friends when you go home, that the Lord Jesus Christ can make the heart right.

First we need a repenting heart. If for the last ten, twenty, or forty years of life we have been going on the wrong way, it is time that we turned around and started in the opposite direction. If we offend our friends we are glad to apologize. God is our best friend, and yet how many of us have never apologized for the wrongs we have done Him!

There is nothing that we so much need to get rid of as sin. It is a horrible black monster. It polluted Eden. It killed Christ. It has blasted the world. Men keep dogs in kennels, and rabbits in a warren, and cattle in a pen. What a man that would be who would shut them up in his parlor. But this foul dog of sin, and these herds of transgression, we have entertained for many a long year in our heart, which should be the cleanest, brightest room in all our nature. Out with the vile herd! Begone, ye benefactors of an immortal nature! Turn out the beasts and let Christ come in!

A heathen came to an early Christian who had the reputation of curing diseases. The Christian said: "You must have all your idols destroyed." The heathen gave to the Christian the key to his house, that he might go in and destroy the idols. He battered to pieces all he saw, but still the man did not get well. The Christian said to him: "There must be some idol in your house not yet destroyed." The heathen confessed that there was one idol of beaten gold that he could not bear to give up. After a while, when that was destroyed, in answer to the prayer of the Christian the sick man got well.

Many a man has awakened in his dying hour to find his sins all about him. They clambered up on the right side of the bed, and on the left side, and over the headboard, and over the footboard, and horribly devoured the soul.

Repent: the voice celestial cries.

Nor longer dare delay;

The wretch that scorns this mandate dies.

And meets a fiery day.

Again, we need a believing heart. A good many years ago a weary one went up one of the hills of Asia Minor, and with two logs on his back cried out to all the world, offering to carry their sins and sorrows. They pursued him. They slapped him in the face. They mocked him. When he groaned they groaned. They shook their fists at him. They spit on him. They hounded him as though he were a wild beast. His healing of the sick, his sight giving to the blind, his mercy to the outcast silenced not the revenge of the world. His prayers and benedictions were lost in that whirlwind of execration. Away with him! Away with him!

Ah! it was not merely the two pieces of wood that he carried; it was the transgressions of the race, the anguish of the ages, the wrath of God, the sorrows of hell, the stupendous interests of an unending eternity. No wonder his back bent. No wonder the blood started from every pore. No wonder that he crouched under a torture that made the sun faint, and the everlasting hills tremble, and the dead rush up in their winding sheets as he cried, "If it be possible, let this cup pass from me." But the cup did not pass. None to comfort.

There he hangs! What has that hand done that it should be thus crushed in the palm? It has been healing the lame and wiping away tears. What has that foot been doing that it should be so lacerated? It has been going about doing good. Of what has the victim been guilty? Guilty of saving a world. Tell me, ye heavens and earth, was there ever such another criminal? On that hill of carnage, that sunless day, amid those howling rioters, may not your sins and mine have perished? I believe it.

Oh, the ransom has been paid. Those arms of Jesus were stretched out so wide that when he brought them together again they might embrace the world. Oh that I might, out of the blossoms of the spring, or the flaming foliage of the autumn, make one wreath for my Lord! Oh, that all the triumphal arches of the world could be swung in one gateway, where the King of Glory might come in! Oh, that all the harps and trumpets and organs of earthly music might, in one anthem, speak His praise!

But what were earthly flowers to Him who walketh amid the snow of the white lilies of Heaven! What were arches of earthly masonry to Him who hath about His throne a rainbow spun out of everlasting sunshine! What were all earthly music to Him when the hundred and forty and four thousand on one side, and the cherubim, and seraphim, and archangels stand on the other side, and all the space between is filled with the doxologies of eternal jubilee—the hosanna of a redeemed earth, the hallelujah of unfallen angels, song after song rising about the throne of God and of the Lamb. In that pure, high place, let Him hear us. Stop! harps of Heaven, that our poor cry may be heard.

Oh, my Lord Jesus, it will not hurt Thee for one hour to step out from the shining throng. They will make it all up when Thou goest back again. Come hither, O Blessed One, that we may kiss Thy feet. Our hearts, too long withheld, we now surrender into Thy keeping. When Thou goest back, tell it to all the immortals that the lost are found, and let Thy Father's Louise ring with the music and the dance.

They have some old wine in Heaven, not used except in rare festivities. In this world those who are accustomed to use wine on great occasions bring out the beverage and say, "This wine is thirty years old," or "forty years old." But the wine of Heaven is more than eighteen centuries old. It was prepared at the time when Christ trod the wine-press alone. When such grievous sinners as we come back, methinks the chamberlain of Heaven cries out to the servants, "This is unusual joy! Bring up from the vaults of Heaven that old wine. Fill all the tankards. Let all the white-robed guests drink to the immortal health of those new-born sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty." There is joy in Heaven among the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth; and God grant that that one may be you!

Again, a right heart is an expectant heart. It is a poor business to be building castles in the air. Enjoy what you have now. Don't spoil your comfort in the small house because you expect a larger one. Don't fret about your income when it is $3 or $4 per day, because you expect to have after a while $10 per day, or $10,000 a year, because you expect it to be $20,000 a year. But about heavenly things, the more we think the better. Those castles are not in the air, but on the hills, and we have a deed of them in our possession. I like to see a man all full of Heaven. He talks Heaven. He sings Heaven. He prays Heaven. He dreams Heaven. Some of us in our sleep have had the good place open to us. We saw the pinnacles in the sky. We heard the click of the hoofs of the white horses on which visitors rode, and the clapping of the cymbals of eternal triumph. And while in our sleep we were glad that all our sorrows were over, and burdens done with, the throne of God grew whiter, whiter, and whiter, till we opened our eyes and saw that it was only the sun of the earthly morning shining on our pillow. To have a right heart you need to be filled with this expectancy. It would make your privations and annoyances more bearable.

In the midst of the city of Paris stands, or did stand, a statue of the good, but broken-hearted Josephine. I never imagined that marble could be smitten into such tenderness. It seems not lifeless. If the spirit of Josephine be disembodied, the soul of the empress has taken possession of this figure. I am not yet satisfied that it is stone. The puff of the dress on the arm seems to need but the pressure of the finger to indent it. The figure at the bottom of the robe, the ruffle at the neck, the fur lining on the dress, the embroidery of the satin, the cluster of lily and leaf and rose in the hand, the poise of her body as she seems to come sailing out of the sky, her face calm, humble, beautiful, but yet sad—test the genius of the sculptor and the beauty of the heroine he celebrates. Looking up through the rifts of the coronet that encircles her brow, I could see the sky beyond, the great Heavens where all women's wrongs shall be righted, and the story of endurance and resignation shall be told to all the ages. The rose and the lily in the hand of Josephine will never drop their petals. The children of God, whether they suffer on earth, in palaces or in hovels, shall come to that glorious rest. Oh, Heaven, sweet Heaven! at thy gate we set down all our burdens and griefs. The place will be full. Here there are vacant chairs at the hearth, and at the table, but there are no vacant chairs in Heaven. The crowns all worn; the thrones all mounted.

Some talk of Heaven as though it were a handsome church, where a few favored spirits would come in and sit down on finely-cushioned seats all by themselves and sing psalms to all eternity. No, no. "I saw a great multitude that no man could number standing before the throne. He that talked with me had a golden rod to measure the city and it was 12,400 furlongs"—that is, 1,500 miles in circumference. Ah! Heaven is not a little colony at one corner of God's dominion where a man's entrance depends upon what kind of clothes he has on his back and how much money he has in his purse, but a vast empire. God grant that the light of that blessed world may shine upon us in our last moment.

The roughest time we had in crossing the ocean was at the mouth of Liverpool harbor. We arrived at nightfall and were obliged to lie there till the morning waiting for the rising of the tide before we could go up to the city. How the vessel pitched and writhed in the water! So sometimes the last illness of the Christian is a struggle. He is almost through the voyage. The waves of temptation toss his soul, but he waits for the morning. At last the light dawns and the tides of joy arise in his soul and he sails up and casts anchor within the veil.

Is thy heart right? What question can compare with this in importance?

It is a business question. Do you not realize that you will soon have to go out of that store; that you will soon have to resign that partnership; that soon among all the millions of dollars' worth of goods that are sold in New York you will not have the handling of a yard of cloth, or a pound of sugar, or a pennyworth of anything; that soon if a conflagration should start at Central Park and sweep everything to the Battery, it would not disturb you; that soon, if every cashier should abscond, and every insurance company should fail, it would not affect you? What are the questions that stop this side the grave compared with the questions that reach beyond it? Are you making losses that are to be everlasting? Are you making purchases for eternity? Are you jobbing for time when you might be wholesaling for eternity? What question of the store is so broad as the base and so altitudinous and so overwhelming as the question, "Is thy heart right?"

Or is it a domestic question? Is it something about father, mother, or companion, or son, or daughter, that you think is comparable with this question in importance? Do you not realize that by universal and inexorable law all these regulations will be broken up? Your father will be gone, your mother will be gone, your companion will be gone, your child will be gone, you will be gone; then this eternal question will begin to harvest its chief gains, or deplore its worst losses, roll up into its mightiest magnitude, or sweep its vast circles. What difference now does it make to Napoleon III. whether he triumphed or surrendered at Sedan? whether he lived at the Tuileries or at Chislehurst? whether he was Emperor or exile? They laid him out in his coffin in the dress of a field marshal. Did that give him any better chance for the next world than if he had been laid out in a plain shroud? And soon to us what will be the difference whether in this world we rode or walked, were bowed to or maltreated, were applauded or hissed at, were welcomed in or kicked out, while laying hold every moment of the great future and burning in all the splendor of grief and overarching and undergoing all time and all eternity is the plain, simple, practical, thrilling, agonizing, overwhelming question, "Is thy heart right?" Have you within you a repenting heart, an expectant heart? If not I must write upon your soul what George Whitefield wrote upon the window-pane with his diamond ring. He tarried in an elegant house over night, but found that there was no God recognized in that house. Before he left his room in the morning with his ring he wrote upon the window-pane, "One thing thou lackest." After the guest was gone the housewife came up and looked at the window and saw the inscription and called her husband and her children, and God, through that ministry of the window glass, brought them all to Jesus. Though you may to-day be surrounded by comforts and luxuries, and feel you have need of nothing, if you are not the children of God, with the signet ring of Christ's love, let me inscribe upon your souls, "One thing thou lackest." I pray you that, whatever else you may miss, you may not miss Heaven. It is too bright a home to lose. Your soul has been bought at too dear a price. I preach to you of the flood that cleanseth from all sin. Casting all your sins behind you, I beg of you to start this morning for the kingdom. "Yes," you say, "I will start, but not now." William III. made proclamation, when there was a revolution in the north of Scotland, that all who came and took the oath of allegiance by the 31st of December should be pardoned. Maclean, a chieftain of a prominent class, resolved to return with the rest of the rebels, but had some pride in being the very last one that should take the oath. He postponed starting for this purpose until two days before the expiration of the term. A snow storm impeded his way, and before he got up to take the oath and receive a pardon from the throne the time was up and past. While the others were set free, Maclean was miserably put to death. He started too late and arrived too late. In like manner some of you are in prospect of losing forever the alms of the Gospel. Many of you are going to be forever too late. Remember the irreparable mistake of Maclean!

The Place to Have Fun.

There lives in Chicago a comical-looking old negro, who drives an express wagon.

"Do you like this part of the country as well as you do Kentucky?" he was asked the other day.

"Oh, yas, sah, er heep better. Dar ain't much fun fur er nigger in Kentucky."

"Why so?"

"Well, de white men down dar is so 'wise. Dey won't let er nigger fool wid em. Tain't that way heah. Wy, sah, wen I don't feel well up heah I cusses dese folks—I cusses 'em powerful, but da won't let yer do dat in Kentucky. Oh, yas, sah, dis is de place fur er nigger ter hab fun!"—Arkansas Traveler.

Tobogganing Made Easy.

Among the features at Parlor Rock this winter will be two huge toboggan slides. Besides the exhilarating exercise of sliding down hill, tobogganers can experience the sensation of sliding up again. A hydraulic belt or chain, running continually, will be used to attach to the ascending toboggans and slowly draw them and their occupants up to the top of the slides. The water power of the lake will be used to run these elevators, as well as to run the dynamo machines for electric lighting.

SOME STRANGE CONFESSIONS.

Several Good Stories Which Convey Very Needful Morals.

The Rochester (N. Y.) Union reports having this dialogue with an eminent physician:

"Can you cure a cold for me?"
"I dare say; where is it?"
"Do you treat yourself for colds?"
"That depends on how bad they are. I had one last week and fixed myself up a dose, but I didn't dare take it. I kept it over night and gave it to a 'deadhead' patient the next day!"
"Then you don't dare take your own medicine?"

"No! I don't dare, and I have no family physician."

A gentleman, a short time ago, consulted his physician about a severe rheumatic attack. As he was leaving, the doctor said:

"Should my prescription afford any relief, let me know it, as I am suffering from an affection similar to yours, and for the last twenty years have tried in vain to cure it!"

The best of physicians now have the frankness to admit that the schools have not yet mastered all there is to know about the causes of disease, and the best methods of cure. There has been a great advance, no doubt, in medical science, in the last fifty years. Doctors themselves do not take their own physic, even though they may saturate the systems of their patients with poisonous drugs, nor do they bleed, blister, and torture, as formerly.

Byron died, it is claimed, because of over-bleeding by his physicians. Washington met the same fate!

Scientific investigation shows that most ailments proceed from derangement of primary organs, of which the kidneys are the most important. Every drop of blood coursing through the system passes through these organs, and if they are deranged, the blood speedily becomes impure, and carries the seeds of disease to every part of the body. If we keep the organs regulated by the use of a simple vegetable compound like Warner's safe cure, which Prof. Lattimore, New York State Board of Health Analyst, of the Rochester University, says: "I find entirely free from mercury and all poisonous and deleterious substances"—there is little danger of bright's disease, apoplexy, rheumatism, or any of the common ailments, nearly all of which originate in or are made fatal by diseased (though unsuspected) kidneys. This great remedy has the reputation, which seems well founded, of curing more diseases than any one other remedy ever known. It restored the son of the Danish vice-consul Schmidt of 69 Wall street, New York, from Bright's disease, and Gen. Christiansen, of Provost, Morgan & Co., Bankers of New York, who knew of the case, pronounced it a wonderful remedy.

As appropriate to the doctors who give to their patients what they will not take themselves, we quote this story:

"Oh, Mr. Smith, help me out," exclaimed a young lady at a church fair. "I've sold a tidy lot for $15 that only cost 15c. What percentage is the profit?"

"Percentage, madam?" exclaimed the lawyer with merriment. "That transaction is beyond percentage—it is simple larceny!"

The professional man who takes one's money when he can do one no equivalent service will understand the moral.

California's Biggest Orchard.

California has some big orchards, and the largest is in the Suisun Valley, and is owned by A. T. Hatch, President of the California Fruit Union. Mr. Hatch has 200 acres in pear trees, 130 in peaches, 70 in apricots, 10 in nectarines, 210 in almonds; 40 in cherries, 100 in plums and prunes, besides 40 acres of currants and gooseberries, and hundreds of lemon and orange trees. Of these acres, 300 bore fruit this season to the amount of 2,000 tons, which brought the owner $100,000. He calculates that when the whole orchard is in full bearing it will produce 8,000 tons of fruit, worth $400,000. — Chicago News.

"We all have our burdens to bear," said the minister. "There are many trials in this life." "Yes, I suppose there are," said the poor lawyer, ruefully; "but I don't seem to have much luck at getting mixed up in 'em."

Chronic Coughs and Colds.

And all diseases of the Throat and Lungs, can be cured by the use of Scott's Emulsion, as it contains the healing virtues of Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites in their fullest form. Is a beautiful creamy Emulsion, palatable as milk, easily digested, and can be taken by the most delicate. Please read: "I consider Scott's Emulsion the remedy par excellence in Tuberculous and Strumous Affections, to say nothing of ordinary colds and throat troubles."—W. R. S. CORNELL, M. ### How to Select a Wife.

Good health, good morals, good sense, and good temper are the four essentials for a good wife. These are the indispensable. After them come the minor advantages of good looks, accomplishments, family position, etc. With the first four, married life will be comfortable and happy. Lacking either, it will be in more or less degree a failure. Upon good health depends largely good temper and good looks, and to some extent good sense also, as the best mind must be affected more or less by the weaknesses and whims attendant on frail health. Young man, if your wife is falling into a state of invalidism, first of all try to restore her to health. If she is troubled with debilitating female weaknesses, buy Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It will cure her.

A Family Jewel.

DOCTOR DAVID KENNEDY, the famous surgeon and physician, of Rondout, N. Y., has sent us a copy of his book, "How to Cure Kidney, Liver and Blood Disorders," a work of great intrinsic merit, apart from many elegant life illustrations of rare beauty. We find on examination that it is a work of exceeding merit, one which should be kept and read in every home. In addition to the studied and valuable medical lessons inculcated by the Doctor, there are two articles from the widely known author, Col. E. Z. C. Judson (Ned Buntline), which add to the interest of the work. The printed price of this book is only 25 cents, but any one inclosing this notice with the name of the paper from whence it is taken, with 2-cent postage stamp, will receive the book free by mail.

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R.R.

By reason of its central position, close relation to principal lines East of Chicago and continuous lines at terminal points West, Northwest and Southwest—is the only true middle-link in that transcontinental system which invites and facilitates travel and traffic in either direction between the Atlantic and Pacific. The Rock Island main line and branches include Chicago, Joliet, Ottawa, La Salle, Peoria, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Fairfield, Ottumwa, Oakdale, West Liberty, Iowa City, Des Moines, Indianola, Winterset, Atlantic, Knoxville, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie Centre and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Gallatin, Trenton, St. Joseph, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri; Leavenworth and Atchison, in Kansas; Albert Lea, Minneapolis and St. Paul, in Minnesota; Watertown in Dakota, and hundreds of intermediate cities, towns and villages.

THE GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE

Guarantees Speed, Comfort and Safety to those who travel over it. Its roadbed is thoroughly ballasted. Its track is of heavy steel. Its bridges are solid structures of stone and iron. Its rolling stock is perfect as human skill can make it. It has all the safety appliances that mechanical genius has invented and experience proved valuable. Its practical operation is conservative and methodical—its discipline strict and exacting. The luxury of its passenger accommodations is unequalled in the West—unsurpassed in the world.

ALL EXPRESS TRAINS between Chicago and the Missouri River consist of comfortable DAY COACHES, magnificent PULLMAN PALACE PARLOR and SLEEPING CARS, elegant DINING CARS providing excellent meals, and—between Chicago, St. Joseph, Atchison and Kansas City—restful RECLINING CHAIR CARS.

THE FAMOUS ALBERT LEA ROUTE

Is the direct, favorite line between Chicago and Minneapolis and St. Paul. Over this route solid Fast Express Trains run daily to the summer resorts, picturesque localities and hunting and fishing grounds of Iowa and Minnesota. The rich wheat fields and grazing lands of interior Dakota are reached via Watertown.

A short desirable route, via Seneca and Kankakee, offers superior inducements to travelers between Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Lafayette and Council Bluffs, St. Joseph, Atchison, Leavenworth, Kansas City, Minneapolis, St. Paul and intermediate points.

All classes of patrons, especially families, ladies and children, receive from officials and employees of Rock Island trains protection, respectful courtesy and kindly attention.

MECHANICAL.

It is a mistake often made to assume that an old worn-out boiler is "good enough for heating," says Iron. While it is true that a boiler which may not be strong enough to run at eighty pounds pressure will answer very well to run at a somewhat lower pressure, we do not think it quite safe to use for heating, or any other purpose, a superannuated or worn-out boiler. In many cases it is not the steam pressure itself which is alone to be considered, but the strains resulting from conditions use, to which every boiler is subject, without regard to the actual pressure carried. If the boiler has been used for a long period, and there is the slightest ground for thinking the plates unsound and brittle, it should be rejected for all kinds of work. It is a mistake to suppose that no serious explosion can occur if the pressure does not exceed twenty to twenty-five pounds per square inch. Many very destructive explosions have occurred at these pressures, and will continue to occur so long as unsound boilers are used.

It may be of interest to your readers to have the methods which an old engineer employs in handling his fire, says a writer in Power. My method is to run as heavy a fire as my firebox will allow to be kept under the bridge wall, and not to disturb it more than once in a ten-hour run, then clean out with care and as speedily as possible, dress light and let it come up and get ready to bank. In banking make sure to have an even fire, as deep as bridge wall will allow. Then I shut my dampers and let it lie. In the morning I open and govern by the dampers. I do not touch my fire until 3:30 or 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and then proceed to clean as before. In order to do the work in this way it is necessary to have boiler enough to do the work easily, and not have to drive the fire, and, another thing, it is necessary also to have the boiler set right to begin with. The one I have is thirty-two inches from the grate bar to the under side of the shell, and is running twenty-horse power by measurement. I am burning 800 pounds of screenings per day, or four pounds per horse power per hour. If this is not a good showing, I would like some of your readers to get up a better one.

Drop oil is collected in many mills and factories to be cleaned and used again. A little apparatus has been constructed for this purpose, which, it is reasonable to suppose, is patented. It may be described as follows: The apparatus is a box-like concern, of several "stories," the interior either lined with or else consisting entirely of lead. Above it has a shoulder like a funnel, into which is poured the oil to be cleaned. The purified oil passes off through an escape pipe in the bottom. The different shelves or "stories" are perforated, and covered to a height of about two inches with raw, loose cotton, through which the oil must percolate. The cotton serves as a filter, and retains all kinds of contaminations. After the oil has in this manner passed through the several shelves, it is nice and clean and drops into a vessel underneath. The dirty cotton is occasionally replaced by clean. This is about the most inexpensive way of effecting it that I know of. It is also necessary to add that the apparatus must stand in a warm place. The cleaning of the oil with chemicals is both a tedious and a doubtful process, because even after thorough washing it may still retain traces of acids, rendering it unfit for lubricating purposes.

Saved Himself.

Several men who were leaving a barbecue heard some one groaning, and, looking about them, they found an old fellow wallowing under a tree.

"What is the matter?" one of the men asked.

"Go on an' let me alone. Oh, Lord, what a fool your servant has been."

"You seem to be suffering greatly. Perhaps I can help you."

"Lord, there is not a bigger fool on earth than thy servant."

"Come, tell us what is the matter."

The old fellow sat up and leaned against a tree. "Gentlemen," said he, "I have been to the barbecue. For several days I saved myself up for this here occasion. I wouldn't eat nothin' at home, for I wanted to do justice to this barbecue. I got here this mornin' as hungry as a wolf. I went down to the pits where they was cookin' their meat, and the scent of it made me so hungry that I could have chawed a pair o' saddlebags. Oh, Lord, I wish now that I had. It peared to me like they would never git ready to eat, an' I got so weak that I had to lean agin a tree. Airtir while they got ready an' give the word. I made a break for the table an' gethered up a hunk o' sheep, a quarter o' shoat, a chunk o' beef, an' a pone o' co'n light bread, an' went off an' sot down on a log. Oh, Lord, let thy servant have better sense, or kill him right here."

"Don't you think we'd better take you to somebody's house?"

"No. A man that hain't got no mo' sense than I have don't need nothin'. Go on an' let me alone. Oh, Lord, thy servant has n't got enough sense to skin a squirrel." He fell over with a groan and the men rode away and left him. —Arkansaw Traveler.

Kara Fatma, the Amazon.

People in Constantinople are interested in the presence among them of Kara Fatma, the redoubtable female warrior of Kuadistan, who has come on a brief visit to the Turkish Capital. Her deeds of prowess date back to the beginning of the Crimean War, when she led a large body of Kurdish Volunteers, who fought with singular daring for Turkey. The Ottoman Government remembers her services, and requites these by a monthly pension of $5,000 piasters—a sum that in her own frugal home allows her to live with ease. She is tall, thin, with a brown, hawk-like face; her cheeks are the color of parchment, and seamed with scars. Wearing the national dress of the sterner sex, she looks like a man 40, not like a woman who will never again see 75. Slung across her shoulder in Cossack fashion is her long saber, with its jeweled hilt; decorations shine and sparkle on her breast, while the stripes across her sleeves show her to be a Captain in the Ottoman Army. Watching this interesting figure pass along the streets of Stambul, one is reminded of an episode in the campaign of Gen. Lespinasse in the Dolrudja some little time before the allied armies landed in the Crimea. While smoking and chatting one day in his tent with several of his brother officers, the General heard at a far distance a strange music, a medley of drums and clarinets, tomtoms, and piercing human cries. Whence came this weird minstrelsy? All the men in camp turned out to listen to it and discern its origin, when from over the hills they saw a band of some 300 horsemen approaching them at full gallop. At their head rode a brown-faced woman, with flashing eyes and lissome limbs; the very picture of an Amazon. Vaulting from her saddle she gravely saluted Gen. Lespinasse, and through an interpreter told him that she had come to fight the Russians, both she and her brave Kurds being completely at his service. That night her men were quartered in camp with the French troops; but they were ill-pleased to be so billeted. They wanted their independence, and not even their mistress and leader should barter it away for them. By daybreak they were in their saddles, riding off across the hills to meet the dawn, to the sounds of that weird, strident music which had proclaimed their approach. —Fall Mail Gazette.

The Fate of Worlds.

The earth, says Flammarion was born; it will die. Its will die when its vital elements have been spent, or perhaps by the extinction of the sun, in whose rays its existence is suspended. It may die by the shock of a celestial body which it might meet in its path, but this end of the world is the most improbable of all. It may die, we say, by the slow absorption of its elements. In truth, it is probable that the water and the air are diminishing. The ocean, like the atmosphere, appears to have been much more considerable than at present. The crust of the earth is penetrated by the waters, which combine chemically with the rocks. It is almost certain that the interior temperature of the globe at ten kilometers (about six miles) of depth reaches the boiling point and impedes a further descent of the waters; but the absorption will continue with the cooling of the globe. The oxygen, nitrogen, and carbonic acid, which compose our atmosphere, appear to suffer likewise a slow absorption. —Arkansaw Traveler.

We carry all of our neighbors' crimes in sight, and throw all of our own over our shoulders.

Sleeping Apartments.

Some great writer has remarked: "It must not be forgotten that we spend a considerable portion of our lives in the bed-chamber, and, therefore, its healthfulness cannot fail to have a very important bearing upon our physical well-being." Everybody, indeed, who is actuated by a due regard for health and real comfort, will consider an equal degree of attention necessary in giving attention to the size, situation, temperature, and cleanliness of the apartment he occupies during the hours of repose, as of the parlor, drawing-room, or any other apartment; and yet how very often do we find families crowded at night into obscure and confined chambers, of dimensions scarcely more ample than those of an old-fashioned closet, while perhaps, in the majority of instances, the best rooms in the whole house are set apart for the sole purpose of ostentatious display. Now it is very important that the largest and most elevated room, or rooms, upon the second floor of the dwelling, be appropriated for the purposes of sleeping, and that the same be properly ventilated during the day-time and during all seasons of the year.

There are few houses the rooms of which are so situated as to render good ventilation impossible, and the influence of this practice upon the health of inmates is too important to permit being neglected from any slight cause. A bed-chamber should be divested of all unnecessary furniture, and unless of considerable size, should never contain more than one bed. There cannot be a more pernicious custom that that pursued by some, indeed by many families, of having their children sleep in small apartments, with two and sometimes with three beds crowded into the same room. It is scarcely necessary to observe that cleanliness, in the most extensive signification of the term, is, if possible, even more necessary with reference to the bed-chamber than with almost any other apartment in the whole house. The practice of sleeping in a room which is occupied during the daytime is extremely unwise. Perfect cleanliness and sufficient free ventilation cannot, under such circumstances, be preserved, especially during cold weather; hence the atmosphere becomes constantly more vitiated, and altogether unfit for respiration. While too great a degree of caution cannot be observed to avoid sleeping in damp rooms, beds, or clothing, the temperature of the bed-chamber, if possible, should never be increased, under the ordinary circumstances of health, by artificial means. As this apartment is to be reserved solely for sleep, a fire is never necessary, excepting, possibly, during extreme cold weather, and, even then, the temperature ought not to exceed fifty degrees.

A sleeping apartment in which a heavy fire has been kept for several hours prior to retiring, may to some persons, at first thought, offer great comfort. But, right here, great danger is very liable to occur, since by heating the room to such an extent as has been referred to the system becomes greatly enervated, creating an increased susceptibility to the influence of the cold air, and thus the way is opened to the attack of some of the most serious diseases, especially of the throat and lungs. Happy, indeed, should those persons esteem themselves whose means forbid an indulgence in this form of luxury! A person accustomed to undress in a room without a fire, and to seek repose in a cold bed, will not experience the least inconvenience, even in the severest of winter weather. The natural heat of the body will very speedily render a person, under such circumstances, even more comfortable than he or she will be who sleeps in a heated apartment, as experience has amply verified. But this is not all. The constitution of the one accustomed to sleeping in a room which is not artificially heated will be rendered more robust and strong, and far less susceptible to the influence of artificial vicissitudes, than that person who is not so accustomed to sleep. —Good House-keeping.

In 70, Jerusalem was razed and plowed over by the Roman Emperor, Titus, in order to obliterate and make unrecognizable spots venerated by Christians. It was refounded, as a heathen city, by the Emperor Hadrian, A. D. 140.

Buy your School Crayons at the St. Joe Drug Store.

The pleasant weather this week has made trade quiet.

Wineland's feed and chop mill is kept busy all the time.

The Lutheran Sunday school will have a revolving tree on Christmas eve.

Case & Olds have an elegant assortment of Neck Mullers. Call and see them.

Ben Zimmerman, of Spencerville, is turning out some fine Cabinet Photographs at $2.25 per dozen.

Those who want lots of smoke for a little money, should call at John Hull's and get one of those mammoth ten cent cigars.

All kinds of itch cured in thirty minutes with Wolford's Sanitary Lotion, for sale at the St. Joe Drug Store at $1.00 per bottle.

Any one desirous of taking a good Church and home paper, should send for a sample copy of the Herald and Presbyterian, published at Cincinnati, Ohio. Send five one cent stamps to their address, and get a handsome Calendar for 1888.

Several persons from this place attended the surprise party held at the residence of Levi Showalter, north of Concord, on Friday evening, in honor of the birthday of Miss Jennie. She was just sweet seventeen; so says George Shuler, and he ought to know.

Friday was Free Zeigler's birthday, and several of the grown-up boys took advantage of the occasion to carry him out in the street and take a full length impression of his form in the beautiful snow. Free resisted as best he could, but finally went without much coaxing. Who wouldn't go, when six or eight big men got hold of him.

The following from a prominent attorney of this state, will explain a matter in which some of our citizens are interested. "So many people ask me to learn if royalty paid on the driven well can be recovered back, and I take this method to say that it can not. The patent law is not peculiar in this respect. The law is universal that money paid on an unfounded claim, under threat of suit, cannot be recovered back. The party makes himself his own judge and decides against himself, and the law lets his decision against himself stand. Honor would demand a repayment, but that characteristic is scarce among these driven well patent owners.

Christmas Presents.

Perhaps you are wondering what to buy for Christmas presents, and we'll help you out of the trouble, by suggesting that you go to Ben Zimmerman at Spencerville, and get some pictures taken and present them to your friends. They will make a beautiful, appropriate and lasting present. From now until Christmas, he will furnish Cabinet size Photographs at $2.25 per dozen. Usual price $4.00. This is a rare chance to get photographs at a very low price. Come early and avoid the rush. Work guaranteed equal to any.

COUNT YOUR BLESSINGS.

COMPOSED BY MRS. MARGARET E. TIBBITS, A BLIND SISTER OF MORT MILLIMAN, OF COBURNTOWN.

A childish affliction filled my heart with care;
My cross seemed more than I could bear;
My mother placed her hand on my head,
Count your blessings, my child, she said.

Every heart has it's burden of care—
You must learn to bear your share;
Deeper trials in the future may come,
Bravely try to bear this one.
Little trials, bravely borne, in time
you will know,
Gives strength to bear some heavier blow.

There never was a storm so dark and wild,
But the sun, shown after, my child;
Think of the thousands, who's blessings are less,
And in time I am sure you will confess,
'Tis well when trouble racks the brain,
To count the blessing that yet remain.
Think of naught but your troubles,
and they'll grow,
Higher than mountains, capped with snow,
Count your blessing oft, you will find
by counting,
Your trouble is but a hill, by blessing's mountain.

I might wish you a life, like one long bright day,
But 'tis not for me to say;
Whether the future for you doth hold More joy, than sorrow, can not be told;
The trials now given, may be to prepare,
Your heart for a life of sorrow and care,
But ever remember, the same strong arm,
That send the sunshine, rules the storm;
But whether your life be sad or bright,
Trust God, in time, to make it right.
Since then, thirty years on the wings of time,
Have brought joy and sorrow to me,
and mine;
When the dark hours to me have come,
And the bright hopes vanished, one by one;
When the bitter tear I've shed,
Oft I have fancied my mother's hand
on my head;
Bidding me let reason rule the brain,
And count the blessings that yet remain.
Ever when thus I have comfort sought,
Sweet peace to me the practice brought;
Giving a feeling of thankfulness,
For the blessings that to me were left.

INDIANA STATE NEWS.

—John O. Snyder, the man who has had the walking mania for several years past, died at his home, near Millgrove. Snyder could not be induced to cease walking, and when his friends tried to stop him he would be taken with convulsions and suffer intensely. He walked night and day, and could get no rest except in walking. He would eat, sleep, and shave himself while walking, and if he stopped he would go into convulsions until put onto his feet and started upon his walk. Scientific men have come hundreds of miles to investigate the case, but failed to give any theory why he acted in this strange manner. He was on exhibition in the museums in Chicago and Cincinnati, but he kept up the incessant tramp with no relaxation whatever. He was brought home about four weeks ago, with his limbs badly swollen, yet he kept on walking, although two men were required to walk with him to keep him from going into convulsions. His limbs swelled to enormous proportions, but if they could move, as if walking, he found some relief and ease. At last, overcome with weakness, he took to his bed. This is one of the most mysterious freaks of nature on record, and no solution of the problem has so far been given.

—A tremendous explosion occurred in Stevenson Brothers' at Cutler, recently. Giant powder, in oyster cans, had been placed under the building, and over the cans were piled heavy stones. Great pieces of granite were sent crashing through the building, tearing window-frames from the walls. The saloon floor was completely uplifted. The sides of the building were forced out four feet at the bottom, and sleepers two by ten were twisted and torn to splinters like pine shingles. The large stove was forced through the ceiling, and not a bottle on the show bar was left unsmashed. The loss will exceed $500.

—Miss Alice Reed, daughter of ex-Commissioner A. J. Reed, of Clark County, recently returned from her home in Ness County, Kansas, where she went a few years since and pre-empted a farm of 160 acres. Since then she has continued to reside in an adobe house on the land without any companion, except her pony. She says that she has never had any occasion to be afraid of anything, and has always received the kindest of treatment.

—Jerry Balay, a young man of Green Township, Morgan County, while out rabbit-hunting, accidentally shot himself, causing instant death. He was in company with a young man named Horgan, and looking for a rabbit. He was standing on top of a fence, with his gun resting at his feet, the muzzle pointing upward. The gun slipped so that the hammer struck the fence, and both barrels were discharged, the contents passing through his heart.

—Mrs. Margaret Twibell, a wealthy widow, near Montpelier, while blacking a stove got a considerable quantity of the polish on her right hand. The hand began to swell, became very painful, and developed into a bad case of poisoning. The hand is in bad shape, and Mrs. Twibell's general health is affected by the poisoned member. Amputation may be necessary.

—The farmers of Washington Township, Hendricks County, are considerably excited over the appearance in that locality nearly two weeks ago, of two large eagles, which have remained in that section ever since. They are very bold in their attacks upon young pigs and poultry. A number of attempts have been made to kill the birds, but none have proved successful.

—Michael Sullivan and Adam Schoner, section-hands on the Vandalia Railroad, while making repairs on the road at the crossing of the Vandalia and Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago railroads, near Plymouth, were run down by the Fort Wayne accommodation train. Sullivan was instantly killed and Schoner fatally injured. Both have large families.

—Ida, the 6-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David May, of Decoto, a small town five miles northeast of Muncie, was burned to death while trying to extinguish the flames in a cradle, in which a baby was sleeping. A spark from a stove caused the fire. Mrs. May had only left the house a few minutes, to go to a neighbor's. The baby was not injured.

—The cases of John B. Park, passenger conductor, and John Dorsey, freight engineer, of the Chicago and Atlantic Railroad, charged with involuntary manslaughter in the Kouts disaster, will be called December 28 in the Porter County Circuit Court. Their bail has been fixed at $5,000 each. Park has been arrested and has given bail.

—At Swanington, Nelson Dillbeck, a brakeman on the C., I., St. L. & C. Railroad, got his foot caught in a guard rail while uncoupling cars, and was run over before the train could be stopped. He was taken to Fowler, where he died. The cars ran across his body, mangling him terribly.

—The Commissioners of Scott County have been arrested, charged with a violation of the statutes in that they employed Hon. Charles L. Jewett as an attorney to attend to legal business that the law requires the Prosecuting Attorney to look after.

—Gov. Gray has appointed John H. Bass, of Fort Wayne; Clem Studabaker, of South Bend, and Antonio Meayer, of Terre Haute, honorary commissioners of the State of Indiana for the coming centennial celebration at Cincinnati.

—Mrs. Charles Mee, of Elkhart, has entered suit against the Elkhart Street Railway Company in the sum of $20,000 damages, for several broken ribs, received recently by falling from a car.

—Amboy claims to have the largest gas well in Miami County. Pipes have been laid, and nearly every resident of the town is supplied with the fuel. Free fuel will be furnished for five years to anybody who will erect a roller flouring-mill.

—Jesse Loar, miner, aged 40 years, and married, was crushed by falling slate in the Campbell mine, at Brazil. His back was broken and other injuries sustained that will result fatally.

—John Cantner was caught in the belt of a large drive-wheel in a saw-mill at New Lancaster and horribly mangled.

—The President has granted the application for pardon in the case of Columbus Houchin, convicted of passing counterfeit money, and sentenced in December, 1883, to seven years' imprisonment in the Indiana State Prison.

—John Christie, a young unmarried man, working on the farm of Mr. T. A. Peden, two miles west of Spencer, had the first three fingers of his right hand cut off in a large cutting-box.

—Levi A. Heard, of Cambridge City, who shot Clio Smith, has had a bill returned against him by the grand jury for murder in the first degree.

—Frederick Creon, aged 15, was caught by a mine car in the Gartscherrie mine No. 1, near Knightsville, and instantly killed. His father was killed in the Bartlett mine four years ago.

—S. F. Kyle's dry goods store, at La-Joga, was broken into and robbed of $2,000 worth of plush wraps, velvets, silks, and dress goods.

—The second gas well at New Castle proves to be a gusher, and the inhabitants are jubilant.

—The woman suffragists have perfected an organization in the Third Congressional District.

TABERNACLE SERVICES.

Straining at a Gnat and Swallowing a Camel.

Dr. Talmage Says There Are a Thousand Scoundrels Outside the Church to One Inside of It—Why the Law Taxing Income Was Revealed.

BROOKLYN, Dec. 11.—To-night the Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D. D., preached at the Tabernacle, this city, on "Too Much Ado About Small Things." His text was: "Ye blind guides, which strain at a gnat, and swallow a camel." Matt. xxiii, 24. The eloquent preacher said:

A proverb is compact wisdom, knowledge in chunks, a library in a sentence, the electricity of many clouds discharged into one bolt, a river put through a mill race. When Christ quotes the proverb of the text, he means to set forth the ludicrous behavior of those who make a great bluster about small sins and have no appreciation of great ones.

In my text a small insect and a large quadruped are brought into comparison—a gnat and a camel. You have in museum or on the desert seen the latter, a great awkward, sprawling creature, with back two stories high, and stomach having a collection of reservoirs for desert travel, an animal forbidden to the Jews as food, and in many literatures entitled "the ship of the desert." The gnat spoken of in the text is in the grub form. It is born in pool or pond, after a few weeks becomes a chrysalis, and then after a few days becomes the gnat as we recognize it. But the insect spoken of in the text is in its very smallest shape, and it yet inhabits the water—for my text is a misprint and ought to read "strain out a gnat."

My text shows you the prince of inconsistencies. A man after long observation has formed the suspicion that in a cup of water he is about to drink there is a grub or the grandparent of a gnat. He goes and gets a sieve or strainer. He takes the water and pours it through the sieve in the broad light. He says, "I would rather do anything almost than drink this water until this larva be extirpated." This water is brought under inspection. The experiment is successful. The water rushes through the sieve and leaves against the side of the sieve the grub or gnat. Then the man carefully removes the insect and drinks the water in placidity. But going out one day, and hungry, he devours a "ship of the desert," the camel, which the Jews were forbidden to eat. The gastronomer has no compunction of conscience. He suffers from no indigestion. He puts the lower jaw under the camel's forefoot, and his upper jaw over the hump of the camel's back, and gives one swallow and the dromedary disappears forever. He strained out a gnat and swallowed a camel.

While Christ's audience were yet smiling at the appositeness and wit of his illustration—for smile they did in church, unless they were too stupid to understand the hyperbole—Christ practically said to them, "That is you." Punctilious about small things; reckless about affairs of great magnitude. No subject ever withered under a surgeon's knife more bitterly than did the Pharisees under Christ's scalpel of truth. As an anatomist will take a human body to pieces, and put them under a microscope for examination, so Christ finds his way to the heart of the dead Pharisee and cuts it out and puts it under the glass of inspection for all generations to examine. Those Pharisees thought that Christ would flatter them and compliment them, and how they must have writhed under the red-hot words as He said, "Ye fools, ye whitened sepulchers, ye blind guides, which strain out a gnat and swallow a camel."

There are in our day a great many gnats strained out and a great many camels swallowed, and it is the object of this sermon to sketch a few persons who are extensively engaged in that business.

First: I remark that all those ministers of the Gospel are photographed in the text who are very scrupulous about the conventionalities of religion, but put no particular stress upon matters of vast importance. Church services ought to be grave and solemn. There is no room for frivolity in religious convocation. But there are illustrations and there are hyperboles like that of Christ in the text that will irradiate with smiles any intelligent auditor. There are men like those blind guides of the text who advocate only those things in religious service which draw the corners of the mouth down, and denounce all those things which have a tendency to draw the corners of the mouth up, and these men will go to installations and to presbyteries and to conferences and to associations, their pockets full of fine sieves to strain out the gnats, while in their own churches at home every Sunday there are fifty people sound asleep. They make their churches a great dormitory, and their somniferous sermons are a cradle, and the drawled-out hymns a lullaby, while some wakeful soul in a pew with her fan keeps the flies off unconscious persons approximately. Now, I say it is worse to sleep in church than to smile in church, for the latter implies at least attention, while the former implies the indifference of the hearers and the stupidity of the speaker. In old age, or from physical infirmity, or from long watching with the sick drowsiness will sometimes overpower one; but when a minister of the Gospel looks off upon an audience and finds healthy and intelligent people struggling with drowsiness, it is time for him to give out the doxology or pronounce the benediction. The great fault with church services to-day is not too much vivacity, but too much somnolence. The one is an irritating gnat that may be easily strained out; the other is a great, sprawling, sleepy-eyed camel on the dry desert. In all our Sabbath-schools, in all our Bible-classes, in all our pulpits we need to brighten up our religious messages with such Christ-like vivacity as we find in the text.

I take down from my library the biographies of ministers and writers of past ages, inspired and uninspired, who have done the most to bring souls to Jesus Christ, and I find that without a single exception they consecrated their wit and their humor to Christ. Elijah used it when he advised the Baalites, as they could not make their god respond, telling them to call louder as their god might be sound asleep or gone a-hunting. Job used it when he said to his self-conceited comforters, "Wisdom will die with you." Christ not only used it in the text, but when He ironically complimented the putrefied Pharisees, saying, "The whole need not a physician," and when by one word He described the cunning of Herod, saying, "Go ye and tell that fox." Matthew Henry's commentaries, from the first page to the last, corruscated with humor as summer clouds with heat lightning. John Bunyan's writings are as full of humor as they are of saving truth, and their is not an aged man here who has ever read "Pilgrim's Progress" who does not remember that while reading it he smiled as often as he wept. Chrysostom, George Herbert, Robert South, John Wesley, George Whitefield, Jeremy Taylor, Rowland Hill, Nettleton, George G. Finney, and all the men of the past who greatly advanced the kingdom of God consecrated their wit and their humor to the cause of Christ. So it has been in all the ages; and I say to these young theological students who cluster in these services Sabbath by Sabbath, sharpen your wits as keen as cineters, and then take them into this holy war.

It is a very short bridge between a smile and a tear, a suspension bridge from eye to lip, and it is soon crossed over, and a smile is sometimes just as sacred as a tear. There is as much religion, and I think a little more, in a spring morning than in a starless midnight. Religious work without any humor or wit in it is a banquet with a side of beef, and that raw, and no condiments, and no dessert succeeding. People will not sit down at such a banquet. By all means remove all frivolity and all bathos, and all lightness and all vulgarity—strain them out through the sieve of holy discrimination; but, on the other hand, beware of that monster which overshadows the Christian church to-day, conventionality, coming up from the Great Sahara desert of ecclesiasticism, having on its back a hump of sanctimonious gloom, and vehemently refusing to swallow that camel.

Oh, how particular a great many people are about the infinitesimals while they are quite reckless about the magnitudes. What did Christ say? Did he not exhort the people in his time who were so careful to wash their hands before a meal but did not wash their hearts? It is a bad thing to have unclean hands; it is a worse thing to have an unclean heart. How many people there are in our time who are very anxious that after their death they shall be buried with their feet toward the east, and not at all anxious that during their whole life they should face in the right direction so that they shall come up in the resurrection of the just whichever way they are buried. How many there are chiefly anxious that a minister of the Gospel shall come in the line of apostolic succession, not caring so much whether he comes from Apostle Paul or Apostle Judas. They have a way of measuring a gnat until it is larger than a camel.

Again, my subject photographs all those who are abhorrent of small sins while they are reckless in regard to magnificent thefts. You will find many a merchant who, while he is so careful that he would not take a yard of cloth or a spool of cotton from the counter without paying for it, and who if a bank cashier should make a mistake and send in a roll of bills $5 too much would dispatch a messenger in hot haste to return the surplus, yet who will go into a stock company in which after a while he gets control of the stock, and then waters the stock and makes $100,000 appear like $200,000. He only stole $100,000 by the operation. Many of the men of fortune made their wealth in that way. One of those men, engaged in such unrighteous acts, that evening, the evening of the very day when he watered the stock, will find a wharf rat stealing a newspaper from the basement doorway, and will go out and catch the urchin by the collar, and twist the collar so tightly the poor fellow cannot say that it was thirst for knowledge that led him to the dishonest act, but grip the collar tighter and tighter, saying: "I have been looking for you a long while; you stole my paper four or five times, haven't you? you miserable wretch." And then the old stock gambler, with a voice they can hear three blocks, will cry out, "Police, police!"

That same man, the evening of the day in which he watered the stock, will kneel with his family in prayers and thank God for the prosperity of the day, then kiss his children good night with an air which seems to say, "I hope you will all grow up to be as good as your father." Prisons for sins insectile in size, but palaces for crimes dromedarian. No mercy for sins animalcule in proportion, but great leniency for mastodon iniquity. A poor boy slyly takes from the basket of a market woman a choice pear—saying some one else from the cholera—and you smother him in the horrible atmosphere of Raymond street jail or New York Tombs, while his cousin, who has been skillful enough to steal $50,000 from the city, you will make him a candidate for the New York Legislature!

There is a great deal of uneasiness and nervousness now among some people in our time who have gotten unrighteous fortune, a great deal of nervousness about dynamite. I tell them that God will put under their unrighteous fortunes something more explosive than dynamite, the earthquake of his omnipotent indignation. It is time that we learn in America that sin is not excusable in proportion as it declares large dividends and has outriders in equipage. Many a man is riding to perdition, position ahead and lackey behind. To steal one copy of a newspaper is a gnat; to steal many thousands of dollars is a camel. There is many a fruit dealer who would not consent to steal a basket of peaches from a neighbor's stall, but who would not scruple to depress the fruit market; and as long as I can remember we have heard every summer the peach crop of Maryland is a failure, and by the time the crop comes in the misrepresentation makes a difference of millions of dollars. A man who would not steal one peach basket steals 50,000 peach baskets. Go down in the summer time into the Mercantile library, in the reading rooms, and see the newspaper reports of the crops from all parts of the country, and their phraseology is very much the same, and the same men wrote them, methodically and infamously carrying out the huge lying about the grain crop from year to year and for a score of years. After a while there will be a "corner" in the wheat market, and men who had a contempt for a petty theft will burglarize the wheat bin of a nation and commit larceny upon the American corn-crib. And some of the men will sit in churches and in reformatory institutions trying to strain out the small gnats of scoundrelism, while in their grain elevators and their storehouses they are fattening huge camels, which they expect after awhile to swallow. Society has to be entirely re-constructed on this subject. We are to find that a sin is inexcusable in proportion as it is great.

I know in our time the tendency is to charge religious frauds against good men. They say: "Oh, what a class of frauds you have in the church of God in this day," and when an elder of a church, or a deacon, or a minister of the Gospel, or a superintendent of a Sabbath-school turns out a defaulter, what display heads there are in many of the newspapers. Greatly exaggerated. Five-line pic: "Another Saint Absconded." "Clerical Scoundrelism." "Religion at a Discount." "Shame on the Churches," while there are a thousand scoundrels outside the church to where there is one inside the church, and the misbehavior of those who never see the inside of a church is so great it is enough to tempt a man to become a Christian to get out of their company. But in all circles, religious or irreligious, the tendency is to excuse sin in proportion as it is mammoth. Even John Milton in his "Paradise Lost," while he condemns Satan, gives such a grand description of him you have hard work to suppress your admiration. Oh, this straining out of small sins like gnats, and this gulping down great iniquities like camels.

This subject does not give the picture of one or two persons, but is a gallery in which thousands of people may see their likeness. For instance, all those people who, while they would not rob their neighbor of a farthing, appropriate the money, and the treasure of the public: A man has a house to sell, and he tells his customer it is worth $20,000. Next day the assessor comes around and the owner says it is worth $15,000. The Government of the United States took off the tax from personal income, among other reasons because so few people would tell the truth, and many a man with an income of hundreds of dollars a day made statements which seemed to imply that he was about to be handed over to the overseer of the poor. Careful to pay their passage from Liverpool to New York, yet smuggling in their Saratoga trunk ten silk dresses from Paris and a half dozen watches from Geneva, Switzerland, telling the custom-house officer on the wharf, "There is nothing in that trunk but wearing apparel," and putting a $5 gold piece in his hand to punctuate the statement.

Described in the text are all those who are particular never to break the law of grammar, and who want all their language an elegant specimen of syntax, straining out all the inaccuracies of speech with a fine sieve of literary criticism, while through their conversation go slander and innuendo, and profanity and falsehood larger than a whole caravan of camels, when they might better fracture every law of the language and shock intellectual taste, and better let every verb seek in vain for its nominative, and every noun lose its way in the sentence, and adjectives and participles and pronouns get into a grand riot worthy of the Fourth ward on election day, than to commit a moral inaccuracy. Better swallow a thousands gnats than one camel.

Such persons are also described in the text who are very much alarmed about the small faults of others, and have no alarm about their own great transgressions. There are in every community and in every church watchdogs who feel called upon to keep their eyes on others and growl. They are full of suspicion. They wonder if that man is not dishonest, if that man is not unclean, if there is not something wrong about the other man. They are always the first to hear of anything wrong. Vultures are always the first to smell carrion. They are self-appointed detectives. I lay this down as a rule without any exception, that those people who have the most faults themselves are the most merciless in their watching of others. From scalp of head to sole of foot they are full of jealousies and hypercriticisms. They spend their life in hunting for muskrats and mud turtles, instead of hunting for Rocky Mountain eagles, always for something mean instead of something grand. They look at their neighbors' imperfections through a microscope, and look at their own imperfections through a telescope upside down. Twenty faults of their own do not hurt them so much as one fault of somebody else. Their neighbors' imperfections are like gnats and they strain them out; their own imperfections are like camels and they swallow them.

But lest some might think they escape the scrutiny of the text, I have to tell you that we all come under the divine satire when we make the question of time more prominent than the question of eternity. Come, now, let us all go into the confessional. Are not all tempted to make the question, Where shall I live now? greater than the question, Where shall I live forever? How shall I get more do-lars here? greater than the question, How shall I lay up treasures in Heaven? the question, How shall I pay my debts to man? greater than the question, How shall I meet my obligations to God? the question, How shall I gain the world? greater than the question, What if I lost my soul? the question, Why did God let sin come into this world? greater than the question, How shall I get it extirpated from my nature? the question, What shall I do with the twenty, or forty, or seventy years of my sublunary existence? greater than the question, What shall I do with the millions of cycles of my post-terrestrial existence. Time, how small it is! Eternity, how vast it is! The former more insignificant in comparison with the latter than a gnat is insignificant when compared with a camel. We dodged the text. We said, "That doesn't mean me, and that doesn't mean me," and with a ruinous benevolence we are giving the whole sermon away.

But let us all surrender to the charge. What an ado about things here! What poor preparation for a great eternity! As though a minnow were larger than a blemish, as though a swallow took wider circuit than an albatross, as though a nettle were taller than a Lebanon cedar, as though a gnat were greater than a camel, as though a minute were longer than a century, as though time were higher, deeper, broader than eternity. So the text which flashed with lightning of wit as Christ uttered it is followed by the crashing thunders of awful catastrophe to those who make the questions of time greater than the questions of the future, the oncoming, overshadowing future. Oh, eternity! eternity! eternity!

A Cultured Guest.

"I desire to retire," said a Boston guest to the proprietor of a hotel in Arkansas.

"You wish?" asked the dazed man.

"I desire to retire."

"You what?"

"I desire to retire."

"Well—I—I—I'll be darned if I b'lieve we've got it in the house, mister."

"Got what?" said the amazed guest.

"I didn't ask for anything."

"Well, say it agin an' see if I kin ketch on."

"It is strange you cannot understand plain English. I simply said I desire to retire, that is I wish to go to my room."

"Oh—aw—oh! That's hit? You wauter turn in, eh? Why n't you say so? We don't know nothin' 'bout 'desirin' to retire' here in Arkansas. We just put off to bed."

And when he came down stairs he said to his wife, "If that's the way they talk in Boston it ain't no wonder there's so many fools there. 'Desire to retire' Well, I'll be darned!"—Tid Bits.

THE English national debt was established at the revolution which drove James II. from the throne and made William III. King of Enola.

THE AUTHOR OF ONE POEM.

(Milwaukee Sentinel.)

There died at Bath, Steuben County, New York, not long ago, at the age of 58, a man who wrote one celebrated poem, and, as far as the public know, never did anything else that was remarkable. His death has not attracted as much notice in the press as would that of a second-class variety show actress. Indeed the first mention we have seen of it is not in a newspaper, but in the New York Critic, a literary journal, which copies an article on the subject of the local Bath paper. The man was Judge G. H. McMaster, and his one poem, doubtless familiar to many readers of the Sentinel, since it is included in many of the current collections of verse, is as follows:

CARMEN BELLICOSUM,
In their ragged regimentals
Stood the old Continentals,
Yielding not,
While the grenadiers were lunging,
And like hail fell the plunging Cannon-shot;
When the files
Of the isles,
From the smoky night-encampment, bore the Banner of the rampant
Union;
And grimmer, grimmer, grimmer, rolled the Roll of the drummer,
Through the morn!

Then with eyes to the front, all,
And with guns horizontal,
Stood our sires;
While the balls whistled deadly,
And in streams flashing redly
Blazed the fires;
As the rear
On the shore
Swept the strong battle-breakers o'er the green
Sodded acres
Of the plain;
And louder, louder, louder, cracked the black Gunpowder,
Cracking again!

Now like smiths at their forges Worked the red St. George's Cannoners;
And the villainous salt-peter
Kang a fierce, discordant meter
Round our ears;
As the swift
Storm-drift,
With hot sweeping anger, came the horse-guards' clangor
On our flanks.
Then higher, higher, higher, burned the old-fashioned fire
Through the ranks!

Then the bare-headed Colonel
Galloped through the white infernal Powder-cloud;
And his broad sword was swinging,
And his brazen throat was ringing Trumpet loud;
Then the blue
Bullets flew,
And the trooper jackets reddened at the touch of the leaden
Rifle-breath;
And rounder, rounder, rounder, roared the iron six-pounder,
Hurling death.

Of this poem Edmond Clarence Stedman wrote in the Galaxy Magazine, many years ago: "There is nothing like it in our language; 'tis the ringing, characteristic utterance of an original man. There is a perfect blending of sense to sound, and of both to the spirit of the theme. To include a picture often ruins a song; but here we have the knot of patriots clustered upon a battle-hillside, the powder cracking again, the old-fashioned Colonel galloping with drawn sword, and as Rounder, rounder, rounder, roars the iron six-pounder, Hurling death, it seems a heavier piece of ordnance, and charged with weightier issues, than the whole park of artillery in a modern armament. This song will last with the memory of revolutionary days. It was written when the author was but 20 years old and first appeared in the Knickerbocker Magazine for February, 1849, under the signature "John Mac-Grom." McMaster became a lawyer, and at one time was county judge of Steuben County. It is strange that a man who at 20 was capable of writing a poem so original and striking that it was at once recognized as a masterpiece should have never made a further venture in literature.

Mr. Clay as a Pugilist.

The skill which Mr. Clay learned in boyish encounters was of use to him afterward, for statesmen in Kentucky were addicted to fistfights. The Hon. James C. Sprigg, a member of the Kentucky Legislature, and afterward elected to Congress, had been very fortunate in such affairs. He once, when in his cups, had communicated to Mr. Clay the secret of his success. It was to advance upon his enemy with a pleasant expression of countenance, and, having thus thrown him off his guard, to strike him a heavy blow in the face, and keep at it until he was beaten. Messrs. Clay and Sprigg afterward quarreled, and met by accident at the hotel, in a room occupied by a number of the members. "As soon," says Mr. Clay, "as Sprigg, who was evidently awaiting my arrival, saw me, he advanced past all these gentlemen toward me, with a pleasant look, without speaking. I remembered his methods, and when he got within reach, without a word on either side, I gave him a severe blow in the face and brought him staggering to the floor." As often as Mr. Sprigg would rise Mr. Clay would repeat the blow, and thus easily beat his antagonist. Mr. Clay speaks of this as comic; most of his affairs, however, with knife and pistol, were of a tragic order.—The Argonaut.

Old Newspapers.

The Stuart brothers undertook in 1788 the printing of the Morning Post, which, having been in very low water for some time, made a fresh start, with new type and promise of other improvements. "Newspapers," wrote the editor, whoever he may have been, in terms more applicable to the Post than to any other journal, "have long enough estranged themselves in a manner totally from the elegancies of literature and dealt only in malice, or at least in the prattle of the day. On this head, however, newspapers are not much more to blame than their patrons, the public. But it is a blame out of which the Morning Post is resolved to struggle, and for that end plans are now settling with a number of literary gentlemen, and particularly with one whose name would do our paper the highest honor were we at liberty to announce it. The period is not far distant when the Morning Bell will be as necessarily sought after, not only for the purpose of learning the fashionable intelligence and the best authenticated accounts of foreign and domestic occurrences which it now possesses, but that the lovers of literature and taste may thoroughly peruse it and store it up for future information and many a future reading." Those were vain yet prophetic words. The "number of literary gentlemen" and the one particularly honorable among them were not procured by Tattersall, the proprietor at that time, who knew more about horses and sport than about the "elegancies of literature," and Dr. Wolcott, as Peter Pindar, continued to be the chief writer on the Post, which, besides his clever verses, gave much information about affairs of the prize ring and kindred amusements. At length, in July, 1792, Tattersall had to pay £4,000 damages for an especially gross libel on Lady Elizabeth Lambert, and, though he was not ruined, the Post suffered considerably. It derived a large revenue from advertisements of carriages and horses, but in 1795 its average daily circulation was only 350, and Tattersall was glad to sell it to Daniel Stuart, and some friends from whom Stuart soon afterward bought their shares, for £500, that price including the house in Catherine street, Strand, and all the plant, as well as the copyright.—Gentleman's Magazine.

Toddy and Toddy-Drawers.

The drink called "toddy" is the juice extracted from the cocoanut palm, and is collected in earthenware pots called "chatties," into which the sap runs during the night from an incision made in the spathe. In the morning the "toddy-drawer," connecting his two feet by a piece of rope, swarms up the smooth trunk of a tree with which he intends commencing operations, and, having reached the lofty summit, he empties the contents of the chatty into a vessel attached to his waist. In order to save himself the fatigue of descending each tree and ascending the next in succession he passes from one to another by means of two ropes, one of which his bare feet rest, while with his hands he holds on to the other.

These ropes, in course of time, become untrustworthy from exposure to weather and have to be occasionally changed. But too often the unfortunate rope-walker, grown careless by long immunity from accident, neglects to renew his perilous bridge and the snapping of either rope causes his death. Were the lower rope to break there might be still hope of clinging to the other and so working his way along; but, should the upper one break, obviously there is little chance of his saving himself, even though the other remained sound. From this comes the proverb: "If the supporting-rope breaks one's mainstay is gone."—All the Year Round.

No man can be provident of his time who is not prudent in the choice of his company.—Jeremy Taylor.

Buying Slaves in Morocco.

We often visited the slave market, which is, I think, the most interesting sight in Morocco, writes a correspondent. We had all of us read the fearful accounts which the press of Tangier is so fond of repeating, of the terrible doings of slavery in Morocco, and I must confess were most pleasantly surprised. We went very often to the market, but never saw such sights as children separated from their parents, though we saw both sold together in the "lot." Nor did we see many other things of which we have read; in fact, the slaves were a wonderfully contented, even cheerful, expression while the sale was proceeding. We were much amused at watching one young lady—who, by the way, was rather handsome—alter her expression from sulkiness when an old Moor was looking at her to cheerfulness when a handsome young man began his inspection. So there is coyness even in the wild deserts from which these slaves come. In fact, far from being a painful sight—for by the accounts we have of those who have seen it before they all left "with our eyes full of tears"—we found it rather amusing than otherwise, and I do not know that we are more hard-hearted than the general-ity of mankind. This I will say, that I would far rather be a slave in Morocco than a peasant. From what, too, I saw of slaves out of the market they appear not to have such a bad time of it, and in many houses enjoy more liberty than paid servants. Of course, there is truth in many of the fearful stories we hear of ill-treatment, but, again, I know an old Moor on whose death all the property goes by will to his slaves. It is not slavery that is so bad; it is the kidnapping that slavery necessitates and the terrible long journey over the scorching desert; but, of course, to put down this kidnapping he must aim at slavery direct. The market is mostly supplied from the Soudan—not the "Soudan" as we call Nubia, but the Soudan that lies south of the Sahara and east of Senegambia, an enormous district of sand—but it is not at all an uncommon sight to see white slaves in the market—Moors and Arabs. The prices average about £3 to £5 a head for all varieties, though we saw one elderly female knocked down for about 22 shillings, much to her own disgust.—London News.

American Dentists.

There are no people like the Americans for having their mouths kept in order. No one else is willing to pay what our people do for their work, consequently they don't get such good work done.

I met an English surgeon yesterday who said: "I will admit that there is one thing that you excel us in, and that is dentistry. Our people have their teeth extracted when they pain them, but they haven't the patience to get them stopped with gold, as you do it over here, nor will they submit to the enormous expense necessary to gold stopping. Why, the housemaids in America have enough gold in their mouths to astonish a duchess."

A lady from the United States traveling in England had occasion to visit a dental office.

As soon as the man looked in her mouth he said: "You come from America."

"How do you know?" asked the lady.

"Why, no one else has gold in their teeth like this."

Needing some work done, she was amazed to find that the dentist lacked some of the most necessary instruments for a simple gold filling.

Some English ladies "stop" their own teeth with a sort of cement furnished by the druggist. Britishers who have once had work done here will travel 300 miles to reach an American dentist, and so great has our fame in that line become that young men come over to Philadelphia and Ann Arbor and Cincinnati to learn the art, and going back, charge immensely and get a handsome practice.

There is in Paris a doctor from a small town in Indiana who has amassed a great fortune by dentistry, and whose appointments date four or five months in advance. He can't speak a word of French, and transacts all his business through an interpreter. In dentistry the French show some lack of their usual spirit of premiership, though they do better dental work than any other foreign people.—San Francisco Post.

SUGAR is put into cement to increase its strength.

Raising the Wind.

Moorish traders in camels seem to be no more honest than Yankee traders in horses have the reputation of being. A writer describes one of their tricks, which, according to his account only an expert is likely to detect. Such an ingenious method of "raising the wind" might put even the shrewdest American to blush. The story was told to the author by a Frenchman, who had traveled for some time in Algiers.

On one occasion, while in an Arab village, he declared his intention of buying a young camel. No sooner had his desire become known than at least twenty camels were brought for his inspection.

They were all fine looking animals, in excellent condition apparently. In fact, the only fault our Frenchman could perceive was that they were too fat. After a proper amount of deliberation and bargaining, he selected the one which appeared to be leanest, and paid the price agreed upon.

The next morning when he went to look at his fat camel, he found a living skeleton, on whose almost fleshless bones the skin hung in large folds, and whose best development was about the joints.

The method by which camels are suddenly "fattened" for the market is thus described:

An incision about an inch in length, is made in each ear, between the skin and flesh. Into this a small tube is fitted and secured by a silken cord. There it remains, hidden from the observation of all but the initiated and ready for use at any moment.

When a merchant who is not acquainted with the blowing-up trick comes to buy a camel the dealer takes two tubes, each a yard long, and inserting one end of each in the small tubes just described through the other ends, two Arabs blow with all their might until the animal has attained the requisite degree of plumpness. The inflating tubes are then withdrawn, and the air is prevented from escaping by means of a cork smeared with pitch.

The poor camel now becomes apparently lively and frisky, trying to throw itself upon the ground, or to press against a wall or tree, or whatever object may be at hand, so as to get rid of the wind. It is generally too well watched by the rascally Arab to succeed in accomplishing its purpose.

Sometimes, however, it manages to elude his vigilance; and then if the cork is not very securely fastened the wind escapes with a whistle like that of a steam engine, and the fine looking beast suddenly collapses into the miserable object it really is.—Among the Arabs.

A Good Investment

Is that which yields large returns from a small outlay. Reader, the way is clear! No speculation, no chance, big returns! If you are like most of mankind you have somewhere a weakness—don't feel at all times just as you'd like to—headache to-day, backache to-morrow, down sick next week—all because your blood is out of order. A small outlay and what large returns! You invest in Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and soon pure, fresh blood courses through your veins, and you are another being!

Weight of Burdett Coutts' Inheritance.

The late Duchess of St. Albans left Miss Burdett Coutts the regal sum of £1,800,000 or some $9,000,000. The weight of this prodigious sum in gold, reckoning sixty sovereigns to the pound, is thirteen tons, seven cwt., three qrs., twelve lbs., and would require 107 men to carry it, supposing that each of them carried the solid weight of 298 pounds. This large sum may also be partially guessed by considering that counting at the rate of sixty sovereigns a minute for eight hours a day and six days in the week, it would take ten weeks, two days and four hours to accomplish the task. In sovereigns, by the most exact computation, each measuring in diameter seven-twentieths of an inch, and placed to touch each other, it would reach 24 miles and 250 yards; and in crown pieces, to 113 miles 280 yards.

A Great Legacy

To bequeath to your children, is a strong, clean, pure constitution—better than wealth, because it will never prove a curse. You cannot give what you do not possess, but mothers will find in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription a wonderful help—correcting all weaknesses, bringing their systems into perfect condition, so that their children, untainted, shall rise up to call them blessed!

There is not a druggist in all the land But always keeps a stock on hand.

AS FOR the ballet-girl, whatever enchantment there may be in viewing her is lent by distance.—London Truth.

To Our Readers.

Next week we shall issue a double number, containing a beautiful illustrated Christmas supplement, filled with interesting reading matter. Extra copies can be obtained at three cents each. Send a copy to your friends.

Uncle Phillip Houck is very low with heart trouble.

The thing that a woman knows best is how some other woman's dress looks.

The Disciple Sunday school will give a Christmas Song Service on Sunday evening, Dec. 25, 1887.

Mrs. Nelson Tustison was called to Michigan this week on account of the serious illness of her sister, Mrs. Nichols.

Jonathan Bair, the mail carrier from the north, who has been very sick, has so far recovered as to be able to handle the mail bags again.

F. W. Draggo is conducting quite a successful writing school in this place. He teaches some parts of penmanship by the use of the violin.

It is rumored that several weddings will occur in this neighborhood during the holidays. We might mention a few names but it is better not.

There will be two oyster suppers in this place on Christmas eve. That's another evidence that St. Joe is growing. Only a few years ago it was a hard matter get out people enough to properly support one, but now there is no doubt but what both will receive a liberal patronage.

Last Saturday night, just as we were about to retire, we heard some discordant strains of horrible music just beneath our bed-room window. We listened, and found that we were being treated to a tin horn serenade, by some of our near and dear friends, who don't live more than forty blocks away. Just as the boys were soaring up on one of their high pitches, Barney's big watch dog came barking around the corner, and you ought to have seen those musicians "git." It was fun for us and the pup, but a little hard on the boys.

Wid Patterson can make pills and talk life insurance in pretty good shape, but when it comes to putting out a washing he is no good. His wife has been at Fort Wayne for some time, and he was afraid that he would run short of clean clothes, so he got out the washing paraphernalia and went at it last Monday morning bright and early. And such a washing! it would have done our lady readers good to have seen it. When he came to put them up, he didn't know which end of some of the garments to hang up first. Finally, he got them on the line, and the gentle breezes fanned them until they were dry, and in the evening twilight Bro. Patterson took them in.

OUR CORRESPONDENTS.

SPENCERVILLE.

Becks Erick was at Fort Wayne Tuesday.

John Hobaugh went to Fort Wayne last week to sell his furs.

Superintendent Merica visited the schools this week.

Mr. Houck is entertaining his nephew, Mr. Walter, this week.

The Methodist Sunday school will have a concert and tree on Christmas eve.

The saw mill belonging to Smith, Steward & Co. has been re-roofed this week.

The young people will meet next Tuesday evening to organize a literary society.

A large crowd attended the spelling school Tuesday evening. Miss Etta Boger spelled the school down.

Some of the Methodist people went to Leo, Wednesday, to visit Rev. Curry and presented him with a donation.

Harvy Kimes had the misfortune to have his barn burned down last Friday evening. The entire contents excepting two horses were destroyed.

The saloon closed Wednesday. William Rhodes was paid the sum of $25.00 agreeing never to open his saloon, or sell intoxicating liquors again at this place.

CONCORD.

Hefty's baby has been on the sick list for several days.

Grandma Baker entertained a few friends last Tuesday.

Lydia Wyatt has been sick for a few days past, but is now some better.

Quite a number of St. Joeites attended the Miller party last Wednesday evening.

Bill Baker is the man that flags the trains at the corners, but they pay no attention, but go right on.

Dora Miller gave a social party for her many friends last Wednesday evening. About ninety were present.

Ben Moffitt, of Jackson township, was in the neighborhood one day last week, making brief calls on his relatives.

Jake Baker thought he saw a coon up in a tree near his house last Friday evening, and shot it, and, Oh! horrors, he had killed his mother's cat.

Froat Melton has been quite unwell for several days, so much so that he is not able to work on the road. He is threatened with an attack of lung fever.

Grandma Baker received word last Saturday, that her daughter, Mrs. Nichols, now living near Lansing, is very sick and not expected to recover. Her sister, Mrs. Sue Tustison is with her at present and expects to remain for some time.

Sometime in November, Noah Morr and his cousin Joe Link, went to Michigan. Noah is very much taken up with the country, and writes back that his cousin shot six deer, and himself, shot two. Joe expects to make Michigan his future home.

The prevailing style now is, when you are invited out to dine, not to take any bread, and when the tea is passed to you, accept it, and set it down by your plate, but do not drink any. Also, (our preacher says,) to eat with your fork in the left hand.

Fred Jenkins met with an accident at the party last Wednesday evening. As he was about starting home, some one with a team, backed into his sulky and smashed one of the wheels, or, as one of the girls said, "turned the wheel inside out." Fred said he did not care as much for the break, as he did the walking home in the mud.

AN OPEN LETTER.

HICKSVILLE, OHIO,

Dec. 12th, 1887.

DEAR SIR: We wish to impress upon your mind a few facts, which we hope you will kindly consider, and which we are sure you will profit thereby. Since the 15th of June we have been steadily gaining a large patronage and to do this we have done every thing in our power to put out the best flour that could be made, and we may firmly say that we have the mill now in the best condition of any Full Roller Mill in north-western Ohio, and are prepared to meet all orders that are entrusted to us. Our Flour is a fast seller with all our home merchants as well as every merchant within the range of 20 miles, and all are perfectly satisfied in every respect. Our large increase in the milling business has compelled us to run on night time to fill our orders, which is an indication of how our work is appreciated. Hoping you will give us a trial, and thanking our old patrons for their patronage heretofore, we remain, Yours Respectfully, Daniels, Wilson & Kagey.

WORTH KNOWING.

Mr. W. H. Morgan, merchant, Lake City, Fla., was taken with a severe cold, attended with a distressing cough and running into consumption in its first stages. He tried many so-called popular cough remedies and steadily grew worse. Was reduced in flesh, had difficulty in breathing and was unable to sleep. Finally tried Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption and found immediate relief, and after using about a half dozen bottles found himself well and has no return of the disease. No other remedy can show so grand a record of cures, as Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. Guaranteed to do just what is claimed for it.—Trial bottles free at W. C. Patterson's Drug Store.

LOCALS.

You will soon have to write it 1888.

Half fare on the B. & O. during the holidays.

Rev. Shaffer of Maysville was in town yesterday.

We have added several new subscribers to our list this week.

Nearly all the railroads are giving half fare rates during the holidays.

C. F. Mosier of the Bristol Banner, made this office a pleasant call on Thursday.

Some correspondence from Newville is crowded out this week for want of space.

Next year is leap year, and the girls and old maids can make all the mashes they want to.

Rich Culbertson and Frank White have been at Buffalo this week with two car load of sheep.

The ladies of the Methodist church will give an oyster supper in this place on Christmas eve.

Hogs are bringing as high as five cents per pound. What's the matter with that being a good price, when you can buy calico for three cents per yard.

Mrs. Zahner, who lives three miles south of this place, has the finest collections of plants and flowers in this part of the county. She has a lemon tree that has fruit on nearly ripe.

The boys at this place are doing a land office business in gathering coal along the railroad, and selling it. Ten cents a bushel is the price asked, but sometimes the boys jaw down a cent or two.

Hicksville has another severe attack of gas fever.

Joe Kuisley is laid up with a lame eye, caused by inflammation.

Hugh Nelson made a flying visit to this place on Friday of last week.

Another Institute will be held at this place in three weeks from next Saturday.

W. I. McKee, agent at this place, spent last Sunday at his home in Holgate Ohio.

Three car loads of hogs and one of sheep were shipped from this place last Saturday.

The railroad time table is left out this week for want of space. The trains will run just the same.

Dr. Rudolph and G. M. Reinhoel of Fairfield Center, were the guests of Al Weirick over last Sunday.

Just received, at Bishop's Lumber Yard, 100,000 Good Cedar Shingles.
Examine them before you do any roofing.

Lafayette Doane of Waaseon, O., has been visiting Wm. Draper for the past week. He was on his way to Minnesota.

The G. A. R. Post of this place will meet at their hall to-morrow evening, at which time the election of officers will take place.

The Teachers Reading Circle in this township is in a flourishing condition, and can not help but be of great benefit to the members.

The Methodist people bought of Brown & Culbertson, of Auburn, this week, a fine church organ; something they were badly in need of.

Mrs. W. C. Patterson and daughter, Bessie, have been visiting her sister at Fort Wayne for the past week.
Williard has been keeping "batch," and he thinks it is a lonesome way to live.

P. Bishop of Spencerville, issued a very neat little paper last week called the News. It was sort of a holiday advertisement, and yet contained a good deal of interesting local matter.

Ben Harper, who has been staying at Mack Leighty's for some time, and who is commonly known as "Ben," says he is a hoosier-prohibition-democrat. Rather a strange combination of politics.

Case & Olds have no space for an advertisement in this issue, but they have the Holiday Goods just the same, and cordially invite the readers of the News to call and see them before making their purchases.

Willie Fales, in trying to climb over a freight train that was standing on the track at this place one day last week, fell and hurt himself quite seriously. He will be able to do the same thing over again in a few days.

One morning last week some of our citizens were awakened at rather an early hour, by a loud report, which sounded like the bursting of a boiler or something of that kind.
It was found upon inquiry, that a cylinder head in an engine standing on the side track had blowed out.

There seems to be some mystery in regard to the burning of Harve
Kimes' barn last Friday evening.
Several persons in the neighborhood heard a loud report just before the blaze was discovered, which seems difficult to account for; but is thought to have been caused by the explosion of some combustible material.
This is the third barn that has been burned in that neighborhood, in the last few years, and it looks a little as if some one had a hand in it.

THE TOWNSHIP INSTITUTE.

The Institute was called to order by County Superintendent Merica.
The teachers of the township were all present except four. First lesson. Numbers: the first and second year's work. The Superintendent showed the necessity of being thorough in addition and multiplication; showing very clearly that thorough work at first was by far the shortest and easiest method. He also showed the necessity of teaching what the pupils must use in practical life, and not for class recitation only. Second lesson. Reading:
first and second year's work. Illustrating by class, how to have the pupils read natural and avoid the "school boy drawl," also the importance of having them thoroughly acquainted with every word before attempting to read. He instructed the teachers not to pronounce words for pupils in reading; the teacher is to make the pupils familiar with the difficult words in the lesson, when it is given out, and not to pronounce a word in the reading lesson. After recess the Reading Circle work was taken up, and the subject of Psychology was discussed. The teachers formed into a class, with the Superintendent as teacher, who showed the importance of the study of Psychology, whether we wish to follow teaching or not. This lesson, with the Supt. as teacher, and Mr. John Bills to suggest leading thoughts (both having had experience in mind study and thinking,) proved to be one of the very best lessons ever given to the teachers of Concord township, and it was fully appreciated by all present. This lesson was continued after the noon intermission. The teachers of Concord township have the sincere thanks of the trustee, for the interest shown in the Reading Circle, every teacher in the township having joined the work.
The trustee is also thankful for the interest taken in the Institute, it being a very disagreeable day, but nearly all were present.

EVENTS OF A WEEK.

THE OLD WORLD.

—A cable dispatch from Paris says: "M. Grevy on Sunday formally informed M. Rouvier of his resolution to resign the Presidency, and said that he would send a message to the Senate and Chamber of Deputies on next Thursday. M. Rouvier proceeded at once to the residence of M. Floquet to announce the resignation of the President."

—Every move made by Russia is closely scrutinized by the Germans, and some excitement has been created at Berlin by a report that the Czar is concentrating a military force along the Austrian frontier.

—The congress of the Senators and Deputies at Versailles, France, elected M. Sadi-Carnot to succeed President Grevy. The successful candidate is a Republican who has been prominent in politics ever since the downfall of Louis Napoleon, but his influence in his party has been far inferior to that of his principal rivals for Republican support in the contest for the Presidency. A Paris cablegram says:

The ministry have formally tendered their resignations, and President Sadi-Carnot has requested them to remain in office for the present for the dispatch of public business. The President stated that it was his intention, after the new ministry was formed, to at once close the present session of parliament until after the coming senatorial elections. Probably the result of the election is the best thing that could have happened for France. M. Sadi-Carnot is the second best known economical writer in France, and has had practical public experience far superior to M. Leroy Beaulieu, the most famous economical writer. He is under 50; a Republican without being radical or visionary. He is a distinguished engineer, having headed his class at the Ecole Polytechnique, instead of being a lawyer, which in itself is a great thing; he is rich, and lives like a gentleman. He is not religious, but his wife is a Catholic. He has a 23-year-old son in the army. He is a free-trader. The newspapers of Paris generally approve the election of M. Sadi-Carnot and consider it an augury of peace. The telegrams from the provinces, without exception, testify to the satisfaction felt at the result of the election. The news created an excellent impression at the principal European capitals.

—Mr. Pyne, the member of Parliament who is defending himself from the police in Lisburn castle, says a Dublin dispatch, has been joined by Mr. Gilhooly, the member from Cork, who is also a fugitive from justice.

—Lord Mayor Sullivan, who has been serving his sentence in Dublin, has been removed to the jail at Tullamore to prevent his holding daily levees, as has been his custom since his imprisonment.

POLITICAL POINTS.

—Third Assistant Postmaster General Harris holds that the practice of newspaper publishers in sending papers directly to the trains is not a sufficient compliance with the law. He will issue an order that such papers must be sent to the local postoffice.

—The prohibition leaders in St. Louis are preparing a petition to have the question of license or no license submitted to the voters under the Wood local-option law.

—The United States Supreme Court has rendered a decision sustaining the State in the Kansas prohibition case. The effect of this opinion is to declare valid the prohibition laws of the State of Kansas, and is of course a decided victory for the prohibitionists. The decision is very important, and likely to be far-reaching in its consequences. The judgment of the court was pronounced in a long and elaborate opinion by Mr. Justice Harlan:

The Justice said it had been held repeatedly that the right of a State to regulate the sale of liquor did not invade the constitutional rights of the citizen. It was contended, however, he said, that no State Legislature had a right to prohibit any person from manufacturing liquor for his own use or for export, for the reason that it was an invasion of the personal liberty inherent in citizens. It must be observed, however, he said, that the right to manufacture drink for one's own use was subject to the restriction that it should not injuriously affect the public. The right to determine what was injurious had to exist somewhere, and the right of determining what measures were necessary for the preservation of the public morals, health and safety had heretofore been vested in the States by the constitutional right given them under the police power to regulate their own internal concerns. While this police power could not be a used and must only be exercised for objects of real merit, this court would certainly not say that the liquor traffic was not one which the State could lawfully prohibit, because it was well known that the abuse of intoxicants was productive of pauperism and crime. The next ground of content on, the Justice said, was, that as the breweries had been erected prior to the passage of the prohibition law, and, as they were of little use except for breweries, their property was taken without due process of law in violation of the Constitution. But all property under our form of government, he held, was subject to the obligation that it should not be used so as to injuriously affect the rights of the community, and thereby become a nuisance. The State of Kansas had a right to prohibit the liquor traffic. It did not thereby take away the property of brewers. It simply abated a nuisance. The property was not taken away from its owners; they were only prohibited from using it for a specific purpose, which the Legislature declared to be injurious to the community.

Justice Field concurred in the opinion so far as it related to the two cases in which the State of Kansas was defendant.

He agreed, he said, to so much of the opinion as sustains the validity of the act of Kansas prohibiting the sale of intoxicants which are manufactured in the State after the passage of the act. He was not prepared, however, to say that the prohibition of the manufacture of such liquors, if intended for exportation, can be sustained, nor that the State can forbid the sale under proper regulations for the protection of the health and morals of the people of any article which Congress may authorize to be imported. He was not ready to admit that New York or any other State can thus defeat an act of Congress. Neither could he concur in the validity of the thirteenth section of the prohibition act of Kansas, because he believed it authorized the destruction of property without due process of law. He could not see upon what principle the Legislature, after closing the brewery, can order the destruction of liquor, which it admits may be valuable for medicinal or mechanical purposes; nor could he see why the protection of the morals of the State required the destruction of bottles and other utensils after the liquor had been emptied from them.

—The case of the imprisoned officials of Virginia has been decided by the United States Supreme Court in their favor, the State being sustained at all points. The court declares, in substance, that a State cannot be sued or coerced in the Federal courts, whether the action be brought against it by name or against its officials in their official capacity. Judge Harlan's was the only dissenting opinion.

—Chicago is to have the next republican Convention, the National Committee having so decided at its meeting held in Washington to determine the question. Three ballots were necessary. The first vote was viva voce, and Chicago led, with Omaha a close second. The first formal ballot placed Chicago well to the front, the principal strength of the opposition going to Cincinnati and Minneapolis. The final vote stood: Chicago 25, Cincinnati 13, Minneapolis 8, Omaha 1. Says a Washington special:

The rival smaller Western cities were very persistent, very demonstrative, very anxious and little disposed to compromise; and they had for advocates some of the most experienced workers and most influential men in the party. They were earnest and determined; and they could make a most excellent showing for their respective cities. Minneapolis was here like an army with banners. The long white silk badges of the delegation were seen everywhere, and the delegates would listen to no suggestions of possible defeat. They had in their favor a great many things, and to those who were insisting upon the choice of Cincinnati or St. Louis, the suggestion that the climate of Minnesota is delicious at that season of the year came to the many who have not forgotten the discomforts which have attended political conventions in Cincinnati and St. Louis. The suggestion of Minneapolis to them was like a cool breeze from the north to those who have suffered from the disease. Besides, Minneapolis offered an attraction in the form of specially reduced rates to the Yellowstone Park to all who would attend the convention. Omaha made a strong bid, and was rewarded, to the surprise, probably, of the delegates from that city, with the largest vote next to Chicago on the first ballot.

DEPARTMENT REPORTS.

—The annual report of Attorney General Garland gives a full account of the business of the Department of Justice during the last fiscal year, together with statistics of crime against the United States:

The number of ordinary suits now pending in the Court of Claims is 1,110, involving the sum of $13,250,000. The number of cases filed under the Homestead act is 1,745, involving about $60,000,000. The petitions filed in French spoliation cases number 6,334, representing 2,483 vessels and about $30,000,000. The amount reported in favor of claimants in eighty-one of these cases passed upon is about $13,000, varying from $3 to $43,314. During the last fiscal year 1,777 civil suits were terminated. In 922 of these judgments were for the United States, in 104 for the defendants, 20 were appealed from the District to the Circuit Court, and 14 from the Circuit Court to the Supreme Court. There were pending July 1, 4,954 civil suits, in which the United States was a party. During the year there were 12,807 criminal prosecutions, mostly for violations of customs and internal revenue laws. The Attorney General calls attention to the suggestions and recommendations made by him in his last annual report in regard to matters calling for remedial legislation, and again urges the necessity of immediate action thereon. These subjects are as follows: Fees of Marshals in the Territories, pay of Deputy Marshals, revision of the fee bill, substitution of local for calendar year, protection to civil officers and witnesses, fees of witnesses and jurors, criminal procedure, perjury, and laws and juries in the District of Columbia.

—Contrary to usual custom, the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury was not sent to Congress this year until the day after the President's message had been read. It is a very lengthy paper, and we have space for only a brief synopsis. The report shows that the receipts of the Government for the last fiscal year were $371,403,277, and the expenditures $315,835,428. There was an increase in the receipts of $34,923,570 over those of the preceding year, and the expenditures were increased by $25,449,441. The revenues for the present year are estimated at $383,000,000, and the expenditures at $316,817,785. The Secretary advises a reduction of the customs duties on the lines suggested in the President's message. The Secretary gives three ways in which the receipts and expenditures of the Government may be made about equal:

1. The purchase of the interest-bearing debt of the Government. 2. Larger expenditures by Government for other purposes than the purchase of bonds, so that they shall each year equal the taxation of that year. 3. Reduction of the revenue from taxation to the amount actually required to meet necessary expenses. I cannot believe that Congress will adopt the second expedient, viz.: The enlargement of Government expenses simply to expend money raised by taxation when the public would do so not otherwise call for the expenditure.

As to the third plan, Mr. Fairchild says:

Reduction of the revenue from taxation is the only remedy for the evils which threaten the country. This may be accomplished in various ways. One is to reduce or abolish internal-revenue taxation. In favor of this is the fact that in a small part of the Southern States the internal tax on liquors and tobacco is thought to be oppressive and is odious to the people of those regions, and the further fact that by its reduction the expenses of its collection might be somewhat reduced. The chief cause for the prejudice against this tax seems to be that as there was no such tax before the war for the Union it is looked upon as a reminder of the measures adopted to raise money to carry on the war, and which ought not to be continued in time of peace. Taxation there must be. The choice is between kinds of taxation; each man can decide for himself, if he will examine the subject free from prejudice, which is the least burdensome for him, for his family, and for his neighbors, and which is in the end better for his whole country. That internal taxation of spirits and tobacco began during the war is not a reason why it should be done away with now, if it be in itself wise. To the fact that the rates of customs taxation were raised during the same war far higher than ever before in our history, and have been continued until now, ought not to determine the manner of their treatment, this should rather depend upon what is just and expedient at the present time. Neither passion, prejudice, nor sentimentality should have place in the consideration of questions of taxation. As to the expense of collecting the internal revenue, I suggest that an amalgamation of the customs and internal revenue systems is entirely feasible, and that thereby a large number of offices might be abolished, and that the expense of the whole system might be made not to exceed that of an efficient enforcement of the customs laws. But it is not well either to abolish or reduce internal-revenue taxation. It is a tax upon whisky, beer, and tobacco, things which are in very small measure necessary to the health or happiness of mankind. If they are necessary to an unfortunate man, they are far less necessary even to him than are a thousand other articles which the Government taxes. This tax is the least burdensome, the least unjust of all the taxes which the Government lays or can lay upon the people; it should not be abolished, nor should it be reduced if, with due regard to the existing conditions of labor and capital, sufficient reduction can be made in the taxation of necessary articles which are in the daily use of all the people.

The report shows that the circulation of the standard silver dollar is growing in popularity, having increased $10,044,955 during the past year.

—From the annual report of Secretary of War Endicott, which is a very lengthy document, we glean the following points:

The expenditures of the department for the last fiscal year amounted to $11,890,153, while the estimates for the next fiscal year will aggregate $13,338,310. An increase is demanded on account of public works, including river and harbor improvements, and for the military establishment and the army and military academy. The Secretary strongly approves of the recommendation contained in General Bristolia's report touching the extension of all possible aid by the General Government to the national guard of the different States, and suggesting a system of national encampment for State militia at the entire expense of the National Government. Attention is called to the fact that the Pacific coast is destitute of fortifications, guns and armament of every description, while San Francisco is without a single gun which can be fired with safety with the present charges of powder and modern projectiles. Favorable endorsement is also given to the Lieutenant General's recommendation that the present strength of the navy be increased by 5,000 men; and particular attention is called to the importance of an increase of the artillery. In concluding his report the Secretary says: "The result of the examinations for promotion under the civil-service regulations which were applied to the war department in May were satisfactory. The total number of clerks examined was 1,014, of whom 903, or 89 per cent., passed, and of this number 333, or 33 per cent., obtained an average above 90 per cent.; fifty-one, or 5 per cent., failed to pass, their average being less than 75 per cent."

—From Secretary Whitney's annual report we glean that—

Appropriations for the Navy Department for the last fiscal year amounted to $13,180,000, and the balance available at the end of that period was $281,800, which had been reduced by Dec. 1 to $164,500. The appropriations for the current fiscal year amount to $21,150,000, and the estimates for the year ending June 30, 1891, to $23,420,000. All the unarmored vessels authorized by Congress are completed or in course of construction. They and the contract cost of their hulls and machinery are: The dispatch vessel Dolphin, $315,000; the protected cruiser Boston, $619,000; the protected cruiser Atlanta, $617,000; the protected cruiser Chicago, $689,000; the protected cruiser Charleston, $1,017,000; the protected cruiser Baltimore, $1,323,000; gunboat No. 1 (cruiser), $555,000; gunboat No. 2 (cruiser), $247,000; the protected cruiser Newark, $1,248,000; protected cruiser No. 4, $1,330,000; protected cruiser No. 5, $1,445,000; gunboat No. 3 (cruiser), $400,000; gunboat No. 4 (cruiser), $400,000; dynamite cruiser (including dynamite guns, etc.), $350,000; first-class torpedo boat, $27,730. Of the two armored vessels authorized by Congress one is now being built by William John in England. The completion of the double-turreted monitors will be delayed until the Bethlehem plant can furnish the armor. Of coast and harbor defense, for which Congress appropriated $2,000,000, the Secretary says little has been done. The Secretary does not believe in repairing the single-turreted monitors and using them for coast defense. "An examination of their characteristics," he says, "shows that outside of the ships in our own navy no antagonist could probably stand for a moment. They were good vessels for their time, but are entirely obsolete," and he adds: "It would be little less than murder to send men in these at the present time to encounter any recently built ironclad. I appreciate fully that it is only as a temporary expedient that it is suggested, and with the thought that in the absence of anything else, these might be better than nothing. This has been the theory upon which over $30,000,000, and probably $75,000,000, has been spent since the close of the war. It is time to stop it and be content only with the best. If every dollar is made to count upon something of real value, waste will stop, and not before."

A Good Story From China.

The ship was still three days from Hong Kong, the first place at which the prisoner could be handed over to the proper authorities. To avoid a certain disturbance among the Chinamen forward the quarter-deck deliberations resulted in an announcement fore and aft the ship that the execution, with all due form and ceremony as practiced under the English flag, would take place at noon the next day, and the sentence was communicated impressively to the prisoner through an interpreter in presence of all his countrymen, who demonstrated most cordial approval.

As the hour approached next day preparations went forward solemnly round the forebath. The butcher's block was laid amidships, the carpenter's broad ax by its side, stages for spectators rigged, the first-class passengers, numbering about a hundred, assembled on the bridges, boats, and houses near, with all the ship's people. The fore rigging and all the fore part of the deck swarmed with Chinamen eager for vengeance. At noon the ship's bell began to toll. Shortly after the prisoner was led out between two quartermasters; when near the block he was made to stand while the purser, in a surplice, read out the first verse of "The Wearing of the Green," which was then sung by 200 voices, yet, though knowing his time had come, the culprit showed no remorse or repentance. Our victim's countenance remained impassive and inscrutable as though molded in putty. The last service over, three quartermasters flung down the Chinaman on his face, his head on the center of the broad butcher's block. One man seized his cue while two held his feet, pulling with all their strength against one another. The poor wretch's neck was stretched till it went "crick." The chief officer raised the ax, flourished it round and round his head, threatening to bring it down time after time, until suspense had worked onlookers up to the pitch of agony. Suddenly down swept the broad blade, a rasp and thud; to the opposite side of the deck flew the man who had been extending the body. The ax had severed the Chinaman's tail an inch from his head. A prolonged, disgusted exclamation of "Hi-i-i!" went up from the crowd forward, expressing supreme contempt for the skill of our executioner and our national manner of performing, which even the prisoner seemed to share, for the sneer with which he regained his feet was the first indication of interest he had displayed. In the confusion following the prisoner was led back to confinement. Not much difficulty was experienced in convincing the others that, by English law, two attempts to execute the same man could not be made on the same day.

So convinced of the bona fide character of the exhibition had they been that they gave no more trouble, and ultimately—taking into consideration that the loss of the tail is so much more calamitous than the loss of the head—they consented to the man being given over to the law in Hong Kong, where he was dealt with in a way less preferable than death to him, being compelled to live a convict without a tail. —J. Keane's "Mere Shavings."

Savagery of Boyhood.

Those persons who are not in a position to come in contact with the children of to-day need only to recall to memory the scenes of their childhood in order to find repeated episodes in which a suffering kitten or puppy was the central and unpitied figure. The callousness of the children of one's own circle will be made evident after a few minutes spent in such clarifying (though, to sensitive people, rather annoying) introspection, and what is true of one circle in this regard is approximately true of all. My own conviction is that healthy boys under 15, feel very little compassion for any suffering but that of their near relatives, their close friends, and occasionally their pet animals. Not only do they evince little compassion, but they often show more than an entire apathy, even an actual pleasure, at the sight of pain inflicted upon animals, and some, with whom we need not now concern ourselves, take a delight that to grown people seems almost fiendish in tormenting their weaker play-fellows. —Popular Science Monthly.

THE UBIQUITOUS JEW.

His Adaptability to All Climates and Conditions.

[The Jewish World.]

It has been frequently remarked that the Jewish race has a wonderful power of adaptation to all climates. Jews are found in all parts of the globe, and seem to possess a remarkable facility for acclimatization, even under the most unfavorable circumstances. Mesopotamia is considered the mother country of the Abrahamic family, as well as the cradle of the human race. Some years ago a small colony of Jews were found in the ancient city of Sennar, in the south of Mesopotamia, and in the vicinity of ancient Babylon. Of the seventy families composing the colony, one claimed to be descended from King Joachim, the rest from the house of Levi. A colony of Jews appear to have settled in China about the beginning of the third century of the Christian era, under the dynasty of Han. In 1704 Father Gonzani, a Roman Catholic missionary, found seven Jewish families near Pekin.

In 1686 a Portuguese Jew of Amsterdam, named De Pavia, discovered a sect of Jews in Cochin China. According to a tradition preserved among them, they were descended from a tribe of Jews who had quitted Palestine on the destruction of the second temple. From their long residence in Cochin they had become completely bronzed. These are not the same as the Malabar Jews. The Jewish traveler Benjamin, sometimes called Benjamin II., discovered a colony of Jews, evidently of Persian origin, in Hindostan. They were known as "Babylonian Jews," on account of their having migrated from Babylonia. They observed the essential rites of Judaism, and strictly avoided intermarriage with other sects. In the beginning of the seventh century a Jewish colony settled in Cayenne, in the West Indies, one of the most inhospitable climates in South America.

Cayenne was subsequently conquered by the French, who made it a penal settlement, and the Jewish colony was forced to retire to Surinam. Notwithstanding frequent persecutions Jews are still found in Persia, more especially to the south of the Caspian Sea, where the soil is very fertile but the climate very unhealthy. The principal city is Balprosh, where about 150 families reside in almost complete isolation. They trade with their brethren in Great Tartary, and are engaged in the wool and silk trade or in the sale of citrons. They, too, trace their origin from the Babylonian captivity, for, according to a tradition still possessed among them, their ancestors settled in Persia in the time of Nebuchadnezzar, and did not respond to the appeal of Ezra to return to Palestine. Their mode of life resembles that of the Persians in general. They hold the beard in high esteem, and wear long, flowing robes. They have several synagogues, and obtain scrolls of the law from Bagdad. The celebrated African traveler, Mungo Park, found a colony of Jewish families in the heart of Africa, about eight hundred miles from the coast. It is no doubt this peculiarity of the Jewish race which induced a French writer on "Medical Geography" to express the opinion that: "It is questionable whether the crossing of human varieties confers on the issue constant advantages in relation to the species; for the Jewish race seems in a wonderful manner capable of adapting itself to every change of the climate, while others are scarcely able to bear the least change."

AMERICAN INVENTIONS.

Fifteen of the greatest inventions of the age are American: 1, the cotton gin; 2, the planing machine; 3, the grass mower and reaper; 4, the rotary printing press; 5, navigation by steam; 6, the hot air engine; 7, the sewing machine; 8, the India rubber industry; 9, the machine manufacture of horseshoes; 10, the sand blast for carving; 11, the gauge lathe; 12, the grain elevator; 13, artificial ice making on a large scale; 14, the electric magnet and its practical application; 15, the telephone.

MYSTERY OF A SLEEPING CAR.

"Queerest thing happened on my car to-day that I ever heard of," said a sleeping-car conductor on the New York Central. "Coming into the city we were a little late, and didn't reach town until 7:30 p. m., when we should have been in by 6. One of my passengers was a rather elderly and infirm woman, with long, fallow face, dull, sunken eyes, a languid air and tawny hair that was too straight to be pretty. She was plainly dressed and too homely and common to attract any attention from the drummers who sat near her. All the afternoon she kept inquiring if we would get into New York on time and appeared very nervous about it. Finally I told her we couldn't get in till 8 o'clock, and then she said she wanted the use of the state-room for about half an hour and didn't want to be disturbed. Well, I didn't pay any more attention to her for some time, but just before we arrived at the Central station, I passed through the car, and sitting there in the seat where the old woman had been, was a girl—as pretty and bright a girl as I ever saw in my life, with a round, creamy face, bright eyes and golden ringlets, and she was beautifully dressed.

"Something wrong here," says I to myself, 'and I'm going to find out what it is.' So I approached her and asked her to let me see her train check. She showed it to me and it was all right.

"Do you know what has become of the old party who had this birth last night?" I inquired.

"I don't know anything about any old party," she snapped out as I went away.

"Some mystery here," says I to myself. 'There's been a murder or disappearance, or an attempt to ride two people on one ticket, or something, and I'm going to find out what it is.' I haunted all through the car and even went forward into the passenger coaches, but no trace could I get of my old woman passenger. By this time I was thoroughly excited, and as the train drew into the station I called the company's detective, pointed the young woman out to him and told him the strange facts.

"Look it up," says I to him. 'There's been foul play of some sort, sure.'

"The detective accompanied the young woman to a carriage, and I saw him talking to her. She laughed showed a rosy mouth and pearly teeth, and then he laughed until I thought he would fall to pieces.

"What's the trouble," says I, as her carriage drove away.

"Trouble!" echoed the detective. "There's no trouble, except that you are a confounded idiot. Can't a pretty young ballot dancer make her toilet on your car, when she's pushed for time, and has to get right from the train to the theater, without you suspecting her of murder and insulting her?"—Drake's Traveler's Magazine.

"You will be asked to make the presentation speech when we give the watch to Simpkins, you know," said a down-town man to the President of the club. "Well, now, really, I can't. My mind is a blank on such things." "That needn't make any difference. The presentation won't be until after dinner, and all our minds will be in the same fix."—Hartford Post.

GRATITUDE is properly a virtue, disposing the mind to an inward sense and an outward acknowledgment of a benefit received, together with a readiness to return the same, or the like, as the occasions of the deed shall require, and the abilities of the receiver extend to.—South.

A DELINQUENT ELEPHANT.

Shortly before our arrival one of the animals had greatly disgraced himself by refusing to carry a certain of goods weight which had been piled on his back. There is the regulation weight, and the beasts know to an ounce what they ought to carry, and if any of the mahouts attempt to put a surplus amount on his or their backs it is immediately shot onto the ground. The animal in question had been duly laden with a weight which was under the regulation scale; but although it had been twice weighed, as Mrs. Gamp would say, before his own eyes, he still refused to carry it. This was too much for even his indulgent driver, so he accordingly reported, and just as we arrived he was about to be tried for his extraordinary and obstinate conduct. Several elephants were led out into a large court-yard, forming a kind of circle round the delinquent, who seemed already to feel his position acutely, for he glanced anxiously from time to time at his mahout, who was visibly affected, and who stood by his head. A karen presided over the court-martial and read aloud the indictment against the offender, the elephants which constituted the jury apparently listening with great attention. After the statement was finished and the mahout examined, who, by the way, gave his evidence with great reluctance, the karen decided that the case had been distinctly proved, and the culprit was adjudged the punishment of twenty strokes. Upon the announcement of the verdict the jury marched in a most solemn manner to a distant part of the yard and returned with a switch about as large as a fair-sized scaffold-pole. In the meantime the mahout had been addressing the offender, who was now weeping copiously, large drops of tears falling from his eyes, and occasionally a shrill and peculiar sound issued from his capacious throat. The executioners of the law were at hand, and stood about twelve to fourteen feet apart, each balancing with peculiar nicety in his trunk the aforesaid switch. The culprit was led up to the place, and as he passed number one there was a sound heard which resembled somewhat a sharp clap of thunder; it was the first blow delivered by the dread myrmidons of the law. The blow was followed by a sharp, shrill scream, although there was evidently an attempt on the part of the culprit to suppress any exhibition of pain. This punishment continued until the whole of the sentence had been carried out. Although I felt considerable sympathy with the unfortunate delinquent I was at the same time intensely amused with the thorough business-like air with which these ministers of justice carried out the sentence. There were no light blows delivered; but, as a matter of fact, each elephant determined to administer a heavier blow than his neighbor, and the sly twinkle in the eye as the blow was delivered was a sight to see.—Primrose Magazine.

INDIANA STATE NEWS.

—There have been docketed for trial at the next term of the Porter County Circuit Court the following suits against the Chicago and Atlantic Railway, growing out of the Kouts disaster. An administrator's suit to recover $10,000 for the deaths of several members of the Miller family; a guardian's suit to recover $10,000 for Hermann Miller, the injured boy who was the only member of the Miller family saved from the wreck; a suit of the Kouts hotel proprietor to recover compensation for the care of the Miller boy. An indictment for involuntary manslaughter against John B. Park and John Dorsey, who are held responsible for the Kouts disaster, will come up; also, a suit brought by Annie Burkhardt against the New Albany and Chicago Railway to recover $10,000 for the death of Andrew Burkhardt, her husband, who was killed on the road of that company.

—Near Mt. Pleasant, Crawford County, Joseph Longest, aged 21 years, was waylaid and robbed by two highwaymen of $2,600. He was carrying the money from Mt. Pleasant to the residence of Mr. T. C. Stalcup, to whom it was to be paid. After standing him up and taking the money from him young Longest was allowed to go on his way, the highwaymen mounting their horses, which they had tied near the roadside, and escaping. An hour later, the alarm being widely circulated, one hundred mounted and armed men were in pursuit of the highwaymen, but at last accounts they had eluded arrest. The bold and daring robbery has created intense excitement in the neighborhood, and if the highwaymen are taken they will speedily dangle at the end of a rope.

—Patents have been granted Indiana inventors as follows: Eli Beghtel, Huntington, portable sawing machine; Marvin Campbell, South Bend, hammock stretch; Wm A. Krag, Indianapolis, coffee pot; Darins Patterson, Richland, combined hame hitch and collar fender; James J. Turner, assignor to himself and J. F. Miller, Richmond, device for actuating signals, switches, etc.; Wm. M. Waltman, Bean Blossom, mole trap.

—A new military company at Crawfordsville, numbering fifty, were mustered into the State service by J. W. Romsey, who was authorized to do so by G. W. Koontz, Adjutant-general. The following are the officers: Captain, Geo. W. Lamb, First-lieutenant, M. V. West; Second-lieutenant, Joe McDaniel; Orderly-sergeant, W. H. Morrison. Twenty-seven of the company belong to McPherson Post, G. A. R.

—The Governor has remitted a forfeiture of $500 against Frank Hulse and Harris E. Pattison. The bond was given for the appearance of John, who was to appear before the Pulaski County Court to answer a charge of rape. The indictment was nolleed for want of evidence, and remittance was requested by the judge, prosecuting attorney and others.

—While John C. Kallmeyer, a Columbus plumber, was connecting some water-main joints in a ditch six feet deep the bank gave way and buried his lower limbs. It was after considerable work that he was dug out and hauled home, where he has suffered a great deal, and his physicians say that it may be months before he can be out again.

—The stockholders of the Montgomery County Fair Association met and elected the following officers, who are to serve for the ensuing year: President, Jasper N. Davidson, of Whitesville; Vice-Presidents, W. H. Durham and J. L. Davis; Treasurer, Joe Grubb; Secretary, F. L. Snyder; Superintendent, J. J. Insley; Chief Marshal, R. B. Snyder.

—It is currently, and said to be truthfully, reported that the body of John Owen Snyder, the famous pedestrian, was resurrected by "saw-bones" for some college at Cincinnati. It is asserted that physicians near Hartford City were the resurrectionists, but they enter a general denial.

—McClellan Barlow, a young man residing at Moscow, five miles west of Milroy, got into a dispute over the weight of a hog with Allen Fuller, when Fuller raised an old musket he had in his hands and shot Barlow in the throat, seriously, if not dangerously wounding him.

—A new bank has been organized at Ladoga, under the State law. W. M. Henry is President; I. N. Miller, Vice-president; G. E. Grimes, Cashier; Chas. Goodbar, Book-keeper. This will make two banks at Ladoga, and a total of seven in Montgomery County.

—While at work in a saw-mill at New Lisbon, seven miles southeast of New Castle, James Lamb was caught in the saw and his right arm and side frightfully mangled, rendering amputation of the arm necessary. His injuries are very severe and will prove fatal.

—Mrs. Francis Perdue, a widow, who resides four miles south of Muncie, was instantly killed while walking along the Port Wayne, Cincinnati and Louisville tracks. She was thrown fully fifty feet, and every bone in her body was broken. She was a deaf mute.

—Hurburt Bunch, the 9-year-old son of ex-Clark L. T. Bunch, of Tipton, was thrown from a runaway wagon, and badly hurt. His right arm was broken in two places, the bone protruding about three inches. He also received internal injuries.

—Wm. Bebee, charged with robbing James Sanderson, of Monticello, during the month of August, was tried in the Cass Circuit Court. The jury found him guilty of petit larceny and he was sentenced to the penitentiary for two years.

—Emily McCuehan, aged 26, of Goshen, was found dead in bed. The Coroner's inquest resulted in the decision that she came to her death through an overdose of tansy, a bottle of which was found nearly empty by the bed.

—At Hammond, a cow-boy named Claude Kimball, got an idea that he was out on the range and careered through a crowd shooting off a 44-caliber revolver. Peter Perdy, a saloon-keeper, was fatally shot.

—A Mrs. Burney, of Burney's Station, fell down a stairway and received injuries which will doubtless prove fatal on account of her age.

—Hon. Max Clark, a prominent merchant of Madison, was killed at Hardinburg, near Seymour, while alighting from an O. & M. train.

—A bomb was found in a box of holiday goods sent from Chicago to Al Quaeley, of Logansport. It caused considerable excitement, and people flocked in great numbers to see the deadly machine.

—Charles Alexander, a brakeman on the Midland Railroad, fell from a train near Gadsden, and was run over. His left leg was cut off and his head badly bruised. He is not expected to recover.

—Mrs. M. Spangler, of Elkhart, has brought suit against the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroad for $10,000, her husband having been killed on the road some time ago.

—A gas explosion in a building belonging to the Consolidated Tank-line Company, at Muncie, did damage to the amount of $500.

—Adam Stine was fatally injured at Nappanee, by falling on a buzz-saw.

—Mary Schoolcraft, of Madison, aged 24, committed suicide by shooting.

WHOLESOME RECREATION.

Discourse by Dr. Talmage in the Brooklyn Tabernacle.

The Gymnasium as a Means of Recuperating Mental and Physical Energies. Music a Source of Limitable Recreation and Amusement.

BROOKLYN, Dec. 18.—At the Tabernacle this morning the whole congregation sang the hymn beginning

The hill of Zion yields
A thousand sacred sweets
Before we reach the heavenly fields
Or walk the golden streets.

The Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D., preached on "Recreations Good and Bad," taking two texts: I Cor. vii, 31: "They that use this world, as not abusing it;" and Judges xvi, 25: "And it came to pass, when their hearts were merry, that they said, Call for Samson, that he may make us sport. And they called for Samson out of the prison house; and he made them sport." Dr. Talmage said:

We are entering the gayest season of the year. The winter opens before us the gates of a thousand amusements, some of them good and some bad. One of my texts will show you that amusements may be destructive, my other text will show you that amusements may be under the divine blessing and direction.

There were 3,000 people assembled in the temple of Dagon. They had come to make sport of eyeless Samson. They were all ready for the entertainment. They began to clap and pound, impatient for the amusement to begin, and they cried, "Fetch him out! fetch him out!" Yonder I see the blind old giant coming, led by the hand of a child into the very midst of the temple. At his first appearance there goes up a shout of laughter and derision. The blind old giant pretends he is tired, and wants to rest himself against the pillars of the house; so he says to the lad who leads him, "Show me where the main pillars are." The lad does so. Then the strong man puts his right hand on one pillar and his left hand on another pillar, and, with the mightiest push that mortal ever made, throws himself forward until the whole house comes down in thunderous crash, grinding the audience like grapes in a wine press. "And so it came to pass, when their hearts were merry, that they said, Call for Samson, that he may make us sport. And they called for Samson out of the prison house; and he made them sport."

In other words: There are amusements that are destructive, and bring down disaster and death upon the heads of those who practice them. While they laugh and cheer, they die. The 3,000 who perished that day in Gaza are as nothing compared with the tens of thousands who have been destroyed by sinful amusements.

But the other text I have read implies that there is a lawful use of the world as well as an unlawful abuse of it, and the difference between the man Christian and the man un-Christian is, that in the former case the man masters the world, while in the latter case the world masters him. For whom did God make this grand and beautiful world? For whom this wonderful expenditure of color, this gracefulness of line, this mosaic of the ground, this fresco of the sky, this glowing fruitage of orchard and vineyard, this full orchestra of the tempest, in which the tree branches flute, and the winds trumpet, and the thunders drum, and all the splendors of earth and sky come clashing their cymbals? For whom did God spring the arched bridge of colors resting upon buttresses of broken storm clouds? For whom did He gather the upholstery of fire around the window of the setting sun? For all men; but more especially for His own dear children.

If you build a large mansion, and spread a great feast after it to celebrate the completion of the structure, do you allow strangers to come in and occupy the place while you thrust your own children in the kitchen or the barn or the fields? Oh, no. You say: "I am very glad to see strangers in my mansion, but my own sons and daughters shall have the first right there." Now God has built this grand mansion of a world, and He has spread a glorious feast in it; and while those who are strangers to His grace may come in, I think that God especially intends to give the advantage to His own children, those who are the sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty, those who through grace can look up and say, "Abba, Father." You cannot make me believe that God gives more advantage to the world than He gives to the church bought by His own blood. If, therefore, people of the world have looked with dolorous sympathy upon those who make profession of religion, and have said, "Those new converts are going down into privation and into hardship. Why did not they tarry a little longer in the world, and have some of its enjoyments and amusements and recreations?" I say to such men of the world, "You are greatly mistaken," and before I get through I will show that those people who stay out of the kingdom of God have the hardships and self denials, while those who come in have the joys and the satisfaction.

This morning, in the name of the King of Heaven and earth, I serve a writ of ejection on all the sinful and polluted who have squatted on the domain of earthly pleasure as though it belonged to them, while I claim, in behalf of the good and the pure and the true, the eternal inheritance which God has given them.

Hitherto, Christian philanthropists, clerical and lay, have busied themselves chiefly in denouncing sinful recreations; but I feel we have no right to stand before men and women in whose hearts there is a desire for recreation amounting to positive necessity, denouncing this and that and the other thing, when we do not propose to give them something better. God helping me this morning, and with reference to my last account, I shall enter upon a sphere not usual in sermonizing, but a subject which I think ought to be presented at this time. I propose now to lay before you some of the recreations which are not only innocent, but positively helpful and advantageous.

In the first place, I commend, among indoor recreations, music, vocal and instrumental. Among the first things created was the bird, so that the earth might have music at the start. This world, which began with so sweet a serenade, is finally to be demolished amidst the ringing blast of the archangel's trumpet, so that another was music at the start, there shall be music at the close. While this heavenly art has often been dragged into the uses of superstition and dissipation, we all know it may be the means of high moral culture. Oh, it is a grand thing to have our children brought up amidst the sound of cultured voices and amidst the melody of musical instruments. There is in this art an indescribable fascination for the household. Let all those families who have the means to afford it, have flute or harp, or piano or organ. As soon as the hand is large enough to compass the keys, teach it how to pick out the melody. Let all our young men try this heavenly art upon their nature. Those who have one into it fully have found in it limitable recreation and amusement. Dark days, stormy nights, seasons of sickness, business disasters, will do little toward depressing the soul which can gallop off over musical keys or soar in jubilant lay. It will cure pain. It will rest fatigue. It will quell passion. It will revive health. It will reclaim dissipation. It will strengthen the immortal soul. In the battle of Waterloo, Wellington saw that the Highlanders were falling back. He said, "What is the matter there?" He was told that the band of music had ceased playing, and he called up the pipers and ordered them to strike up an inspiring air; and no sooner did they strike the air than the Highlanders were rallied, and helped to win the day. Oh, ye who have been routed in the conflicts of life, try by the force of music to rally your scattered battalions.

I am glad to know that in our great cities there is hardly a night in which there are not concerts, where, with the best musical instruments and the sweetest voices, people may find entertainment. Patronize such entertainments when they are offered you. Buy season tickets if you can, for the "Philharmonic," and the "Handel and Haydn" societies. Feel that the $1.50 or $2.00 that you spend for the purpose of hearing an artist play or sing is a profitable investment. Let your Steinway Halls and your Academies of Music roar with the acclamation of appreciative audiences assembled at the concert or the oratorio.

Still further: I commend as worthy of their support the gymnasium. This institution is gaining in favor every year, and I know of nothing more free from dissipation, or more calculated to recuperate the physical and mental energies. While there are a good many people who have employed this institution, there is a vast number who are ignorant of its excellencies. There are men with cramped chests and weak sides, and despondent spirits who, through the gymnasium, might be roused up to exuberance and exhilaration of life. There are many Christian people despondent from year to year who might, through such an institution, be benefitted in their spiritual relations. There are Christian people who seem to think that it is a good sign to be poorly; and because Richard Baxter and Robert Hall were invalids they think that by the same sickness they may come to the same grandeur of character. I want to tell the Christian people of my congregation that God will hold you responsible for your invalidism if it is your fault, and when, through right exercise and prudence, you might be athletic and well. The effect of the body upon the soul you acknowledge. Put a man of mild disposition upon the animal diet of which the Indian partakes, and in a little while his blood will change its chemical proportions. It will become like unto the blood of the lion or tiger or the bear, while his disposition will change, and become fierce, cruel, and unrelenting. The body has a powerful effect upon the soul.

There are good people whose ideas of Heaven are all shut out with clouds of tobacco smoke. There are people who dare to shatter the physical vase in which God has put the jewel of eternity. There are men with great hearts and intellects in bodies worn out by their own neglect—magnificent machinery capable of propelling a Great Eastern across the Atlantic, yet fastened in a rickety North River propeller. Martin Luther was so mighty for God, first, because he had a noble soul, and secondly, because he had a muscular development which would have enabled him to thrash any five of his persecutors, if it had been Christian so to do. Physical development, which merely shows itself in fabulous lifting, or in perilous rope-walking, or in pugilistic encounter, excites only our contempt; but we confess to great admiration for the man who has a great soul in an athletic body, every nerve, muscle, and bone of which is consecrated to right uses. Oh, it seems to me outrageous that men, through neglect, should allow their physical health to go down beyond repair. A ship which ought, with all sail set and every man at his post, to be carrying a rich cargo for eternity, employing all its men in stopping up leakages! When you may, through the gymnasium, work off your spleen and your querulosity and one-half of your physical and mental ailments, do not turn your back upon such a grand medicament.

Still further: I commend to you a large class of parlor games and recreations. There is a way of making our homes a hundred fold more attractive than they are now. Those parents cannot expect to keep their children away from outside dissipations unless they make the domestic circle brighter than anything they can find outside of it. Do not, then, sit in your home surly and unsympathetic, and with a half condemnatory look, because of the sportfulness of your children. You were young once yourself; let your children be young. Because your eyes are dim and your ankles are stiff, do not denounce sportfulness in those upon whose eyes there is the first luster, and in whose foot there is the bounding joy of robust health. I thank God that in our drawing-rooms and in our parlors there are innumerable games and sports which have not upon them the least taint of iniquity. Light up all your homes with innocent hilarities. Do not sit down with the rheumatism, wondering how children can go on so. Rather thank God that their hearts are so light, and their laughter is so free, and that their expectations are so ruddy, and that their cheeks are so radiant. The night will come soon enough, and the heart-break, and the pang, and the desolation—it will come soon enough for the dear children. But when the storm actually clouds the sky, it will be time enough for you to haul out your reef tackles. Carry, then, into your homes not only the innocent sports and games which are the inventions of our own day, but the games which come down with the sportfulness of all the past ages, chess, and charades and tableaux; and battledore and calisthenics and lawn tennis, and all those amusements which the young people of our homes know so well how to contrive. Then there will be the parlor socialities—groups of people assembled in your homes, with wit and mimicry and joviality, filling the room with joy from the door to the mantel, and from the carpet to the ceiling. Oh, is there any exhilaration like a score of genial souls in one room, each one adding a contribution of his own individual merriment to the aggregation of general hilarity?

Suppose you want to go abroad in the city, then you will find the panorama and the art gallery and exquisite collections of pictures. You will find the Metropolitan Museum and the Historical Society rooms full of rare curiosities, and scores of places which can stand plainly the test of what is right and wrong in amusements. You will find the lecturing hall, which has been honored by the names of Agassiz in natural history, Doremus in chemistry, Boynton in geology, Mitchell in astronomy, John B. Gough in moral reform, and scores and hundreds of men who have poured their wit and genius and ingenuity through that particular channel upon the hearts and consciences and imaginations of men, setting this country fifty years farther in advance than it would have been without the lecture platform.

I rejoice in the popularization of outdoor sports. I hail the croquet ground and the fisherman's rod and the sportsman's gun. In our cities life is so unhealthy and unnatural that when the census taker represents a city as having 100,000 inhabitants, there are only 200,000, since it takes at least two men to amount to one man, so depleting and unnerving and exhausting is this metropolitan life. We want more fresh air, more sunlight, more of the abandon of field sports. I cry out for it in behalf of the church of God as well as in behalf of secular interests. I wish that this winter our ponds and our rivers and our Capitoline grounds might be all aqua with the heel and the shout of the swift skater. I wish that when the warm weather comes the graceful our might dip the stream, and the evening tide be resonant with boatman's song, the bright prow splitting the crystalline billow. We shall have the smooth and grassy lawn, and we will call out people of all occupations and professions, and ask them to join in the ball player's sport. You will come back from these outdoor exercises and recreations with strength in your arm, and color in your cheek, and a flash in your eye, and courage in your heart. In this great battle that is opening against the kingdom of darkness we want not only a consecrated soul, but a strong arm and stout lungs and mighty muscle. I bless God that there are so many recreations that have not on them any taint of iniquity; recreations in which we may engage for strengthening of the body, for the clearing of the intellect, for the illumination of the soul.

There is still another form of recreation which I commend to you, and that is the pleasure of doing good. I have seen young men, weak and cross and sour and rebellious in their disposition, who by one heavenly touch have awakened up and become blessed and buoyant, the ground under their feet and the sky over their heads breaking forth into music. "Oh," says some young man in the house to-day, "I should like that recreation above all others, but I have not the means." My dear brother, let us take an account of stock this morning. You have a large estate, if you only realize it. Two hands, two feet. You will have, perhaps, during the next year at least $10 for charitable contribution. You will have 2,000 cheerful looks, if you want to employ them. You will have 5,000 pleasant words, if you want to speak them. Now what an amount this is to start with!

You go out to-morrow morning, and you see a case of real destitution by the wayside. You give him 2 cents. The blind man hears the pennies rattle in his hat, and he says: "Thank you, sir; God bless you." You pass down the street, trying to look indifferent; but you feel from the very depth of your soul a profound satisfaction that you made that man happy. You go on still farther, and find a poor boy with a wheelbarrow, trying to get it up on the curbstone. He fails in the attempt. You say: "Stand back, my lad; let me try." You push it up on the curbstone for him and pass on. He wonders who that well-dressed man was that helped him. You did a great joy to your own soul. You will not get over it all the week.

Antiquity of Telegraphy.

A correspondent of the French journal, Cosmos, states that in a curious old work printed at Paris in 1622 there occurs a remarkable passage, in which the following is a translation: "We may also tell you of this great and wonderful secret, which a certain German has shown to King Henry, and who, by his industry and dexterity, is able to speak with those who are far away, and this by means of the magnet. He first rubs together two needle magnets, and then places them each separately upon two clock dials, around which are engraved the twenty-four letters of the alphabet. If, then, they wish to speak together, or make each other understood what they would desire, they move one hand around until it has pointed to the letters which are necessary to make the words and sentences that they would say, and as they turn one needle so also the distant needle turns, making always the same movement. The king seeing this wonderful secret forbade him to divulge it, fearing that thus would be opened very dangerous communication between the armies of his enemies and their besieged towns." The title page of the work in which the above passage is said to occur (on the 247th page) is as follows: "L'incroyable et mescreance du sortilege plaine-ment convaincue Par P. de l'Ancre, conseiller du Roy en son conseil d'Estat a Paris. Chez Nicholas Buon, rue Saint-Jacques, a l'enseigne Saint Claude et de P' Homme Sauvage. MDCXXII." The notion that two magnetic needles by being rubbed together would afterwards move in sympathy find a place in more than one book of marvels of the seventeenth century, but the above date is, we believe the earliest to which it has yet been traced.—Electrician.

White Hair in Samoa.

Upon my first visit to Apia, the capital of Samoan Islands, in 1878, I was surprised to see so many men walking about with what I first believed to be snow-white hair, but upon closer examination I learned that the natives apply a whitish clay similar to our white-wash to their hair. This they use instead of pomade or hair-oil, and apply it in a thick mass until the hair becomes thoroughly hardened and white. The men continue this process of bleaching their hair until it loses its former black color and with time turns to a brownish red. A rather peculiar taste, but the men feel proud of their success to color their hair. Quite often women go through the same performance, but they are compelled to wear their hair short, as long hair cannot so easily be discolored. Natives of Samoa, as a rule, regard work as unnecessary, and all the work done on the plantations owned by Europeans is performed by Kanakas imported from other islands.—New York World.

Our "jeans pants" are nearly worn out, and we hope some thoughtful subscriber will come to the rescue.—Campbell County (Ga.) News.

TASTES.

They Differ with People in Physical, Intellectual and Moral Things.
(London Queen.)

"Do you love books?" said a Franciscan friar to Southey.

"Yes," was the reply.

"And I," added the honest friar, "love eating and drinking!"

There is no saying more common and none truer than that tastes differ. In the matter of food this contrariety of tastes is familiar to every one. There are people to whom eggs are poison, and turtle soup an abomination; men who cannot touch wine or spirits, and men, unfortunately, who, like Fallstaff, prefer sack to bread. If brandy, as Dr. Johnson said jokingly, is the drink of heroes, it is to be feared that there are a good many heroes of the spirit-loving order in England. The total abstainer—and for that matter, every temperate man who is an abstainer—enjoys the cup that cheers and does not inebriate; but John Wesley implored his followers to avoid tea, and many a doctor will tell you that half the dyspepsia so common in our day is due to that grateful beverage. Who shall decide when doctors disagree? But even your learned physician is but mortal, and it is an open secret that what he likes best himself he is apt to recommend to his patients.

Tastes, it is said, can be acquired, and this may be true with regard to bodily appetites. Charles Lamb said, and it must have been in his youthful days, that he toiled after smoking as a man toils after virtue. There are smokers infatuated enough to prefer a cigar or pipe to their dinner; but I never met with a smoker yet who found his first pipe a luxury. It is difficult, however, to say how far intellectual and moral tastes are acquired. There are some rare souls born into the world who seem to reject, as by a divine instinct, all that degrades humanity, and to love only the things that are lovely and of good report. They follow, almost without knowing it, the Apostolic injunction and, abhorring what is evil, cleave to that which is good. There are others who, despite good example and good education, go astray from their birth. Their tastes are all low, they yield without fighting, they fall at the first suggestion of evil and say, as Milton's Satan says: "Evil, be thou my good!" This propensity to low tastes and bad ways is found in children whose friends or relatives have been distinguished, whether justly or not, for extraordinary excellence. Precision produces reaction, and the stern severity of a father may create in his son a taste for dissipation.

"The oldest of Cromwell's sons," says Mr. Green, "made small pretensions to religion. Milton's nephews, though reared in his house, were writing satires against Puritan Hypocrisy and contributing to collections of filthy songs. The two daughters of the great preacher, Stephen Marshall, were to figure as actresses on the infamous stage of the Restoration."

Taste is scarcely an accurate word to apply to morality, although immorality is invariably associated with bad taste. It was witty of Sheridan to cry out that he was Wilberforce when the Constable found him in the gutter; but it was execrable taste in a statesman to be so drunk that he was forced to lie there! And when a Prime Minister in the last century entered the presence of his Queen in a state of intoxication, his gross want of taste made a sensation even in that age of grossness.

UTILIZING AN OLD CRATER.

Auckland, New Zealand, is a lively and enterprising city of 70,000 inhabitants. It is situated near the crater of a large extinct volcano, which, according to scientists, may resume active operations at any moment. The Aucklanders, however, are not terrified at the prospect, and, in fact, are going to cement the bottom of the crater and use it as a reservoir for their water supply.

DON'T MARRIAGE CHANGES A MAN.

It does look as if after a man got married he lost all capability for looking after himself. How is it that a man who as a bachelor is the pink of neatness, the glass of fashion, and mold of form, when he gets a wife never seems to be able to do anything in the way of dressing himself without his wife's assistance? This young man was at one time a notorious flirt. He had the best cut coats, the most beautiful boots, the most elegant neckties in town. He has been married several years, and he hardly knows how to button his collar now, and would wear his coat inside out if his wife didn't keep an eye on him. Is it natural coarseness? Just a desire to give his wife all the work and worry he can, or is it a psychological phenomenon attributable to domesticity? He had a lucid moment once, this young man, in which he noticed his boots were pretty well worn. It lasted long enough for him to say to his wife:

"Haven't I got any other boots I can wear? These are awful."

"Yes," she said, "there is a pair of side button boots in the closet there."

He fetched them out.

"How does it come that I've had those boots all this time and been wearing these worn-out ones?" Then he put them on. "Yes, I knew there must be something the matter with the blamed boots. They didn't fit me at all. I can't walk in them." And he made faces as he stamped up and down the room. "They are not my boots, yet they are a man's boots. Madam, who is so familiar in this house as to have a pair of boots—"

"Well, dear, they'll perhaps be more comfortable if you'll put the right boot on the right foot."—San Francisco Chronicle.

HOW DO SEA BIRDS QUENCH THEIR THIRST.

The question is often asked, "Where do sea birds obtain fresh water to slake their thirst?" But we have never seen it satisfactorily answered until a few days ago. An old skipper with whom we were conversing on the subject said that he had frequently seen these birds at sea; far from any land that could furnish them water, hovering around and under a storm cloud, clattering like ducks on a hot day at a pond, and drinking in the drops of rain as they fell. They will smell a rain squall a hundred miles or even further off, and send for it with almost inconceivable swiftness.

How long sea birds can exist without water is only a matter of conjecture, but probably their powers of endurance during thirst are increased by habit, and possibly they go without water for many days, if not for several weeks.—Golden Days.

WOLVES AND CHILDREN.

A correspondent of Chambers' Journal alleges that recently in Melbourne, with his wife and two children, aged 2 and 4, he went to see the animals in the Royal Park, and that four wolves sleeping in a cage paid no attention to himself and his wife and the oldest child; but the moment the younger one toddled up they sprang to their feet and made for the corner of the cage nearest to her, where they stood against the bars, pushed their paws through, barked constantly and seemed wild to get at her; not viciously, however, but as a dog might have run to play with her. When the child spoke their efforts were doubled. On a subsequent visit the same thing occurred. From which the correspondent concludes that wolves have a very strong maternal instinct and love children.—New York Sun.

LITTLE maids, like weakest liquors, are sooner soured.

Popular Education.

We sympathize with the feeling which often leads citizens to boast that no child born in this country need grow up in ignorance, and yet it is a fact that many people who have learned to read and write have never taught themselves to think. A man who suffered from catarrh, consumption, bronchitis, scrofula, or "liver complaint," might read, till his eyes dropped out, how these and many other diseases have been cured by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, but if he did not take the lesson to himself and test the virtues of this great medicine, his time would be thrown away.

The Salon in American Society.

There is a growing ambitious desire in American social life for the revival of the salon, an institution which is sadly understood in this country. Now that the leaders of the social world are no longer among the younger set, it seems necessary for them to look about for some occupation more suitable to mature years and intellect than the cotillon, and as a natural consequence they fall back quite naturally on the salon as affording a chance for the exercise of their talents. That this hybrid social plant needs certain conditions of soil in which to thrive the very certain, and only amid such encouraging environments can a healthy growth be looked for. To start it into life requires much tact and knowledge of human nature as it exists in Boston circles of brains and fashion. To so bring together the two cliques as to make them mix successfully is something that a Ulysses might quail at, but it must be remembered that Ulysses was but a man after all, and the new social movement, if accomplished at all, will be accomplished by woman. There is wit and beauty enough for many a "salon" in the material at hand, and if Boston cannot yet boast such another coterie as gayly bandied wit and repartee in the salons on the Faubourg St. Germain, it can at least furnish a near approach to it.—Boston Post.

The first iron boat is said to have been built in 1777 on the River Foss, in Yorkshire. It was fifteen feet long and made of sheet iron.

HOW THEY FALL BEHIND.

There is really no profit in recommending the worthless, for the reaction in the mind of those who buy and are deceived is pointedly against everything sold by such a dealer.

Hence, the force of the following voluntary letter, which is based upon the conscientious conviction formed from the long and cautious experience of a leading drug house of Boston, represents in every line a most important and valued revelation: "Boston July 11, 1887.—The Charles A. Vogeler Co.—Gentlemen: Many preparations are placed before the public, and for a time at least they have a large but temporary sale—large, because of the extensive advertising; temporary, because the suffering class soon realize that the compound possesses but little merit. Not so with St. Jacob's Oil. Its success has been constant from the start, and to-day we regard it as one of those standard remedies that our trade consider as absolutely essential to always carry in their stock. Personal experience and the good words of the druggists of New England all tend to prove that each year will add to its sale and well deserved popularity. Signed, Doolittle & Smith." Taking the many cases of cure, published by the proprietors, examples are given of its unvarying effects in the worst chronic cases, and there is nothing in trade which can approach its efficacy.

FRIDAY DECEMBER 23, 1887.

We wish our readers a Merry Christmas, and a happy and prosperous New Year; and while we do this, we can not refrain from expressing our grateful thanks, for the many kind words and liberal patronage, that has been extended toward our little paper during the year. We have made no boasts that it has been anything more than a small local sheet, devoted to the interests of St. Joe and vicinity, and for the dissemination of home news. As such, we have every reason to believe that it has been appreciated.

We have a few extra copies of the News left this week. Send one to your friends.

The Edgerton Observer issued a sixteen-page pamphlet supplement last week, called "Our Christmas Chimes," which contained a number of advertisements, besides some interesting original miscellany. The Observer man is certainly doing his part toward booming the town.

W. C. B. Harrison, of the Hicksville Independent, jerked the latch string to our sanctum on Monday, and made us a very pleasant call. We have always been under the impression that an editor usually wore poor clothes, but Bro. Harrison was roged up like a Wall street banker.

Phillip Houk, died at his home, west of this place, Tuesday morning, Dec. 20th, 1887, at the age of 74 years. Several years ago while he was a resident of this place, his horse ran away, throwing him out on the hard ground, and seriously injuring him internally. Since that time his health has gradually been on the decline, until Tuesday morning, when he passed away. He was a christian in the fullest sense of the term, and at the time of his death was an elder in the Lutheran church at this place.

CONCORDTOWN.

Cap Andrews has bought seven acres off the corner of his father's farm, and will build on it soon.

I am anxious to know who is going to give me a Christmas present. Will except one from any body.

That trade between Arthur Platter and Josiah Koch has fell through. There was a baby in the way, as there frequently is.

Marion Dermott has bought forty acres of the old Tiffany farm of Fremont Nelson. We didn't learn the price paid for it.

Jack Allen has built an addition to his house, which adds very much to the looks of it, besides it gives Jack more room to spread himself.

R. G. Coburn claims that he has chopped more wood this winter so far, than any other man in Coburntown, and he is not quite sixty-three years old yet.

Any one wanting hogs shot, will please call on Wills Beaber, as he is a crack shot. If he can't hit them in the head, he will hit them some where else. For particulars ask Mort.

There was a chopping-bee at Ann Abel's last Wednesday, and for some cause there was a poor turnout, but all who were there worked like beavers, and got her up a nice lot of wood.

The Coburntown band boys will meet at the north school house in the future, instead of St. Joe, as they have been doing. St. Joe is no good.

SPENCERVILLE.

Arthur James was at Hicksville Sunday.

Mrs. Ben Springer has been seriously ill.

Dr. Murphy, of Leo, was in town Tuesday.

The debate was decided in favor of the negative.

E. Zimmerman, of Auburn, was in town Thursday.

The photograph gallery is doing an extensive business.

G. A. Bishop spent a couple of days at Kendallville this week.

The last No. of Vol. 1, of the Owl appeared in a colored coat last week.

There will be a Masonic Installation of officers next Tuesday evening.

Mrs. Z. T. Kagey and son George, of Hicksville, spent Sunday at this place.

Michael Vesper will spend the holidays at his old home near Ashland, Ohio.

Ben Zimmerman, the photographer has on exhibition a pet mouse. Come and see it.

George Smith got a little off this week, and came home Tuesday instead of Friday.

The Literary Society will meet next Monday evening. At which time the installation of officers will take place.

We have rope swings, we have seen pole swings, and we have heard of swings that go round and round, but Jake Baltz has the swing for kickers.

The ladies of the Lutheran church will hold a Bazaar at Walters' hall, Saturday afternoon, December 24th. Any person wishing to purchase Christmas presents, will do well to call on them, as there will be for sale many fancy articles such as the ladies of that church are capable of making. The Sunday school will have a tree at the church in the evening.

The Sabbath school was reorganized last Sunday, with a full corps of efficient officers and teachers, and we predict a successful year of Sunday school work.

Dave and Dan Butler, Frank Wise and Charley Rhodes with their wives, and Mrs. Bowman, of Spencerville, came out to the birthday party of James Gibford, last Saturday.

Grandfather Houk died at his residence, last Monday night at 12 o'clock, after a long and painful illness. His remains were interred in the Spencerville cemetery last Wednesday.

They came from near and from afar, and gave James Gibford a genuine surprise last Saturday, in honor of his forty-third birthday. The house was crowded from "garrett to cellar," and all seemed to enjoy themselves quite heartily.

LOCALS.

Did you ever try to get your work all arranged in apple-pie order, and then at the last moment, have something happen to spoil it all? That was just the fix we were in last week. We were all ready to run off our edition, but through some hook or crook, the patent side of our paper was missent, and we did not receive it until Tuesday of this week. We are sorry it happened so, but are sure that our readers were no more disappointed than we were, that the News was not out on time.

Dr. Bowman was at Fort Wayne, yesterday.

Plenty of Fresh Tub Oysters just received at Tustison's.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Coughanour will spend Christmas at Hicksville.

F. W. Draggoo will begin a writing school at the Hay school house after the holidays.

Squire Abels and wife are anticipating a trip to Chicago to-morrow, to visit their daughter.

James Abels Esq., was called to Huntington this week, to attend to some legal business.

The pay car loomed up on Wednesday, and furnished the railroad boys the where-with to stock up for Christmas.

The W. C. T. U. will meet at the residence of Mrs. Mahlon Baker, Thursday, Dec. 29th, at 2:30 o'clock. We desire each member present.

County Superintendent Merica has been visiting the schools in this part of the county, this week. He reports them all in a flourishing condition.

We issue a handsome Christmas supplement this week. It cost us extra money, but we propose to give our readers the worth of their seventy-five cents.

Rev. Langley will begin a series of meetings at the Methodist church in this place next week. It is reported that a lady evangelist will assist in the work.

A genuine blizzard struck the town Wednesday morning, and has been putting in full time ever since. Such weather could be endured with a greater degree of comfort, if we only had good sleighing.

J. D. L. was in K. on Wednesday.

Filey, Lounsbury & Shuler shipped two car loads of lumber this week.

Take advantage of the low rates offered by the railroads and go to see your friends.

A car load of coal that was ordered three or four months ago for use in this place, just arrived yesterday.

Remember it is more blessed to give than to receive, and make your friends happy by giving them appropriate Christmas presents.

Some of the Hicksville business men have advertised that their places of business will be closed on Christmas. Of course they will; it comes on Sunday.

S. S. Shutt dropped in the other day to inquire how our gas well was getting along. Well, just moderately. We haven't reached Trenton rock yet.

Eleven new members were added to the Methodist church at this place last Sunday, as the result of the protracted meeting just closed at Widney's school house.

C. H. Brown and family visited friends in this place over last Sunday. C. H. has sold his interest in the Auburn Church Furniture Co., and is now looking up a new location. We do not know what kind of business he thinks of engaging in, but wish that he could be induced to stop in St. Joe.

J. W. Platter, the new commissioner from this district, made the News office a pleasant call on Friday. Mr. Platter takes to the work of a commissioner like a duck does to water, and the stand he took in refusing to grant a whiskey license to Meek, at Waterloo, is conclusive evidence that he has a mind of his own, and that he proposes to use it in his official duties.

Several of our citizens went to Maysville, Sunday evening, to hear Mrs. Mershon, a lady evangelist, preach. She is one of the sensational kind of preachers, who are traveling over the country, and it is said that right in the midst of some of her sermons she goes into a trance and remains in that condition for some ten or twenty minutes. She is a good talker, and large crowds flock to hear her.

There's nothing small about Spencerville, judging from the big words that the Dispatch correspondent from that place used last week, in regard to an article that appeared in the Courier the week before. He says: "The caricatum at the head of the article fairly represents the propoundety of the writer's ability." In what part of Webster do you find the words, "caricatum" and "propoundety?" We merely ask for information.

Mrs. F. Buchanan was visiting at one of her neighbors the other day, and when she came to leave, and had got as far as the gate, she found that she had forgotten something, and setting her hand-bag down, ran back into the house after it. Just like a woman, when she got in the house, she got to talking, and instead of staying a minute, she was gone nearly a half hour. Upon coming out she found the hand-bag gone, and as there was quite a sum of money in it, you can imagine that she was considerably alarmed. After a long search, it was found quite a distance from the house, where it had been carried by a mischievous dog. Ladies can learn a valuable lesson from this little incident; and that is, that when they go away for a minute, they ought to make it a point not to be gone longer than six or eight hours, at the farthest.

IS CONSUMPTION INCURABLE?

Read the following: G. H. Morris, Newark, Ark., says: "Was down with Abscess of Lungs, and friends and physicians pronounced me an incurable Consumptive. Began taking Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, am now on my third bottle, and able to oversee the work on my farm. It is the finest medicine ever made."

Jesse Middlewart, Decatur, Ohio, says: "Had it not been for Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption I would have died of Lung Troubles. Was given up by doctors. Am now in best of health." Try it. Sample bottles free at W. C. Patterson's Drug Store.

Prof. Chaney of Sedan, was in town on Friday of last week.

The ladies of the Lutheran church at Spencerville, will hold a Holiday Bazaar during next week.

Why are the church bells of this place like a woman's tongue? Because they are always on the go.

J. M. Shutt, editor-in-chief of the Maysville Breeze, was in town Friday, and favored the News office with a call.

Wort Langley talks of writing a book. We suggest that he take for a subject, "The Rise and Fall of the Moustache."

The Waterloo Press wants to know what constitutes a good moral man? We'll give it up Bro. Willis. Ask us something easy.

The western bound fast line ran into a freight at Fostoria, last Friday night, wrecking both trains and killing a fireman and one passenger, besides injuring several others.

One night last week, while some one was ringing the Methodist bell, the frame on which it was hung, not being properly fastened, spread out, leaving the bell down. Fortunately, it did not fall with force enough to break through the floor beneath, or considerable damage might have resulted.

We have heard it intimated that some persons at Spencerville claim that the business men of this town were particularly anxious to have the saloon at that place closed, in order to bring more trade to St. Joe. What nonsense! Just as if a saloon brought any additional trade to a town. To the contrary, rather, for if there was no place where men could spend their money for liquor, it would be paid out for the real necessities of life, and thus increase the amount of trade.

EVENTS OF A WEEK.

THE OLD WORLD.

Chinese papers received at San Francisco give details of the destruction of the city of Ching-Chow and ten other populous cities, in the province of Honan, and the flooding of the entire country, Sept. 28, by the Yellow River overflowing its banks. The loss of life and property is described as appalling, but no figures are given. Millions of Chinese are homeless and starving. Where recently there were eleven densely populated cities and a rich plain, there is now a wide lake from ten to thirty feet deep, while the former bed of the river is now dry. The present lake was the bed of the river centuries ago. Thomas Hutton, an American missionary, writing from Honan province under date of Oct. 28, says:

The newly gathered crops, houses, and trees are all swept away, involving a fearful loss of life. "Bread, bread," is the cry of thousands who are on the river bank. Benevolent people go in boats and throw bread among the masses here and there, but it is nothing compared with what is required. The mass of people is still being increased by continual arrivals. There they sit, stunned, hungry, and dejected, without a rag to wear or a morsel of food. Mat huts are being erected for them, but what it will be in two months I cannot conceive. The misery is increased owing to the bitter cold weather.

The extent of ground swept over by the overwhelming flood is over seven thousand square miles, and the land thus submerged formed a part of one of the richest and most densely populated plains of Northern China.

While M. Carnot's election is looked upon as a victory for the peace-loving bourgeois and peasant proprietor element, and while a tone of mild satisfaction has characterized the utterances of the German press at his elevation, the baffled promoters of disturbance are no less active than before, says a Paris dispatch. France does not for a moment relax her endeavors to place her army upon an effective footing, as if a war was to be daily expected, and work upon the forts around Toul is being hurried night and day, as if in answer to the German augmentation of the defenses at Metz. Railways between the various forts at Toul are nearly constructed, making a great saving of time and labor in transporting men and material from place to place. On the Italian frontier strong works will be at once commenced.

The war between Austria and Russia is still raging fiercely in the newspapers.

A drastic bill authorizing the expulsion from the country of such socialists as have incurred penalties for violating the anti-socialist law has been introduced into the Reichstag at Berlin, under the terms of which most of the socialistic members of that body may be expelled.

Aubertin, the assailant of Ferry, was arraigned, but while the examination was in progress he was attacked with dementia, and had to be removed to a mad-house.

At a military council, presided over by the Emperor Francis Joseph, in Vienna, it was determined to devote a large sum of money to the purchase of equipments and the construction of huts for troops in Galicia, but not to increase the forces unless there should be some further aggressive movement on the part of Russia. The two powers keep on strengthening their positions along the frontier, while giving profuse explanations that they entertain the most friendly feelings toward each other.

PERSONAL NOTES.

A Hallowell (Me.) dispatch announces the death of Gov. Bodwell. His death was caused by congestion of the lungs, due to exposure and overwork. Gov. Joseph R. Bodwell was a native of Maine, being born in Lawrence in 1818. When but 8 years old he was thrown on his own resources. When a young man he settled in Hallowell, in that State, and for many years was the President of the Hallowell Granite Company. By shrewd management and honest dealings he accumulated a fortune of several millions of dollars. The citizens of Hallowell have twice honored him with the Mayoralty of the city, and twice elected him to the General Assembly of Maine before he was chosen Governor.

The poet Whittier celebrated the eightieth anniversary of his birth at his home in Danvers, Massachusetts, on Dec. 17. Many distinguished people called upon him during the day to offer their congratulations.

An Omaha dispatch announces the death of S. P. Rounds, President of the Omaha Republican Company. He was at first attacked with pneumonia, followed by pleurisy, but had so far recovered as to be considered out of danger, when he was seized with heart trouble, an old affection, which was the direct cause of his death.

Starling Parker Rounds was a native of Vermont and was born in June, 1828. He learned the printer's trade in Buffalo, after which he went to Racine, Wis., where he started a weekly paper. He was married in Racine Dec. 8, 1854, and has three sons and two daughters living. One daughter is the wife of O. H. Rothaker, the journalist. After his marriage Mr. Rounds removed to Milwaukee and started the News as a weekly paper. He afterward went to Chicago and opened a large job printing office on State street, in company with James J. Langdon. They were burned out by the fire, but opened an office soon after on Monroe street, where they continued business until their failure five years later. In 1882 Mr. Rounds was appointed public printer by President Garfield, and held the office until the incoming of the present administration. A year ago in September he bought the Omaha Republican, and has lived there since. His father is still living at Eureka, Wis. He has a brother in Milwaukee and a sister at Aurora, Ill.

The father of Congressman Weaver of Iowa, died at Atchison, Kan., at the age of 84 years.

FINANCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL.

Scarle, Van Niman & Co., Philadelphia, jobbers of notions and white goods, have made an assignment. Their liabilities are estimated at $265,000. The firm of D. De Castro & Co., shipping and commission merchants, of New York, have failed. Their assets and liabilities are estimated at from $750,000 to $1,000,000.

The business failures during the week numbered for the United States 254, for Canada 31, or a total of 285, as against 254 the preceding week, and 288 for the corresponding week of last year. R. G. Dun & Co., of New York, in their weekly review of trade, say:

No lack of money checks speculative activity; on call the supply is abundant, and the large demand for money on time is now fairly met. Interests reports all indicate less monetary pressure, though the market at some points is still close. Complaints of slow collections continue, but are less general; past pressure is reflected, however, in an unusually large number of failures. Foreign trade improves. Though the figures and the course of foreign exchanges indicate that foreign capital still moves to this country, rather than out of it, the stock market has declined on the average about 70 cents per share and grows dull. There is clear, though moderate, improvement in the commercial and industrial outlook, mainly due to a growing confidence that Congress will finally do nothing prejudicial to business interests. At the same time it is observed that uncertainty in regard to the action of Congress tends to restrict purchases, and contributes to the weakness in some markets. Monetary anxieties diminish and speculation in products abates.

A large and extensive cotton-mill at Charleston, South Carolina, is likely to shut down because of the difficulty the managers have experienced in their attempts to secure white labor.

Several thousand men have been thrown out of employment by the closing of the Edgar Thompson steel-works at Baddock, Pennsylvania.

POLITICAL POINTS.

Postmaster Joseph Manley, of Augusta, Me., in an interview at New York, said:

I have no question but Mr. Blaine will be nominated at Chicago, and by acclamation, because Republicans in every section of the land regard his nomination as the strongest one that can be made. Of course I do not know what Mr. Blaine will do, but I believe he is too much of a patriot and too good a Republican, whatever his private wishes and desires may be, to decline such a call made upon him.

There were 1,333 delegates present at the convention of Republican clubs which met in Chickering Hall, New York, Dec. 16, and 350 clubs were represented. Seventy-five additional clubs were accredited but not represented. The early proceedings of the convention were presided over by Temporary Chairman Daniel J. Ryan. As the roll of the clubs was called, the names of the old party leaders were cheerfully called, especially the name of Blaine, although it was noticeable that the Ohio delegation did not join in this demonstration. Resolutions favoring coast defenses and the distribution of the tobacco and whisky taxes among the States were offered and referred. A resolution offered by Mr. Grosvenor, of Ohio, denouncing L. Q. C. Lamar, and declaring that he ought not to be elevated to the Supreme bench, caused a sensation. Senator Evans was made permanent Chairman.

Both branches of the South Carolina Legislature passed a bill pensioning the Confederate soldiers. The expense will amount to $50,000 per year.

The Convention of Republican Clubs completed its labors on Saturday, the 17th inst., and adjourned. Mr. James P. Foster, President of the New York Republican Club, was elected President of the newly created National League. The resolution against the confirmation of Mr. Lamar was tabled.

FIRES AND ACCIDENTS.

A square of business buildings at Shelbyville, Tenn., was burned, creating a loss of over $100,000, with insurance approximating $75,000.

Fire destroyed the Excelsior mill factory and the starch mills at Elkhart, Ind. The loss is estimated at $110,000. By the burning of the Hope cracker and biscuit works at Pittsburg a loss of $50,000 was incurred. The greater part of Pocauntas, Tenn., was burned, the loss aggregating $17,000, with no insurance.

J. M. Hummel's agricultural warehouse, at Sandwich, Ill., was burned, entailing a loss of $25,000, with about $10,000 insurance.

Near Mechanicsville, Iowa, two freight trains on the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad collided, killing a brakeman named Kelly, of Clinton, injuring the engineers and firemen of both trains, and demolishing thirty cars.

An incendiary fire destroyed the business portion of Mapleton, D. T. The loss is $34,000, and the insurance $13,250.

The art store of J. C. Iverson & Co., of Milwaukee, was destroyed by fire, the loss amounting to over $100,000.

THE CRIMINAL RECORD.

A St. Louis dispatch says: "Advices from Tamaulipas, Mexico, state that there was much trouble there and a riot during the election Sunday. One of the parties opened the polls, when the others began to fight. At each of polls there was a pitched battle, and the ballot-boxes were overturned or destroyed. Eight men were killed and over forty wounded. The result is that the old Mayor will hold over for another term."

Henry S. Ives, of the defunct banking firm of H. S. Ives & Co., was arrested at New York on a charge of grand larceny made by Julius Dexter, President of the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton Railroad Company, and was released on $25,000 bail. Ives' sister furnishing the bond. The "Napoleon of finance" is charged with stealing a draft for $100,000 which had been intrusted to him as trustee.

As a result of the feud between the Adams and Cawwell factions in Rock Castle County, Kentucky, seven men have been killed within a week, many others wounded and several houses burned.

A Quitman (Ga.) special reports that a large band of masked men entered the town and demanded the jail keys for the purpose of getting John Porter, a negro who had been imprisoned the day before for an assault upon a white lady. The jailer stoutly resisted, when several shots were fired at him, one of them taking effect. The jail door was battered down, the prisoner secured, and the party disappeared. The following morning at a point three miles from town the body of the negro was found hanging from a tree limb. Over a hundred bullet holes were pierced through it.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

It is reported from Eldorado, Kan., that a raid upon the Oklahoma district is being secretly organized in three States, the arrangement being that the way to open the Indian Territory to settlement is to open it. One hundred thousand men, it is said, are prepared to invade the Territory at a given date.

The most important measures passed by the Mexican Congress, which has just adjourned, were two bills, one authorizing a new loan of $10,500,000, and the other providing for compulsory education in the federal district and territories.

Lying in the vault at Waldheim Cemetery for five weeks, under the constant guard of those who knew them when living, sentiment being, says a Chicago special, the bodies of the five anarchists, August Spies, George Engel, Adert R. Parsons, Adolph Fischer, and Louis Lingg, were on Sunday consigned to the great Mother Earth. All of the most noted anarchists of the city were present on the train, and also a large number of equally prominent labor-leaders of unpronounced anarchist type. The speakers of the day were Capt. William P. Back, Paul Grottkau of Milwaukee, Albert Curtin of St. Louis, and Joseph R. Buchanan. The features of the dead all looked as if but little marred by the lapse of time since life had departed from them, with the exception of Lingg's, around whose eyes were broad purplish-red rings. The grave or vault was open at the top, its sides and floor being made of solid masonry. Its width is that of the length of a coffin, and its length just sufficient to contain the coffins packed close side by side. The five coffins having been lowered into this curious vault, an immense flag-stone was lowered down over it, covering the vault entirely, the stone being lowered down into its place with the aid of a derrick. During all the ceremonies excellent order was preserved, and the only show of a want of reverence for the occasion was the use of the word "Bravo" by several of the auditors during the progress of Grottkau's speech.

Mr. Perry C. Smith, of New Jersey, is to succeed Mr. Higgins as chief of the appointment division of the Treasury Department. He is at present employed in the Postoffice Department, and is a cousin of Secretary Fairchild.

THE KING OF MOTORS.

A level-headed writer in the Milling Engineer says: "The steam engine is first, last, and all the time the king of motors, and holds the throne against all comers. The water wheel is disappearing into the back settlements, and is no longer used where active competition demands the fullest facilities for manufacturing. Electricity is a possible rival to the steam engine for small powers, but is only a secondary power as yet, the prime mover being the steam engine."

"Now, steam being still king, why should not those who live by attending to it learn something of the master they serve? No doubt many are desirous of doing so, and the very first step toward gaining a knowledge of steam and the steam engine is to read what others have discovered about it. Young men, especially, must remember that the day of a squirt-can engineering has gone by, and the demand is for men who can run engines understandingly, or with some knowledge of the principles involved. This demand may be less in some sections than in others, but the day is not far off when engineers will have to be such, in fact, not in name. Men will not be tolerated who cannot show a better record than: 'This certifies that John Smith is a sober man,' etc. Now there are no books which teach engineering pure and simple. There never was a book and there never will be one which can make an engineer out of a tramp or a handy man who happens along. An engineer is the product of time, experience, and study—that covers him in all lines. It takes time to get experience, and when one gets it he must get that of others also; he must get his facts correctly from the fountain head, and not from gadabouts around a threshing machine engine. The place to get facts about steam engines is in a common philosophy, for the steam engine is controlled by laws written in every book on physics. There are no chapters on it therein; there is no part which says one must turn this cock or open that valve; nothing in a common philosophy tells one when a boiler is going to burst in so many words, but in the laws of heat, of atmospheric action, in the behavior of water under certain conditions, the engineer finds instruction which he cannot do without, and which enables him to get over difficulties which floor others."

"TICK TO YOUR LAST."

This phrase, though seemingly referring to the disciples of St. Crispin, is accepted as of general application. The enormously rich Zadock Pratt was a tanner by trade—a man of quaint manners and speech and strong common sense. A speculator was once showing him a new method of tanning, by the use of which, he argued, great sums of money might be made. Pratt told him he had no reason to doubt his assertion but he was making money enough; and that he (the speculator) had better find some one who was not doing so well. He made it an invariable rule to resist all attempts to lure him from his legitimate business, and by this undeviating application rolled up a splendid fortune.

The well-known story of Plautus, the Roman comic writer, is an apt though ancient illustration of the rule of sticking to your business. He acquired a handsome fortune by his comedies. He was afterward tempted to embark in trade, and met with such severe losses that he was reduced to the necessity of working in a mill as a day laborer.

Does any man wound thee? Not only forgive, but work into thy thought intelligence of the kind of pain, that thou mayest never inflict it on another spirit.

REPENTANCE without amendment is like continual pumping in a ship without stopping the leaks.

The Model Aspect of a Good Dinner.

There is a certain class of persons who seem to think they show their superiority by affecting an indifference to the pleasures of a good table, says the New York Tribune. We hear people boastfully saying: "We live as plainly as possible. We have no time to devote to cooking." A daintily served, well-cooked dinner may be just as much a proof of the superior refinement and culture of the individual as any intellectual task. The hiring hand can never take the place of the mistress. It is utterly futile to expect a crude servant will cook and serve a dinner properly. The difference between a family of healthy children and a family of sickly children, the difference between despondency and hope, often lies in the hands of the cook, and yet some mothers relegate this responsibility to a "green girl." The entire life is sometimes wrecked by ill-health and health is often wrecked by poorly cooked food or poorly selected food or some ignorance of a fundamental law of food supply. It is not enough to supply "plain food" if this means a monotonous diet of bread and butter, meat and potatoes. There are other articles that offer variety that are just as inexpensive. It is the housekeeper's duty to see that there is a variety on her table. The appetites of her household should never flag or be cloyed with sameness. Every one who sits at the dinner-table of the true housewife "respects her dinner" if he is a healthy individual and has not been spoiled by dyspepsia. A housewife has no reason to scorn her work because it is not intellectual. It is senseless for her to neglect her mission at home as of minor importance. No housekeeper can provide the proper food and a variety of it without giving fully one-half her time to her task. The increase of saloons in our great cities is due without doubt to the miserably cooked food of the poorer tenement districts. In the districts whose living facilities are worst does the saloon flourish most successfully. Men with their bodies weakened by insufficient food or unwholesome food and their minds inflamed by stimulants easily become desperate, dangerous individuals. In the country where the air is pure, the food supply fresh, and the cooking even among the poorer people is done with more care, there are no anarchists and comparatively little intemperance. Unless the body is kept strong and healthy the mind becomes prone to eccentricities of various kinds. A well-balanced mind is always a mind which is nourished by a healthy body.

"Sir, respect your dinner, idolize it, enjoy it, and you will bet many hours in the week, many weeks in the year, and many years in your life happier."

Tell-Tale Footprints.

In a letter to his friend Mr. Morrill, of Rokeby Park, Sir Walter Scott tells of a somewhat curious method which was employed in Galloway for the arrest of a man who had put to death a young woman. The crime had been committed in a wayside cottage, and the only possible clue was a footprint on the clay floor of the humble residence.

Suspicion, however, fell upon a certain individual, a young man living in the same village. But on mere suspicion only no arrest could be made. The local minister, therefore, advertised from the pulpit that the girl would be buried on a certain day, and that all persons in the neighborhood were invited to attend the funeral to show their detestation of the crime, as well as to evince their own innocence. He calculated that by adopting this course he would be able to gather together every one in the locality.

When the people had assembled in the kirk the doors were locked by the Sheriff's order, and the shoes of all the men were examined. By this plan the murderer—who was observed to display great nervousness and fear—was detected, a peculiarity in his shoe exactly corresponding to a mark in the footprint. Afterward the wretched man confessed.

Footprints, indeed, have led to many arrests. Very few persons have feet of the same shape, and unless a man be wearing a new pair of boots it is probable that he would leave a footprint with peculiarities of its own.—London Exchange.

GOVERNMENT is the creature of the people, and that which they have created they surely have a right to examine.—Robert Hall.

A Shorn Lamb.

Farmer Grind drew a long, deep sigh and stood it up against a slanting sunbeam which came into the barn through a crack in the big door where he was at work. It was just as well to preserve it, for sighs were not as fresh and bright with him as they used to be in days before he had the asthma, so he thought it best to lay it by for future use; in fact, Farmer Grind laid every thing by for future use that he could.

It was really sad to see this white-haired old man, this weather-beaten green stump of the forest, bowed down with grief, and the pitiful tears came into his eyes and trickled down to the end of his nose, from which he ever and anon wiped them with the back of his gnarled and brawny hand.

"You seem under the influence of a heavy sorrow, Brother Grind," remarked the young parson, who had entered unperceived, and seated himself on an upturned horse bucket, while the farmer was stuffing another bunch of straw into the cutter.

The farmer looked up from his work with a weary smile of recognition and replied, after he had changed his quid to the other cheek:

"Yes, brother, the hand of misfortune has rested heavily upon me. I try to bear it like a Christian, but it's mighty hard, parson, and it goes powerful agin the grain to be resigned."

"I hope so, my afflicted brother, and trust that I may offer the consolations of religion," said the parson, sympathetically; "but in what way have you been bereaved?" I hope your wife—

"Oh, Betsy is all right," interrupted the farmer.

"And the children? I had not heard. You have not lost any of the children?" and the parson grew more animated in his interest.

"Not as I know of," said the farmer. "not a blamed kid; the children are all doing well enough."

"Where, then, has the blow fallen, brother? At what sacred place in the family circle has the dread shaft of the Death angel been turned to bring sadness into a once happy home? The wind, I trust, will be tempered to the shorn lamb."

"The family circle is all serene, parson, but as for misfortune, I should rather think I've had my share since I saw you. You know that colt—that ornary plug that uster run in the calf-lot that?—Well, sir, last spring I—I— At this point the old man completely broke down, sobbed audibly, and gritted his teeth. "I sold him to Gabe Cummins for $30 and an old hair bridle."

"Seems to me that was a fair price," said the parson.

"Seemed to me, at the time, that it was, but this is a weary world, parson, and we never know what trials is in store for us. I know, parson, you'll pardon my emotion when I tell you the news that I heard only this morning. What do you think, but that that do-blamed fool colt, that I sold for $30 and an old hair bridle, made a mile last Monday in 2:20, and beat Silvertown Maid on a $500 bet. Gabe Cummins raked in all that wealth. There isn't much temperin' of the shorn lamb to the wind in that. I'm the worst shorn lamb you ever see, parson, and I tell you this seems to be a mighty cold day fur lambs."

Under the shadow of his great misfortune the old man bowed his hoary head over the straw cutter, and dropped a tear and a large gob of grief into its depths. Some sorrows are too sacred to be gazed on by strange eyes. The parson felt that even the consolation of religion would be inadequate in this case, and he tiptoed out of the barn and left the old man with his heart so sorrowful.—Texas Siftings.

A Zoological Loss.

A famous sea anemone—a specimen of Actinia mesembryanthemum has just succumbed to parasitic disease in the Royal Botanical Gardens of Edinburgh, after sixty years of captivity. From its great age, and its more than 600 immediate offsprings, it had become familiarly known as "Granny." This interesting creature is pictured in several scientific works, and was visited by many eminent scientific men and travelers in addition to the usual sight-seers. It was fed regularly once a fortnight with half a mussel, and was supplied with fresh water after each of these meals.

Let your character be as firm as granite and the shafts of your enemies cannot harm it.

ONCE in a while those severe Bostonians will make a joke that has a decidedly Wild Western flavor about it. The other day two gentlemen were discussing the recent appointment of Mr. George W. Cable as a Bible instructor in Boston. "It is strange," said one, "that a novelist should be invited to point out the road to righteousness." "Not so strange nowadays," replied the other; "Cable roads are becoming very common."—New York Tribune.

STORY OF THE BUSTLE.

Her ma said her boots were too high in the heel.

But no other style she would wear.

One day while out walking she stepped on a peel

Of banana, and uttering an ear-piercing squeal,

She frantically clutched at the air.

Her bustle was rubber, inflated, of course,

The fashion prevailing to meet;

And it turned out to be of her safety the source

For when she sat down on the sidewalk with force

She bounded right back to her feet.

In the foregoing maidens who stylish boots wear

This moral will easily find:

When sidewalks are icy or out of repair

A bustle of rubber, inflated with air,

Is handy to carry behind.

—Boston Courier.

Too Well Reconciled.

"My brother," said the pastor, laying his hand tenderly upon the shoulder of the weeping man, "I know not how to comfort you. You have lost the best and dearest friend in all this world, but the Bible teaches you resignation."

"Never!" howled the stricken postmaster, springing to his feet—"never! I'll hold on to the end of my term, and you haven't got enough influence in your whole party to put me out! Don't come around talking resignation to me!"—Burdette.

INDIANA STATE NEWS.

—Patents have been granted Indiana inventors as follows: George E. and M. H. Baker, Elkhart, fire kindler; John B. Cleveland, Indianapolis, wire-stretcher; Albert H. Gleason, Wabash, button fastening machine; Spencer Lewis, Boundary, assignor to Lake Huron Stone Company, Detroit, grindstone frame; Nathan H. Long, Muncie, automatic gate; John Murray, Fort Wayne, device for working upright folding-beds; John G. Shafer, Clay City, kitchen cabinet; Marmaduke M. M. Slatery, Woburn, Mass., assignor of one-half to Fort Wayne Electric Light Company, Fort Wayne, cut-out for electrical distribution apparatus.

—The old gas well on the DePauw property, in Harrison County, is being cased with galvanized iron piping, the old pipe having rusted out by the action of the salt water. It is estimated that there is now a 300-pound pressure of gas at the well, and it is thought that arrangements will be made to utilize the gas in the manufacture of salt, as there is an abundant supply of brine, the intention being to utilize the gas for fuel.

—The tenth well drilled at Marion for natural gas developed an immense flow of oil, the flow being accelerated by the force of the gas. The oil is thrown to the height of eighty feet, and the adjacent territory is drenched. The well will be allowed to spout until it is ascertained whether or not the flow is permanent. From five hundred to a thousand barrels is the estimate of the flow.

—The State Board of Health has received a communication from Dr. Moore, health officer of Warren County, stating that George W. Brown, of Thomas Station, in that county, has recently died of glanders. He had some horses that were affected with the disease, and took it from them. The matter is exciting much anxiety in the neighborhood, as many horses have been exposed.

—A sickening accident occurred near St. John, a hamlet in Warrick County, which resulted in the death of Reginald Fellow. Fellow was engaged in hauling sawlogs, and while driving through the woods one of the front wheels of the wagon went into a hole, throwing him and the log rolled over him, crushing his form into an almost shapeless mass.

—A team of horses owned by D. R. McKinney was killed at Marion under peculiar circumstances. One of the natural-gas arches was torn down by a passing load of straw, and the electric light wire, which was attached, dropped to the street. McKinney's team, following a few minutes later, stepped on the charged wire and both horses fell dead from the shock.

—A new bank, to be known as the German National Bank, will be opened in Vincennes soon. The principal movers are Messrs. Christian Hoffman, E. Bierhaus & Sons, Edward Watson, Wm. and Ernest Baker, Louis Meyer, Dr. G. R. Alsop, A. S. Heinekamp, Selman Gimbel, and Gerard Reiter.

—The funeral of the late J. F. Studebaker was the largest ever held in South Bend, notwithstanding the excessively cold weather. The factories all closed for the day out of respect to the memory of the deceased, who was the youngest of the four Studebaker brothers comprising the great wagon firm.

—Jack Macy, a brakeman, was killed at Danville, while attempting to step from a coal car to a flat. A lump of coal turned under his foot and he was thrown between the moving cars, the wheels of the flatcar passing over him and almost severing his head from his body. Macy lives at Terre Haute.

—James Longsdorf, a farmer living four miles east of Valparaiso, who home on the track of the Fort Wayne Railroad, was struck by a passenger train and so badly injured that he is thought to be dying. He leaves a wife and several children in comfortable circumstances.

—A Board of Trade has been organized at Hartford City, having for its object the up-building of the city and the accumulation of substantial manufactures. Fifteen leading citizens of the city were elected as a Board of Directors, and the organization started upon a substantial basis.

—Willie Hapner, aged 6 years, son of William P. Hapner, living at Union City, fell into the steaming vat at Hook Bros. Butter-tub Factory, and before he could be rescued he was so badly scalded that he died soon afterward. He was literally cooked alive.

—Peter Apgar, freight conductor of the Louisville, New Albany and Chicago Railroad, fell dead of heart disease in the yard at New Albany. He was going to order his train out, when he dropped dead. Deceased was 45 years old, and leaves a widow.

—Rev. M. B. McKinsey, of Frankfort, who has been holding a revival at Mt. Olivet Church, near Crawfordsville, baptized two young ladies, twins, at the same time, one with his right hand, and one with his left. This was the request of the young ladies.

—In 1848 a perpetual charter was given to the Council Grove Minute Men by the Legislature, and the meetings are still held yearly. Council Grove is in the southwestern part of Tippecanoe County, near Shawnee Mound.

—The 3-year-old son of Riter Bill, living near Tipton, fell into a kettle of boiling lye, and was burned in a horrible manner. He was a mass of unrecognizable flesh when taken from the kettle, and died in fearful agony.

—The Coroner's jury at Vincennes has rendered a verdict in the case of the tragic death of Miss Standfield, to the effect that she suicided by shooting.

—The Madison County Orphan Home has been found to be more of a prison than a protection. The unfortunate children are tortured worse than criminals, and the people have begun an investigation.

—Peter Cordeway was found near Columbia City, in the woods, dying from a gun-shot wound accidentally received while hunting rabbits.

—The body of Oliver Cardwell, who committed suicide at Indianapolis, has been stolen from the grave in Greenlawn Cemetery.

—While Frank Ray was rabbit-hunting on his farm, seven miles north of Fort Wayne, his shotgun was accidentally discharged and his face and head were so terribly injured that it is thought he must die.

—The barn of W. A. Cover, located one mile east of Birmingham, was burned. The live stock was saved, but hay, grain, and implements of the value of $2,200 were destroyed.

—The third floor of the wholesale house of O. W. Pierce & Co., at Lafayette, gave way, killing one man and seriously injuring another.

—At a regular session of the Seymour City Council, recently, a franchise for the construction and operation of water-works was granted to the Seymour Water-works Company.

—Lewis Berry, a miner at Brazil, was killed by falling slate.

EVENTS OF A WEEK.

THE OLD WORLD.

—A London dispatch says the fight between Kilrain and Smith was the gamest of recent years.

In the fifteenth round Kilrain dealt his adversary a terrific blow on the mouth with his right, which knocked Smith clean off his feet. This was the first knock-down, and when Smith went to his corner it was seen that his lip was split. After this round Kilrain had things pretty much his own way, hitting wherever he pleased, and knocking his man down repeatedly. Smith did everything he could to avoid punishment, and with this end in view went down so frequently as to call forth hisses from some of the spectators. In the eighteenth round Kilrain struck Smith a terrific blow on the left ear, causing a swelling as large as a hen's egg. The Englishman went down like a log. After that Smith was merely a chopping block for the American. Toward the close of the fight he became very groggy, and at one time looked as though he would faint from loss of blood. He never failed, however, to respond gamely to the call of time, but as soon as Kilrain rushed at him went down to avoid punishment. His seconds, too, did everything in their power to delay the fight until darkness should arrive and save their man from defeat. The American contingent urged that the fight be continued by candle-light in a barn near by, but the referee would not consent. Smith's ears were badly cut and swollen, and the right side of his face was terribly bruised. Kilrain had a lump on his forehead and his left eye was nearly closed, but otherwise he was in good shape.

John L. Sullivan has challenged Smith or Kilrain to fight for $5,000 a side.

—A Vienna dispatch says: "It is officially announced that no communications whatever have been exchanged by the Austrian and Russian governments concerning the present situation in Bulgaria, nor has Russia given any information regarding the movements of her troops on the frontier. It is considered still possible to arrange for the resignation of Prince Ferdinand and for the subsequent appointment of a regent in Bulgaria who will be agreeable to Russia."

POLITICAL POINTS.

—Secretary Fairchild has sent the following instructions to Collector Magone, of New York:

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS, New York: It is reported that the coal operators of the Lehigh region are about to import two thousand Belgian miners to take the places of the miners now on strike in that section. You are requested to be vigilant and see that no violations of the alien labor contract law are committed.

C. S. FAIRCHILD, Secretary.

—Major J. M. Wright, of Louisville, Ky., has been appointed Marshal of the United States Supreme Court in place of Colonel J. G. Nicolay, who has held that position about fifteen years.

—The administration tariff bill, which will go before the Ways and Means Committee, with the endorsement of Speaker Carlisle after the holiday recess, as the basis of revenue reform, contemplates a reduction of $62,000,000 of annual revenue, says a Washington special to the Chicago Herald.

Of this amount $50,000,000 is to come from reductions of duties, chiefly on manufactures, and $12,000,000 from adding wool, salt, lumber, coal, etc., to the free list. The bill aims at a very extensive revision of the present methods of administering the tariff law, and at remedying inconsistencies and inequalities in the law, as well as a general reduction of the high rate of tariff taxes. It proposes the substitution of specific for ad valorem rates, where the latter are difficult of enforcement. In the chemical, earthen and glassware schedules numerous judicious reductions are proposed. In metals material reductions on iron and steel are recommended. In the wool and woollens schedule, raw wool being made free, the rates on woolen fabrics are so reduced as to take away about $10,000,000 upon the basis of last year's importations. Inconsistencies as to rates on worsted and woolen cloths are corrected, and here occur some of the most important changes proposed in the bill. The bill embraces the schedules prepared for Congress last winter by Secretary Fairchild, substituting specific for ad valorem duties on silks, gloves, and embroideries. It also includes the Hewitt plan for reform of the customs administrative service, with some changes and additions suggested by Treasury experience since Mr. Hewitt's bill was first introduced. The measure, it is said, is the result of inestimable labor and care, and is the outgrowth of years of study and experience on the part of Treasury experts.

—Maj. J. M. Wright of Louisville, Ky., has been appointed Marshal of the United States Supreme Court to succeed John G. Nicolay, who retires to devote himself to literary work. The position is a life one with a salary of $3,000 a year. Maj. Wright is a graduate of West Point, and was at one time on Gen. Buell's staff. He was for some time an editorial writer on the Courier-Journal. Afterwards he was made Superintendent of the Board of Trade, and later President of the Southern Exposition Company.

FINANCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL.

—Owing to a water famine and the shortage in the corn crop, the farmers in the vicinity of Clinton, Ill., are disposing of their stock as rapidly as possible at remarkably low figures.

—In their weekly review of the condition of trade, R. G. Dun & Co., of New York, say:

Business throughout the country is active for the season, and though collections at some points are slow, and credits are strained, the reports are generally satisfactory. But uncertainty and hesitation affect important branches of production, and the industrial outlook does not improve. Currency is generally in good supply, even where payments are slowest and credits most strained. Speculation has been less active, and the general level of prices, though higher than a week ago in most speculative markets, has on the whole declined a little. Since July 1 the average prices in speculative markets has advanced 15 1/2 per cent., with the tendency still upward, while the average advance in all other prices has been 6 1/2 per cent. with the later tendency downward. These facts indicate activity in trading, rather than satisfactory relations of supply and demand. It is an encouraging fact that singularly little disturbance has yet appeared in regions where real-estate speculation was active, and the payments of interest on mortgages do not yet seem unusually delayed, even when crops have been short.

—The total value of the imports of merchandise into the country during the present year is placed at $712,084,918, and the exports have amounted to $727,460,625.

—A real estate company is said to have secured a title to 55,000,000 acres of land in eleven States of Mexico, which will be offered to immigrants upon very advantageous terms. The Government favors the enterprise, which it is thought will bring in many settlers from this country and Europe.

—A number of capitalists of New York and Chicago who do a large telegraph business have agreed to build lines between the two cities for their own use. A joint-stock company will be formed, with a capital of $500,000. The expenses of operating will be about $100,000 yearly, and this divided among the fifty stockholders will make the cost to each $2,000. The Western Union charges $15,000 for a wire.

FIRES AND ACCIDENTS.

—A number of lives were lost by the blizzard which swept over Kansas and Nebraska last week. A Lincoln, Neb., dispatch says:

In the recently organized county of Perkins the death of a man and a boy is reported. They were attempting to make their ranch, twenty miles from Olathe, when the storm overpowered them. Both were frozen to death. Another man named John Grant, who had been on railroad construction work on the Black Hills extension of the Burlington & Missouri River Road, was found dead a mile out from camp. On the Kansas line no dead have been discovered, although suffering is reported as very severe.

A Kansas City dispatch says:

Reports from Leavenworth, Kas., indicate much suffering in the West from lack of fuel. The demands on the mines are far greater than can be filled, and messages come in hourly demanding and appealing for fuel. Similar reports come from Parsons and Topeka. Farmers are burning corn, furniture, and parts of their houses to keep from freezing. Great distress is reported from Mead and Clark counties, where several persons have been frozen to death. At Dighton a mother and three children sought refuge at a neighbor's, and were frozen to death while crossing the prairie.

—The residence of James Loudy, of Lima, Ohio, was blown to pieces by an explosion of natural gas, and Loudy, his wife, and three children fatally injured. The house had just been piped, and the gas, leaking, ignited, with the terrible result mentioned above.

—By the explosion of a naphtha tank in the office of the New Jersey Gas Light Company, Bryan, N. J., the office boy was killed and two clerks injured, one of them dangerously. The office was shattered.

—A St. Paul dispatch says that a passenger train on the St. Paul and Duluth Road was derailed below Mahtowa, the engine, baggage car, and one coach going down a twenty-foot embankment. Engineer Thomas, of St. Paul, was killed, and these hurt: Mike Lynch, fireman; left hip broken. R. A. Gray, of Duluth, a lumberman; head and hand badly hurt. G. A. Lundborg, of Duluth, side and groin injured. G. E. Kerr, of Titusville, Pa., chest and arm bruised and head cut. H. B. Goetche, of Titusville, Pa., back and leg hurt. A. G. Cattell, member of the New York produce exchange, nose broken, left side hurt, and hurt internally. Paymaster Coleman, head slightly hurt.

—Ed Johnson, colored, living near Cincinnati, placed some dynamite cartridges in the oven of his stove to thaw. Soon after a terrific explosion took place, nearly destroying his house, killing his 18-year-old daughter, an infant 1 year old, and seriously injuring Johnson and his wife.

—The freight steamer San Vincente, plying between San Francisco and Santa Cruz, took fire off Pigeon Point, about four miles south of the Golden Gate, and burned to the water's edge. The crew consisted of nineteen officers and men, eleven of whom lost their lives. When the fire was discovered the men became panic-stricken. Most of them jumped into one of the boats and before it could be lowered the tackle which held it burned away and the boat fell, throwing the men into the water.

—An accidental discharge of fourteen thousand gallons of naphtha into one of the Rochester (N. Y.) main sewers produced a remarkable disaster.

The heavy stone covering of a man-hole of the Platt street sewer was blown off by a terrific explosion, and almost immediately another explosion occurred beneath the Clinton flouring-mill on Mill street. The upheavals were followed by a huge line of flame that burst out with great fury, and belched sixty feet high. The Clinton mill, owned by J. H. Foote, took fire first, and the flames spread quickly to the Washington mill, owned by J. H. Hines & Co., and the Jefferson mill, owned by J. G. Davis & Co. These three mills and contents were destroyed, involving a loss of over $200,000. The first explosion was followed quickly by others along Mill and Platt streets, and at several points on West avenue, making over forty in all, and extending along four miles of sewer. In each case the manholes were all blown to pieces, and in many places flames shot up and continued to burn fiercely for several minutes. The explosions were so violent as to hurl rock into buildings and against pedestrians, causing a panic throughout the whole region traversed by the sewers. An immense crowd of people was attracted by the unusual occurrence, and they were no sooner forced to flee for their lives from one street to another than they were followed by explosions that spread terror everywhere. Horses ran away, women fainted in the streets, and street cars were thrown from the tracks. The casualties caused by the explosions number three dead and over a dozen injured, some of them fatally, it is thought.

—A terrible disaster happened near Freeport, Ill., to a Minnesota and Northwestern train, en route for the East with a large excursion party bound for Canadian points. The train encountered a broken rail, and the cars, seven in number, were all hurled down a twelve-foot embankment on either side. One of the cars was thrown fully fifty feet and turned completely over endways. All the other cars but one were thrown over on their sides down the bank. There were nearly 150 passengers on board the train, upward of thirty of whom were injured more or less seriously. Two, it is thought, were fatally hurt. One of the coaches caught fire, but the flames were extinguished by the train men before they gained any headway. Twelve physicians were summoned from Freeport by special train, and ministered to the needs of the injured.

—In an accident which occurred on the Wisconsin Central near Fidelity, Wis., one man was killed. His name was M. Montie. He got on the train at Bapturnut, Wis., and attempted to get out of a window when he felt the uneven motion of the train, but he was caught under the car and crushed to a jelly. Conductor C. H. Greenfield, who was passing through the train, was caught in the shower of falling debris, and held a prisoner between two timbers. He was released, but is thought to be fatally hurt.

CONGRESSMAN MOFFATT DEAD.

—Representative Seth C. Moffatt, of Traverse City, Mich., died at Providence Hospital, in Washington, on the 21st of December. Mr. Moffatt died almost alone and unattended. It was so late when his friends at the capital realized his condition that Mrs. Moffatt was not sent for in time to get there before her husband's death. His colleagues of the Michigan delegation hardly seemed to be aware that he was ill, and Congressman Wade, of Missouri, was almost the only one of his associates in the House who looked after his comfort at the Providence Hospital.

Seth C. Moffatt was born at Battle Creek, Mich., and was 46 years old. Physically he was a slight man, with sharp features and a somewhat straggling and wiry black beard. He was a man of much energy, and by reason of much legislative experience was a valuable member of Congress. He had been very successful in political life, and had been favored with prominent public positions throughout his entire manhood. In the fall of 1880 he entered the literary department of Michigan University, afterward changing to the law department, from which he graduated immediately after leaving the University he removed to the then remote northern parts of the State and began his public career at the age of twenty-five as Prosecuting Attorney and Circuit Court Commissioner of Leelanaw County, which office he held four years. He was State Senator from 1870 to 1873; member of a commission to revise the Constitution in 1873; Register of the Traverse City Land Office from 1874 to 1878; Prosecuting Attorney of Grand Traverse County until 1881. He was a member and Speaker of the State House of Representatives of 1881 and 1882, a delegate to the Republican National Convention of 1884, and was serving his second term in Congress.

A Stranger in the Supreme Court at Washington.

"The apparel oft proclaims the man," said Polonius. "He was judicious in not substituting always for 'off.' It has been found that the finest bird is not always the one that wears the finest feathers."

Years ago the staid citizens of Washington were surprised one morning at the appearance of a strange figure in their streets. He dressed in a pair of old corduroys, ripped at the ankle for convenience in rolling up, a drab overcoat, much the worse for wear, with several capes, worn out, untied shoes, and a "shocking hat."

Solemnly he walked the streets, six feet in height, leading a little back rough-haired mare, her tail matted with burs. A pair of small saddle-bags hung over the saddle, in which were stuffed papers and crackers and cheese. Stopping at an obscure hotel, he put up his mare and relieved himself of his "top coat." Into one of the pockets of a short gray linsey roundabout he stuffed his lunch and into the other a bundle of law papers, tied with a hemp string. Inquiring the way to the supreme court, he walked forth, the wonder of the negroes and idle boys. Arrived at the court-room, he sauntered within the bar, took a seat, and began munching his bread and cheese. The lawyers and spectators smiled at the awkward countryman on his first visit to the capital. Soon a case was called which seemed to interest the countryman. It involved the title to a large tract of land lying in the "Green River Country," of Kentucky.

A Mr. Taylor, of Virginia, a leading lawyer, began his argument by a statement of facts. All at once the countryman stopped munching, and tapping the counsel on the back, corrected one of his "facts." The lawyer paused, frowned at the busybody, and went on. The countryman resumed eating, and in a few moments again corrected the counsel: "I beg the court to protect me from the impertinence of that person," said Taylor, showing much irritation. Taylor finished his powerful argument, and, then, to the amazement of the spectators, the bar, and the judge, the stranger rose to reply. His manner was wholly changed. He stood as if he had practiced in that court all his professional life. His argument was so clear and forcible, and his reply to the opposing counsel so masterly that the bar and court looked as though they doubted their ears and eyes. Mr. Taylor appeared paralyzed. The perspiration rolled from his forehead and face in great drops. The rustic he had sneered at seemed a legal giant. Every one asked, "Who is he?"

It was Joe Daviess, one of the best lawyers and most eloquent orators of Kentucky, as eccentric as he was gifted. Scarcely one present knew him personally, but all had heard of his brilliant reputation.

Where the Moonshiners Work.

The Walkup brothers, Tolbert and Thomas, whom we arrested next, had the best illicit still I have yet seen. It was located in a room of about the dimensions of 60 by 40 feet. It was dug in the ground at the head of a ravine. The opening was covered with chestnut stanchions, and over these was placed the earth from the excavation. The mouth was covered with brush, which made the concealment complete, save for the smoke arising above it through a rent. The still was of recent construction, and if the Walkups had not been molested they would have gotten rid of the tell-tale smoke by piping it to their kitchen, about one hundred yards distant, and running it out through the chimney. They had completed their plans and were on the point of putting them into execution when we interrupted operations. There was a third party in the conduct of the still, but he got away with the first product the night before our arrival. We found 1,500 gallons of beer and unbroken mash for about 500 gallons more, besides 120 gallons of singlings, or low wines. They were hurrying their product by high temperature, and claim that they would have had fifty gallons of a salable article in a few days.—Collector Lindsay, in Louisville Post.

SELM L, Emperor of the Turks, conquered Egypt in 1517, and by that conquest the latter became a tributary State of the former, and so has remained with some modifications, to the present time.

RUSSIAN WEDDING CUSTOMS.

Ceremonies Regarded by the Bride, Groom, and Their Guests.

In the higher circles, almost immediately after the betrothal, workmen begin to make the trousseau. According to an old Russian rule, the bridegroom makes his bride a present of a wedding costume, as well as jewelry. The dowry of a Russian maiden will consist of a full wardrobe, household linen, kitchen utensils, china, furniture, and a piano. The latter is said to be indispensable. They do not care for plated articles, but require that everything shall be of solid silver. People in very moderate circumstances begin early to lay by something for the dowry of their daughters. Wedding presents are seldom given by friends. Should a young wife die without leaving any children behind, her dowry can be lawfully claimed by her parents. The husband can retain only the bed and the picture with which his deceased wife was ceremonially blessed.

Sometimes young ladies form parties to help the intended bride make her clothes. It is said to be a popular belief that if any part of the trousseau forming the dowry be unpicked the young couple will pick quarrels when they are tied together.

The month of May is supposed to be an unlucky month for marrying. The name of the month resembles in sound the Russian verb "to worry," hence, in part, the superstition. A more likely explanation is this, that as the winter breaks up in May and the snow melts, leaving much garbage and filth to fester in the hot sun, a great amount of sickness is prevalent, and the month comes to be regarded as unlucky and trying.

The guests are far more numerous at a Russian than an English wedding. They are invited to be "assistants" at a wedding. The witness, who is generally the grandest of the "connections" of the family, is the most important person. He pays the priest's fees. Then comes the ladies of honor and the bridesmaids. The latter have to purchase sweetmeats for the bridesmaids. The "boyarin," who carries the sacred picture of Christ in silver and gilt, is generally a little boy. When the party arrives at the church, it is his duty to hand the two pictures to the "reader," who places them behind the "royal gates" or leaning against the altar screen.

The old nurse, or housekeeper, superintends the carrying of the dowry from the house of the bride to that of her future husband, and arranges everything for the use of the bride. There is no law as to the number of bridesmaids or their costumes, and their dresses are not all alike.

On the eve of the wedding-day sometimes a "farewell girls' party" is given. No gentlemen attend this. All those present must be from the unmarried. They sing chorusses, chase each other in the garden and romp to their heart's content. They devour any amount of tea, icecream, lemonade, and sweetmeats. After supper they say farewell, and leave the intended bride very exhausted in view of the ceremonies of the following day. The old custom is for the betrothed pair to fast (eat nothing) on the day of their marriage until the ceremony, which, in the family of a noble, always takes place in the evening. This makes the day most tiresome to a girl. The bride distributes her cast off girlish toys, ribbons, and jewelry to her companions. These things are called "maiden beauty." The peasant girls cut up and divide among their companions on their wedding day the long ribbons which are fastened at the end of the plait of hair which hangs down the back. The peasants, immediately after their marriage, have the hair braided in two plaits and wound around the head, then covered with a sort of tight cap tied behind, or with a cotton or silk handkerchief. When at Pargola, in Finland, I often saw the unmarried girls trooping along in the eventide, hand in hand, singing their weird melodies, and friends told me to notice the difference in the style of the hair of the unmarried and married. The married women have in addition, under the invariable handkerchief, a little piece of linen, a lappet about the size of a florin, hanging over the center of the forehead. This is more evident proof of marriage than wearing a wedding ring.

When the women begin to braid up they sing part of a wedding song:—

"Ah! my braid, my braid of maiden hair; Ah! soon it shall be divided in two!"
—Cassell's Family Magazine.

THE GINGER VICE.

Few people are aware of the extent of a peculiar kind of dissipation known as ginger drinking, says a writer in the Brooklyn Citizen. The article used is the essence of ginger, such as is put up in several proprietary preparations known to the trade, or the alcoholic extract ordinarily sold over the druggist's counter. Having once acquired a liking for it, the victim becomes as much a slave to his appetite as the opium eater, or the votary of cocaine. In its effect it is much the most injurious of all such practices; for in the course of time it destroys the coating of the stomach, and dooms its victim to a slow and agonizing death. The druggist who told me about the thing says that all ginger essence contains about one hundred per cent. alcohol, and whisky less than fifty per cent., the former is therefore twice as intoxicating. In fact, this is the reason why it is used by hardened old toppers whose stomachs are no longer capable of intoxicating stimulation from whisky. They need the more powerful agency of the pure alcohol in the ginger extract. He told me he had two regular customers, one a woman, who had contracted the habit through employing the ginger on several occasions for stomach pains. The relief it afforded her was so grateful that she took to it upon any recurrence of her trouble. She found, too, that the slight exhilaration of the alcohol banished mental depression. In this way she got to using it regularly, and finally to such excess that she was often grossly intoxicated. Large doses produce a quiet stupor; additional doses induce a profound lethargic slumber, which lasts in some cases for twenty-four hours. His other customer was a pedler, who came at a certain hour every morning, bought a four-ounce bottle, and drank its contents by noon. The man craved the stuff so ardently that he was unable to go about his business until he had set the machinery of his stomach in operation, and started the circulation of the blood by means of the fiery draught. He says that the habit is well known to the drug trade.

APROPOS of the phonograph, a story is current that is good enough to be true—we will not say too good, since a clergyman is its author. The lords of the admiralty have been down to Portsmouth inspecting the Vernon. The phonograph was turned on for their edification, and the first words this treasure of vocal sound yielded to the eager ears of the naval lords were: "We want more pay; we want more pay." Upon investigation it was discovered that this was the bottled up voice of the lieutenants. If, as we believe, the phonograph is still too far from perfect to disclose the identity of the particular voice that confides its secrets to it, this mode of petitioning for favors beats the round robin. The demand for phonographs will probably improve after this. —London Daily News.

THE treaty of Westphalia, which was made in 1648, is one of the most important compacts of its kind in the history of Europe, including as it did the great Thirty Years' War.

Is This What Ails You?

Do you have dull, heavy headache, obstruction of the nasal passages, discharges falling from the head into the throat, sometimes profuse, watery, and acrid; at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody and putrid; eyes weak, watery, and inflamed; ringing in the ears, deafness, hacking or coughing to clear the throat, expectoration of offensive matter, together with scabs from ulcers; voice changed and nasal twang; breath offensive; smell and taste impaired; is there a sensation of dizziness, with mental depression, a hacking cough and general debility? If you have all, or any considerable number of these symptoms, you are suffering from Nasal Catarrh. The more complicated your disease has become, the greater the number and diversity of symptoms. Thousands of cases annually, without manifesting half of the above symptoms, result in consumption, and end in the grave. No disease is so common, more deceptive and dangerous, or less understood, or more unsuccessfully treated by physicians. The manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy offer, in good faith, a reward of $500 for a case of this disease which they cannot cure. The Remedy is sold by druggists, at only 50 cents.

A Remarkable Octogenarian.

"Mr. Editor, I hear that you are publishing the pictures and biographies of pioneer settlers of the State?"

"I have been doing so, but I've exhausted the materials. All the representative citizens have been noticed."

"Well, I'd like to have you say a few words about my father."

"How old is he?"

"Eighty-five."

"Aha! I suppose he is as lively and energetic as he was forty years ago?"

"No, he isn't. He's as weak as a cat."

"Sir? Do you speak truth? Can it be that he doesn't chop down large trees unaided, walk twenty miles before breakfast, or break the wildest horse?"

"Certainly he doesn't. He never leaves his chair."

"And can it be that his vision is not as keen as a hawk's?"

"He's almost blind."

"But his mental faculties are surely unimpaired?"

"No, sir, he's quite simple and is in his dotage."

"My dear sir, send me a large photograph of him that I may have a steel plate made from it; and I will engage the editor of The Century to write his biography. A man like that deserves some honor. So he never chops down trees? Well, well." —Nebraska State Journal.

In General Debility, Emaciation,

Consumption, and wasting in children, Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites is a most valuable food and medicine. It creates an appetite for food, strengthens the nervous system, and builds up the body. Please read: "I tried Scott's Emulsion on a young man whom physicians at times gave up hope. Since he began using the Emulsion his cough has ceased, gained flesh and strength, and from all appearances his life will be prolonged many years." —JOHN SULLIVAN, Hospital Steward, Morganza, Pa.

If a cough disturbs your sleep, take Pisco's Cure for Consumption, and rest well.

Rheumatism

We doubt if there is, or can be, a specific remedy for rheumatism; but thousands who have suffered its pains have been greatly benefited by Hood's Sarsaparilla. If you have failed to find relief, try this great remedy. It corrects the acidity of the blood which is the cause of the disease, and builds up the whole system.

"I was afflicted with rheumatism twenty years. Previous to 1883 I found no relief, but grew worse, until I was almost helpless. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me more good than all the other medicine I ever had." —H. T. BALCOM, Shirley Village, Mass.

SYMPTOMS OF CATARRH.—Dull, heavy headache, obstruction of the nasal passages, discharges falling from the head into the throat, sometimes profuse, watery, and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody and putrid; the eyes are weak, watery, and inflamed; there is ringing in the ears, deafness, hacking or coughing to clear the throat, expectoration of offensive matter, together with scabs from ulcers; the voice is changed and has a nasal twang; the breath is offensive; smell and taste are impaired; there is a sensation of dizziness, with mental depression, a hacking cough and general debility. Only a few of the above-named symptoms are likely to be present in any one case. Thousands of cases annually, without manifesting half of the above symptoms, result in consumption, and end in the grave. No disease is so common, more deceptive and dangerous, or less understood by physicians. By its mild, soothing, and healing properties, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures the worst cases of Catarrh, "cold in the head," Coryza, and Catarrhal Headache. Sold by druggists everywhere; 50 cents.

"Untold Agony from Catarrh."

Prof. W. HAUSNER, the famous mesmerist, of Ithaca, N. Y., writes: "Some ten years ago I suffered untold agony from chronic nasal catarrh. My family physician gave me up as incurable, and said I must die. My case was such a bad one, that every day, towards sunset, my voice would become so hoarse I could barely speak above a whisper. In the morning my coughing and clearing of my throat would almost strangle me. By the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, in three months, I was a well man, and the cure has been permanent."

"Constantly Hawking and Spitting."

THOMAS J. RUSHING, Esq., 2201 Pine Street, St. Louis, Mo., writes: "I was a great sufferer from catarrh for three years. At times I could hardly breathe, and was constantly hawking and spitting, and for the last eight months could not breathe through the nostrils. I thought nothing could be done for me. Luckily, I was advised to try Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, and I am now a well man. I believe it to be the only sure remedy for catarrh now manufactured, and one has only to give it a fair trial to experience astounding results and a permanent cure."

Three Bottles Cure Catarrh.

ELI ROBBINS, Runyan P. O., Columbia Co., Pa., says: "My daughter had catarrh when she was five years old, very badly. I saw Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy advertised, and procured a bottle for her, and soon saw that it helped her; a third bottle effected a permanent cure. She is now eighteen years old and sound and hearty."

FRIDAY DECEMBER 30, 1887.

Frank and Joe Scholes, of Fort Wayne, spent Christmas under the parental roof.

Stanley Van Fleit was at home over last Sunday. He is now night operator at Alida, a station near Chicago, and is doing well.

Levi Deam, of Denmark, Ohio, is now visiting his daughter, Mrs. Dan Baker. Mrs. Baker had not seen her father for fifteen years.

Owing to the series of meetings now in progress at the Methodist church, Rev. Fryberger will preach in the Lutheran church at 2 o'clock next Sunday afternoon, instead of in the evening.

You have heard of the man who cut out a limb to save it off, and we all limb felt, as a natural consequence, he came down with it. That was about the fix Mr. Van Fleit was in the other day. He was sawing in the river, and stood on a cake of ice. He sawed it off, and then took a plunge into the river. It was a cold day for a bath.

DEMOCRAT'S MONTHLY for January is ready. The New Year with the same enterprise that has so marked its progress during the past year. We would advise all of our lady readers to investigate the merits of this thorough Family Magazine, which contains as much instruction and amusement as a dozen ordinary magazines. Published by W. Jenning, Democrat, 15 East 14th Street, New York City.

DON'T BLAME ME.—You cannot afford to waste time in experimenting when your lungs are in danger. Consumption always seems at first only a cold. Do not permit any dealer to impose on you with some cheap imitation of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, but be sure you get the genuine. Because he can make more profit he may tell you he has something just as good, or just the same. Don't be deceived, but insist upon getting Dr. King's New Discovery, which is guaranteed to give relief in all Throat, Lung, and Chest affections. Trial bottles free at W. C. Patterson's Drug Store.

A sly wedding occurred at this place Sunday evening, and although it had been whispered about for some time, that such an event was likely to take place, yet it was all done so on the quiet, that it really took everybody by surprise. It was the marriage of two of St. Joe's most popular young people, Mr. Don Van Fleit to Miss Josie Smith. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. A. Thomas, at the residence of the bride's mother, on Christmas evening, Dec. 25, 1887, at eight o'clock. The happy couple took the eleven o'clock train for Chicago, where they have been this week. The News wishes them a whole world full of happiness, with an occasional squall to remind them that life is not all sunshine, but that clouds and adversities will arise, which afterward often break away, into a brighter happier day.

Charley Kagey, of Hicksville, has been spending the week with his grandparents.

Sam Bair and wife, of Tiffin, are visiting friends and relatives in and near this place.

Misses Minnie and Lena Zimmerman, of Auburn, have been visiting here this week.

Several couples from this place were entertained by Mrs. J. D. Leighty, of St. Joe, on Wednesday.

The ladies of the Methodist church will hold a social in Walters' hall, Saturday evening, Dec. 31st, 1887.

Mrs. Webb and Miss Lizzie Johnson, of Fort Wayne, have been the guests of Mrs. J. W. Dills a part of this week.

The Missionary Society, of the Lutheran church, will meet at the home of Mrs. Eli Fales, Thursday at 10 A. M. All are cordially invited to attend.

The debate at the school house last Monday evening, was highly interesting and the addresses showed that each disputant understood his subject perfectly.

Flornce Smith and Miss Edith Oberholtzer, were united in marriage on Christmas, at Maysville, by Rev. Shaffer. The Spencerville correspondent extends congratulations.

Mrs. W. B. McClaran, of Sturgis, stopped off at this place Monday night, on her way home from North Baltimore, where she had been to attend the funeral of her husband's father.

Last Tuesday evening the Masonic lodge installed their officers for the ensuing year. Quite a number of invited guests were present at the installation, after which a Banquet was given at the hotel.

Willis Carey and William Lake returned home from Valparaiso last Saturday, to spend their holiday vacation. We understand that Willis Carey will not return, but will teach a school in Allen county.

Both of the oyster suppers were fairly well attended last Saturday evening, and a handsome little profit was netted to each society.

A gentleman inquired at the Drugstore the other day for a left-handed moustache cup. The question now arises, did he want it for a left-handed man, or a man with a left-handed moustache.

If some of our good friends who think that a saloon is a benefit to a town, had been in the vicinity of Washler's model saloon on Saturday night, we think they would have changed their minds in regard to the matter.

W. B. McClaren, formerly agent at Hicksville, passed through here on Tuesday, on his way home from the burial of his father, Dr. McClaren, of North Baltimore, Ohio. He was a prominent physician of that place, and died suddenly on Friday of last week, the funeral occurring on Sunday afternoon. W. B.'s many friends in St. Joe will be sorry to hear of his sad bereavement.

Last week's Auburn Courier contained the following complimentary item in regard to the schools of this place: "Supt. Merica is visiting the schools of Concord township this week. He finds them in excellent condition, especially the village school at St. Joe. He regards the new principal there as one of the most earnest and energetic workers we have." He is an Ohio man, but admits that Indiana has the best school system.

The Christmas festivities at this place passed off pleasantly, and peace and good will prevailed. The Methodist Sunday school had a ship so large, that at a given signal, it sailed into the presence of the children, all freighted down with the nicest of presents for everybody. The singing, which, for a change, proved to be a pleasant success, and was quite a curiosity for the little ones, whose eyes fairly sparkled with delight at the sight of so many beautiful presents. The Disciples had a very interesting song service on Sunday evening, which was well attended.

We were four days late in getting out last week's edition of the News, and while we had a good reason for the delay, it wasn't equal to the following excuse which a western editor gave, for getting his paper out late:

"Our paper is two days late this week, owing to an accident to our press. When we started to run the edition Wednesday night, as usual one of the guy-ropes gave way, allowing the forward gilder-fluke to fall and break as it struck the flunker flopper. This, of course, as any one who knows anything about a press will readily understand, left the gang-plank with only the dip-flap to support it, which also dropped and broke off the wrapper-check. This loosened the fluking from between the ramrod and the flibbersnatcher, which caused the trouble. The report that the delay was caused by over-indulgence in intoxicating stimulants by ourself, is a tissue of falsehoods; the peeled appearance of our right eye being caused by our going into the hatchway of the press in our anxiety to start it, and pulling the coupling after the slap-bang was broken, which caused the dingus to rise up and welt us in the optic. We expect a brand-new gilder-fluke on the early afternoon train."

NATIVITY OF CHRIST.

Rev. Dr. Talmage's Christmas Sermon at the Tabernacle.

It Was Not Accident That Christ Was Born in a Stable—The Alleviator of Brutal Suffering as Well as the Redeemer of Man.

BROOKLYN, Dec. 25.—Services to-day at the Brooklyn Tabernacle were jubilant. Professors Browne and Ali, with organ and cornet, were unusually powerful, and Mrs. Florence Rice-Knox sang three solos. The thousands of people who packed the church and all the approaches seemed to join in the great chorus:

He shall reign from pole to pole
With limitless sway;
He shall reign when, like a scroll,
Yonder heavens have passed away.

Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D., took as the subject of his sermon, "The Barn and Its Surroundings." His text was taken from Luke ii, 15: "The shepherds said one to another, let us now go even unto Bethlehem and see this thing which is come to pass." Dr. Talmage said:

One thousand years of the world's existence rolled painfully and wearily along, and no Christ. Two thousand years, and no Christ. Three thousand years, and no Christ. Four thousand years, and no Christ. "Give us a Christ," had cried Assyrian and Persian and Chaldean and Egyptian civilizations, but the lips of the earth and the lips of the sky made no answer. The world had already been affluent of genius. Among poets had appeared Homer and Theopis and Aristophanes and Sophocles and Euripides and Alexis and Eschylus, yet no Christ to be the most poetic figure of the centuries. Among historians had appeared Herodotus and Xenophon and Thucydides, but no Christ from whom all history was to date backward and forward—B. C. and A. D. Among conquerors Camillus and Manlius and Regulus and Xantippus and Hannibal and Scipio and Pompey and Caesar, yet no Christ who was to be conqueror of earth and heaven.

But the slow century and the slow year and the slow month and the slow hour at last arrived. The world had had matins or concerts in the morning and vespers or concerts in the evening, but now it is to have a concert at midnight. The black window shutters of a December night were thrown open, and some of the best singers of a world where they all sing stood there, and putting back the drapery of cloud chanted a peace anthem, until all the echoes of hill and valley applauded and entered the hallelujah chorus.

At last the world has a Christ, and just the Christ it needs. Come, let us go into that Christmas scene as though we had never before worshipped at the manger. Here is a Madonna worth looking at. I wonder not that the most frequent name in all lands and in all Christian centuries is Mary. And there are Marys in palaces and Marys in cabins, and though German and French and Italian and Spanish and English pronounce it differently, they are all namesakes of the one whom we find on a bed of straw with her pale face against the soft cheek of Christ in the night of the Nativity. All the great painters have tried on canvas to present Mary and her child and the incidents of that most famous night of the world's history. Raphael in three different masterpieces celebrated them. Tintoret and Guirlandio surpassed themselves in the "Adoration of the Magi." Correggio needed to do nothing more than his "Madonna" to become immortal. The "Madonna of the Lily," by Leonardo da Vinci, will kindle the admiration of all ages. Murillo never won greater triumph by his pencil than in his presentation of the "Holy Family." But all the galleries of Dresden are forgotten when I think of the small room of that gallery containing the "Sistine Madonna." Yet all of them were copies of St. Matthew's "Madonna" and Luke's "Madonna," the inspired Madonna of the Old Book, which we had put into our hands when we were infants and that we hope to have under our heads when we die.

Behold, in the first place, that on the first night of Christ's life God honored the brute creation. You cannot get into that Bethlehem barn without going past the camels, the mules, the dogs, the oxen. The brutes of that stable heard the first cry of the infant Lord. Some of the old painters represent the oxen and camels kneeling that night before the new born babe. And well might they kneel. Have you ever thought that Christ came among other things to alleviate the sufferings of the brute creation? Was it not appropriate that he should, during the first few days and nights of his life on earth be surrounded by the dumb beasts whose moan and plaint and bellowing have for ages been a prayer to God for the arresting of their tortures and the righting of their wrongs? It did not merely "happen so" that the unintelligent creatures of God should have been that night in close neighborhood. Not a kennel in all the centuries, not a bird's nest, not a worn-out horse on towpath, not a herd freezing in the poorly built cow-pen, not a freight car in summer time bringing the beaves to market without water through 1,000 miles of agony, not a surgeon's room witnessing the struggles of fox or rabbit or pigeon or dog in the horrors of vivisection but has an interest in the fact that Christ was born in a stable surrounded by brutes. He remembers that night, and the prayer he heard in their pitiful moan. He will answer in the punishment of those who maltreat the dumb brutes. They surely have as much right in the world as we have.

In the first chapter of Genesis you may see that they were placed on the earth before man was, the fish and fowl created the fifth day, and the quadruped the morning of the sixth day, and man not until the afternoon of that day. The whale, the eagle, the lion, and all the lesser creatures of their kind were predecessors of the human family. They have the world by right of possession. They have also paid rent for the places they occupied. What an army of defense all over the land are the faithful watch dogs. And who can tell what the world owes to horse, and camel, and ox for transportation? And robin and lark have by the cantatas with which they have filled orchard and forest, more than paid for the few grains they have picked up for their sustenance. When you abuse creatures of God you strike its creator, and you insult the Christ who, though He might have been welcomed into life by princes, and taken His first infantile slumber amid Tyrian plush and canopied couches, and rippling waters from royal aqueducts dripping into basins of ivory and pearl, chose to be born on the level with a cow's horn, or a camel's hoof, or a dog's nostril, that He might be the alleviator of brutal suffering as well as the redeemer of man.

Standing then, as I imagine now I do, in that Bethlehem night, with an infant Christ on the one side and the speechless creatures of God on the other, I cry: Look out how you strike the rowl into that horse's side. Take off that curbed bit from that bleeding mouth. Remove that saddle from that raw back. Shoot not for fun that bird that is too small for food. Forget not to put water into the cage of that canary. Throw out some crumbs to those birds caught too far north in the winter's inclemency. Arrest that man who is making that one horse draw a load heavy enough for three. Rush in upon that scene where boys are torturing a cat or transfixing butterfly and grasshopper. Drive not off that old robin, for her nest is a mother's cradle and under her wing there may be three or four prima donnas of the sky in training. And in your families and in your schools teach the coming generation more mercy than the present generation has even shown in this marvelous Bible picture of the Nativity, while you point out to them the angel, show them also the camel, and while they hear the celestial chant let them also hear the cow's moan. No more did Christ show interest in the botanical world when he said, "Consider the lilies," than He showed sympathy for the ornithological when he said, "Behold the fowls of the air," and the quadruped world when he allowed himself to be called in one place a lion and in another place a lamb. Meanwhile, may the Christ of the Bethlehem cattle-pen have mercy on the suffering stock yards that are preparing diseased and fevered meat for our American households.

Behold also in this Bible scene how on that Christmas night God honored childhood. Christ might have made His first visit to our world in a cloud, as He will descend on His next visit in a cloud. In what a chariot of illuminated vapor He might have rolled down the sky, escorted by mounted cavalry with lightning of drawn sword. Elijah had a carriage of fire to take him up; why not Jesus a carriage of fire to fetch Him down? Or, over the arched bridge of a rainbow the Lord might have descended. Or Christ might have had His mortality built up on earth out of the dust of a garden, as was Adam, in full manhood at the start, without the introductory feebleness of infancy. No, no! Childhood was to be honored by that advent. He must have a child's light limbs and a child's dimpled hand, and a child's beaming eye, and a child's flaxen hair, and babyhood was to be honored for all time to come, and a cradle was to mean more than a grave. Mighty God! May the reflection of that one child's face be seen in all infantile places. Enough have all those fathers and mothers on hand if they have a child in the house. A throne, a crown, a scepter, a kingdom under charge. Be careful how you strike him across the head, jarring the brain. What you say to him will be centennial and millennial, and 100 years and 1,000 years cannot stop the echo and re-echo. Do not say "it is only a child;" rather say "it is only an immortal." It is only a masterpiece of Jehovah. It is only a being that shall outlive sun and moon and star, and ages quadrillions. God has infinite resources, and can give presents of great value, but when He wants to give the richest possible gift to a household He looks around all the world and all the universe and then gives a child. The greatest present that God ever gave our world He gave about 187 years ago, and He gave it on a Christmas night, and it was of such value that Heaven adjourned for a recess and came down and broke through the clouds to look at it. Yes, in all ages God has honored childhood. He makes almost every picture a failure unless there be a child either playing on the floor, or looking through the window, or seated on the lap gazing into the face of its mother. It was a child in Naaman's kitchen that told the great Syrian warrior where he might go and get cured of the leprosy, which at his seventh plunge in the Jordan, was left at the bottom of the river. It was to the cradle of leaves in which a child was laid, rocked by the Nile, that God called the attention of history. It was a sick child that evoked Christ's curative sympathies. It was a child that Christ sat in the midst of the squabbling disciples to teach the lesson of humility. We are informed that wolf and leopard and lion shall be yet so domesticated that a little child shall lead them. A child decided Waterloo, showing the army of Blucher how they could take a short cut through the fields, when, if the old road had been followed, the Prussian General would have come too late to save the destinies of Europe. It was a child that decided Gettysburg, he having overheard two Confederate Generals in a conversation in which they decided to march for Gettysburg instead of Harrisburg, and this, reported to Gov. Curtin, the Federal forces started to meet their opponents at Gettysburg. And the child of to-day is to decide all great battles, make all the laws, settle all destinies, and usher in the world's salvation or destruction. Men, women, nations, all earth and all Heaven, behold the child! Is there any velvet so soft as a child's cheek? Is there any sky so blue as a child's eye? Is there any music so sweet as the child's voice? Is there any plume so wavy as a child's hair?

Behold also in that first Christmas night that God honored the fields. Come in, shepherd boys, to Bethlehem and see the child. "No," they say; "we are not dressed good enough to come in." "Yes, you are, come in." Sure enough, the storms, and the night dew, and the brambles have made rough work with their apparel, but none have a better right to come in. They were the first to hear the music of that Christmas night. The first announcement of a Saviour's birth was made to those men in the fields. There were wisacres that night in Bethlehem and Jerusalem snoring in deep sleep, and there were salaried officers of the government who, hearing of it afterwards, may have thought that they ought to have had the first news of such a great event, some one dismounting from a swift camel at their door and knocking till at some sentinel's question, "Who comes there?" the great ones of the palace might have been told of the celestial arrival. No; the shepherds heard the first two bars of the music, the first in the major key and the last in the subdued minor: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will to men." Ah, yes; the fields were honored. The old shepherds with plaid and crook have for the most part vanished, but we have grazing—on our United States pasture fields and prairie—about 45,000,000 sheep, and all their keepers ought to follow the shepherds of the text, and all those who toil in fields, all wine dressers, all orchardists, all husbandmen. Not only that Christmas night but all up and down the world's history God has been honoring the fields. Nearly all the messiahs of reform, and literature, and eloquence, and law, and benevolence, have come from the fields. Washington from the fields; Jefferson from the fields; the Presidential martyrs, Garfield and Lincoln, from the fields; Henry Clay from the fields; Daniel Webster from the fields; Martin Luther from the fields; and before this world is right the overflowing population of our crowded cities will have to take to the fields. Instead of ten merchants in rivalry as to who shall sell that one apple, we want at least eight of them to go out and raise apples. Instead of ten merchants desiring to sell that one bushel of wheat, we want at least eight of them to go out and raise wheat. The world wants more hard hands, more bronzed cheeks, more muscular arms. To the fields! God honored them when He woke up the shepherds by the midnight anthem, and He will, while the world lasts, continue to honor the fields. When the shepherd's crook was that famous night stood against the wall of the Bethlehem kahn, it was a prophecy of the time when thrasher's flail, and farmer's plow, and woodman's ax, and ox's yoke, and sheaf binder's rake shall surrender to the God who made the country as man made the town.

Behold also that on that Christmas night God honored motherhood. Two angels on their wings might have brought an infant Saviour to Bethlehem without Mary's being there at all. When the villagers, on the morning of Dec. 26, awoke by divine arrangement and in some unexplained way, the child Jesus might have been found in some comfortable cradle of the village. But no, no! Motherhood for all time was to be consecrated, and one of the tenderest relations was to be the maternal relation, and one of the sweetest words "mother." In all ages God has honored good motherhood. John Wesley had a good mother. St. Bernard had a good mother, Samuel Budgett had a good mother, Doddridge a good mother, Walter Scott a good mother, Benjamin West a good mother. In a great audience, most of whom were Christians, I asked that all those who had been blessed of Christian mothers arise, and almost the entire assembly stood up. Don't you see how important it is that all motherhood be consecrated? Why did Titian, the Italian artist, when he sketched the Madonna, make it an Italian face? Why did Rubens, the German artist, in his Madonna, make it a German face? Why did Joshua Reynolds, the English artist, in his Madonna, make it an English face? Why did Murillo, the Spanish artist, in his Madonna, make it a Spanish face? I never heard, but I think they took their own mothers as the type of Mary, the mother of Christ. When you hear some one in sermon or oration speak in the abstract of a good, faithful, honest mother your eyes fill up with tears while you say to yourself, that was my mother. The first word a child utters is apt to be, "mother," and the old man in his dying dream calls, "Mother! mother!" It matters not whether she was brought up in the surroundings of a city, and in affluent home, and was dressed appropriately with reference to the demands of modern life, or whether she were the old-time cap, and great round spectacles, and apron of her own make, and knit your socks with her own needles seated by the broad fireplace with great back-logs ablaze on a winter night. It matters not how many wrinkles crossed and recrossed her face, or how much her shoulders stooped with the burdens of a long life, if you painted a Madonna hers would be the face. What a gentle hand she had when we were sick, and what a voice to soothe the pain, and was there any one who could so fill up a room with peace and purity and light? And what a sad day that was when we came home and she could greet us not, for her lips were forever still. Come back, mother, this Christmas day, and take your old place, and as ten, or twenty, or fifty years ago, come and open the old Bible you used to read, and kneel in the same place where you used to pray, and look upon us as of old when you wished us a Merry Christmas or a Happy New Year. But no! That would not be fair to call you back. You had trouble enough, and aches enough, and bereavements enough while you were here. Tarry by the throne, mother, till we join you there, your prayers all answered, and in the eternal homestead of our God we shall again keep Christmas jubilee together. But speak from your thrones, all you glorified mothers, and say to all these, your sons and daughters, words of love, words of warning, words of cheer. They need your voice for they have traveled far and with many a heart-break since you left them, and you do well to call from the heights of Heaven to the valleys of earth. Hail, enthroned ancestry! We are coming. Keep a place for us right beside you at the banquet.

Now footed years! More swiftly run
Into the gold of that unsetting sun.
Homelick we are for thee,
Calm land beyond the sea.

Stephenson's Machine.

George Stephenson began his experiences as an inventor with the perpetual motion problem, for which he constructed a machine. His biographer describes it as consisting of a "wooden wheel, the periphery of which was furnished with glass tubes filled with quicksilver; and as the wheel rotated the quicksilver poured itself down into the lower tubes, and thus a sort of self-acting motion was kept up in the apparatus, which, however, did not prove to be perpetual."

Kattorfalte, the engineer, exhibited a perpetual motion machine in the last century. So recently as 1860, Sir John Trotter Bethune took out a patent for "improvements in the production of motive power by application of the dead weight of liquids, and with the apparatus connected therewith."

Indeed, not a year passes but some new enthusiast lodges at the Patent Office the specifications of some machine for perpetual motion. This is not in itself considered evidence of insanity but it is unquestionably regarded by some as proof of mechanical aberration.

Only one fatality is known in connection with the pursuit of perpetual motion, and that is the case of Hartmann of Leipsic, who hanged himself in despair and mortification at having spent the best part of his life in prosecuting this hopeless aim.—Cassell.

A Female Surplised Choir.

A female surplised choir is an innovation in an English church that is creating something of a sensation. The singers wear surplises not unlike an M. A. gown, and purple velvet caps. There is a choir of the same kind in Melbourne, Australia, whence the freak was imported to England. Canon Liddon heartily disapproves of it, and pronounces it irreverent and grotesque. An unprejudiced looker-on, however, finds it difficult to see why there should not be girl choristers, and wherein lies the objection to their wearing surplises any more than boys.—Chicago News.

COAL AND COKE.

Another Splendid Christmas and New Year's Annual for 1888—The Latest and Best of the Rock Island Series.

Thousands who have perused, with delighted interest the pages of "Watt, Stephens, the Genius of Steam" (1885), "Voltagal, the Genius of Electricity" (1886), and "Petroleum and Natural Gas" (1887), will be pleased to know that the CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND AND PACIFIC RAILWAY will issue another magnificent successor for the Christmas and New Year season of 1888, which surpasses in many respects anything of the kind heretofore published.
"Coal and Coke" is the title of the work, and the subject has been exhaustively treated. It is written in a captivating colloquial style, embodying a vast amount of information in regard to coal strata; their relative position in the earth's crust; where deposits occur, their nature and extent; the different processes of underground mining; how coal is converted into coke, and some of its varied and multiple uses.

The book is profusely illustrated from original sketches. Although the expense has been very great, the ROCK ISLAND has concluded to supply "Coal and Coke" at the nominal rate of ten cents (for postage) per copy.
Enclose your address plainly written (also ten cents in stamps) to E. A. Holbrook, General Ticket and Passenger Agent at Chicago, Ill., and a copy of "Coal and Coke" will be mailed to you, prepaid, to any part of the world.

Cheap Farming Lands South.

It is a recognized fact that the cheapest farming lands in America to-day are in the South, and men of much or moderate means, looking for real estate investments, or permanent homes, should not fail to visit the following points, where so many Northern people are now settling, viz: Jackson, Tennessee; Aberdeen and Jackson, Mississippi; Hammond, Cresley, Jennings, Welsh and Lake Charles,
Louisiana. Round Trip Tourist tickets, limited to June 1st, 1888, with stop-over privileges south of Cairo, Illinois, are on sale to New Orleans, Jennings and Lake Charles. For rates apply to nearest ticket agent, and be sure your ticket reads via the Illinois Central Railroad from Chicago or St. Louis. For pamphlet entitled "Southern Home Seeker's Guide," and circulars concerning the above named points, address the undersigned, at Manchester, Iowa.

The Popular Thoroughfare.

The Wisconsin Central Line, although a comparatively new factor in the railroad system of the Northwest, has acquired and enjoyed popularity. Through careful attention to details, its service is as near perfection as might be looked for. The train attendants seem to regard their trusts as individual property and as a result the public is served par excellence. The road now runs solid through fast trains between Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul, and Minneapolis with Pullman's best and unequalled dining-cars; it also runs through, solid sleepers between Chicago, Ashland, Duluth, and the famous mining regions
of Northern Wisconsin and Michigan.

Cataract Cured.

A clergyman, after years of suffering from that loathsome disease, Cataract, and vainly trying every known remedy, at last found a prescription which completely cured and saved him from death. Any sufferer from this dreadful disease sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Prof. J. A. Lawrence, 212 East Ninth street, New York, will receive the recipe free of charge.

Thief Arrested.

The news was received with the utmost satisfaction by the community that he had terrorized; but the arrest of a disease that is stealing away a loved and valued life is an achievement that should inspire heart-felgratitude. Chills, cold extremities, de-

REMINISCENCES OF PUBLIC MEN.

BY BEN PERLEY POORE.

Mr. Lincoln was much troubled when he learned that his "sailor dragoon," Gen. Nelson, had been shot by Gen. Davis in a hotel at Louisville. Gen. Nelson was over six feet in height, weighed over 250 pounds, and was notoriously strong, while Gen. Davis was a quiet little gentleman, who never troubled any one.

Senator Morton, with Gen. Nelson and Davis, were conversing together, when Nelson became excited, and deliberately slapped Davis in the right cheek. Davis and Morton stepped back, and Morton gave Davis a pistol. Davis advanced toward Nelson, leveled the pistol, and fired. At the puff of the revolver Nelson put his hand on his heart, and when the bystanders ran up they heard him say: "I'm a dead man." Send for an Episcopal clergyman.

His friends carried him into a little room under the stairs. They opened his clothes and found near the heart a little blue mark, about the size of a buckshot, and that was all. The wound had closed; no blood was running; you would hardly notice that it was a wound. By good luck there was an Episcopal clergyman, a man with whom Nelson was intimate, in the house. He was sent for and came immediately, and when he entered the room all others withdrew. In about ten minutes we were told that Nelson was dead.

Quite a number came running up at the sound of the shot, and among them a policeman, who arrested Davis. Davis went with him quietly, but upon Gen. Buell being informed of it, he made a demand upon the Mayor for the delivery of Davis to him, which, after a momentary hesitation, was done. No notice was taken of the affair. Everybody felt sorry that Nelson was killed, but they understood that Davis could not do anything else than what he did do. He had been struck, and if he hadn't resented it he would have been disgraced, and compelled to leave the army. He could not resent it any other way.

The Maryland women, who at first ruled society here, have always been more noted for the graces and charms that adorn society and make home happy than for the intellectual and worldly qualities which seek for recognition outside of the domestic circle. The ceremonious formality of the last century has given place to a graceful ease. The stately and solemn minuet passed away with the ruffs and brocades; the lively and dashing racket is better suited to the light and lovely toilets of the present day. Though their manners have changed from the pompous and ceremonious stateliness of their grandmothers, the Maryland ladies of the present day are well described in the lines of Austin Dobson:

Purity doth hedge her
Round with delicate divinity.

The final session of the Thirty-ninth Congress was opened on the 3d of December, 1866. A caucus of the Republican Representatives, held on the Saturday evening previous, had evinced an earnest hostility toward the President, with a determination to restrict his patronage and power. On Monday night a welcome banquet was given to the Republican Congressmen in a temporary structure which had been erected for a mechanics' fair. Gen. Walbridge presided. Speaker Colfax responded to his speech of welcome, and Gov. Yates followed in an eloquent arraignment of President Johnson.

Mr. Sumner was enlisted by a friend who had won his affections by having an edition de luxe of one of his speeches printed in New York, in the support of a New Jersey railroad, gotten up in opposition to the Camden and Amboy monopoly. A lobby manager of the interests of the latter, wishing to kill off the New Jersey road scheme, offered to secure enough votes to pass a constitutional amendment then pending, if the New Jersey road bill could be smothered. Finally the proposition was made to Mr. Sumner, who had the New Jersey bill in charge, but who was very anxious that the constitutional amendment should be enacted. Instead, however, of acquiescing in the bargain, the Massachusetts Senator rose from his seat before his library-table, and exclaimed in his deepest tone: "I forbid the ban. Both measures are right, and both shall pass!" The bargain was nevertheless made, the constitutional amendment was passed, and the Camden and Amboy monopoly was not troubled by a rival.

Oakes Ames died at his home in North Easton, Mass., on Thursday, May 8, 1873, from the effects of a stroke of paralysis by which he was attacked on the Monday previous. The paralysis first affected the right side of his face and right arm and leg. For a few moments he was unconscious, and continued speechless up to his death. His death was attributed to over-anxiety and care, and the excitement of the Credit Mobilier business. Until this last illness Mr. Ames had not been confined to his bed by sickness in forty years.

Mr. Ames was born in Easton, Bristol County, Mass., January 10, 1804, and was consequently in his 70th year. He was engaged all his life in manufacturing. In 1862 he was elected a Representative from Massachusetts to the Thirty-eighth Congress, and continued to hold a seat in the House down to the close of the Forty-second Congress. Benjamin W. Harris was elected to succeed him in the Forty-third Congress.

Mr. Ames was a man of indomitable physical energy, steady habits, and methodical ways. Though much of ill was said of him in the last days of his busy life, growing out of his connection with the building of the Union Pacific Railroad and other railroad enterprises, now that he was gone there was found a side to his character that was bright, and around which were found to cluster many virtues. Beyond the exterior of indifference which he wore before the Credit Mobilier committees, and under the smile that he returned to the poisoned barbs of Congress hall, press, and pulpit, he concealed a nature that was wounded to the quick and wounded to the death. I believe he was followed altogether too relentlessly, that he was judged with small measure of charity, and, above all, that he was cruelly deserted by men who were too cowardly to tell the truth.

The Lady of Lyons.

An impression prevails among some people that the Lady of Lyons was a circus woman who went into the lion's cage and performed there. Such was not the case. She was a wealthy young lady of Lyons, N. Y., who moved in the best circles. She was strolling in the garden one day when the gardener's son, who was weeding an onion bed, saw her and immediately fell in love with her. He thought there never was such a woman as Pauline, though he couldn't make his pa lean that way, nor his ma. Hearing of the young man's infatuation, a couple of Pauline's discarded lovers put up a job on her. They dressed Claude in fine clothes and introduced him to her as a Count. He was no 'count as a simple gardener, but as a supposed titled man he rose in the social scale very greatly. He pictured to her in glowing colors his home by the lake of Como, with its fruits of gold, nickel-plated bananas, etc., and she expected to be conveyed to it in a palace car, four sections to themselves.

Judge then of her vexation and disgust on being conveyed in a bob-tailed horse-car and landed at his mother's humble lodgings on the sixth floor of a cheap tenement building. She thereupon denounced Claude and his deception, and he went off to fight Indians. He got an appointment as an Indian agent, amassed a handsome fortune in a short time and came back to claim his bride. Everything was explained, except how he came to get so much money, and Claude and Pauline were reunited. —Texas Siftings.

The Majesty of the Law.

A tall, slender, majestic policeman stood on the bridge, on a recent afternoon, as an elevated train drew up for Brooklyn. One arm rested on the end of the iron railing, the left foot gracefully crossed the right, toes downward, the expression of the face was peaceful, and the general tout ensemble dignified and impressive.

In essaying to board the train a gentleman ventured to touch the outstretched arm.

"Do odder side, young feller," said the policeman, glaring a hole through the gentleman.

"The other side of what?"

"De odder side of MR." — Tid-Bits.

CHLOROFORM was discovered by Samuel Guthrie of Sackett's Harbor, N. Y., in 1831, and independently by Liebig in 1832.

KEEPING RELICS.

Singular Effect It Has on Mankind.

[London Spectator.]

While thus arguing that in our day one of the chief feelings connected with relics of the great dead is the hunger for a sense of reality in connection with the men of the past, which can only be satisfied by some material link—of which a portion of the actual body is the most perfect—we must not, of course, leave out of sight the fact that in all probability the feeling that the human body is in itself sacred has a good deal to do with the sense of religion which attaches to relics of the dead. If we have an instructive feeling toward the preservation of the human body generally, this feeling is no doubt intensified in the case of those whom we reverence from any cause; and thus the desire to keep relics of the great dead, which still at this day survives much cynicism, is probably dimly connected, though in a way not recognized, with other religious feelings. The manner in which this instinct for preserving the body seems to have grown up in the human mind is curious. In its most intense form we find it among Egyptians. It is not too much to say that in the valley of the Nile half the energy of the living was devoted to the preservation of the dead. The Egyptians were possessed of an active belief in the existence of the soul after death. The ultimate prospects of immortality depended, however, on whether or not the body could be preserved. After death the soul passed a vast period of time in expiatory journeys in the nether world. These journeys over it returned to occupy the body before abandoned. An imperative necessity was thus cast upon all those who valued an after life to prepare means of embalming so perfect and tombs so secure, that when the body was again required, the soul might find it ready. To the Greeks and Romans, to whom the nether world was but a land of shadows, the preservation of the body was not a necessity; and accordingly, like the Hindoos, they burnt their dead. With Christianity came the idea of the resurrection of the body, and so of its sacredness and the necessity of its preservation from destruction. Though the spiritual application which the idea soon received—that of continuous identity in a non-material state—prevented the notion from having the effect it had in Egypt, there can be no doubt that in the earlier centuries of Christian history it had much to do with the growth of the worship and preservation of relics. If we turn from the more restricted theme of the relics of the dead to relics of the past in general, it is curious to notice how deeply they have often affected men's minds. The First Napoleon, who never neglected any means by which he might influence human nature, so as to make it more pliable for his purposes, recognized very clearly the sentimental influence which could be exercised in this way. For instance, before setting out for Boulogne to arrange for the invasion of England he had the Bayeux tapestry brought to Paris and exposed to view in the Palace Royal, in order that the people of Paris might be inspired by the sight of the tapestry made to commemorate what he chose with a fine disregard of history and ethnology to regard as a previous conquest of England by France. Not content with this, he professed, while encamped at Boulogne, to have found a coin of Julius Caesar and the arms of one of William the Conqueror's followers. It is grotesque to read of, but Napoleon did right not only to rely upon his soldiers' credulity, but upon the effect of touching their imaginations. It was the best possible means of bringing home to his men the lesson he desired to teach them—that France had conquered England before and would conquer her again—to show them the arms which one of the conquerors had left on the very spot from which a successful invasion had actually been made. The restoration of Napoleon's body to France helped to revive the Napoleonic cult as no other incident did, and all Germany feels the stronger and fuller of continuous life because the Emperor addresses his Parliament from the throne pressed by the feet of Charlemagne. Plenty of other instances might be given of how great has been the effects of relics on mankind.

The first cotton factory in America was established at East Bridgewater, Mass., in 1787.

INDIANA STATE NEWS.

—Patents have been issued to Indiana inventors as follows: Charles Anderson, assignor to South Bend Iron-works, South Bend, plow and skeleton frame; Oliver Cassidy, White Lick, vehicle spring; William L. Evans, Jr., Logansport, hay rake and leader; Joshua O. Howe, assignor of one-third to S. B. Wylie, Bloomington, lighting device; Daniel R. Kerne, Kendallville, burglar alarm; Amos E. Kunderd, Corunna, cultivator attachment; William Lyon and J. B. Gorrell, La Otto, device for preventing the depression of railway joints; Robert E. Poindexter, Indianapolis, device for dressing the teeth of saws; William T. Vanvactor, Argos, plow; J. Morris Waldorf, South Bend, assignor to McCormick Harvesting Machine Company, Chicago, mowing machine.

—There are 463,134 able-bodied white male citizens in Indiana, between the ages 18 and 25, that are fit for military duty, so states the Adjutant General's annual report to the War Department at Washington. The report of the State militia service, just submitted, shows that there is an enrollment of about 1,000 in the Indiana Legion, comprising four infantry regiments and three artillery regiments. The military companies are all in first-class condition, having good uniforms and being equipped with Springfield breech-loading rifles. That the companies of the Indiana Legion are, as a rule, well drilled, is attested by their success in competitions with the military organizations of other States.

—Marion Grange celebrated its twenty-second anniversary by the election of the following officers: W. M., A. V. Rector; W. O., John Collins; Lecturer, F. J. L. Robinson; Secretary, G. P. Rector; Treasurer, G. W. Light. The Grange is composed of farmers of Lost Creek and Riley townships, Vigo County, and Posey and Perry townships, Clay County, and is in a flourishing condition. A fair exhibit is given each year, all racing being prohibited, and only farm products and live stock are admitted.

—The identity of a demented man who has been in the Orange County Poor-house since 1876 has just been established. His name is George W. Taylor, of Carlyle, Ill., who enlisted in Company G, Thirty-fifth Regiment, Illinois Volunteers, on Nov. 30, 1861, re-enlisted on March 24, 1864, and was mustered out on Dec. 8, 1865, being then a Corporal. In 1876 he was found in a school-house in Orange County, almost frozen to death. He will be sent to the Soldiers' Home.

—As Mr. James Ollom, one of the most promising young men in Muncie, was crossing the Bee Line Railroad, about one and one-half mile east of that city, the limited express, which was running at the rate of forty miles an hour, struck the buggy in which he was riding, killing him instantly. Mr. Ollom had an engagement with a young lady who resides near the scene of the accident, and was within fifty feet of the house when killed.

—A deplorable casualty occurred four miles west of Portland. James Richendollar, aged 50, took down his gun preparatory to going hunting, and placed his mouth over the muzzle and blow in it to see if it was loaded, when the gun instantly exploded, sending the ball crashing through his brain. His wife, who was the only witness to the terrible tragedy, said he never moved after he fell to the floor.

—Gov. Gray has remitted to Wilson L. Moncrief, of Decatur County, $350 of a forfeited bond of $400. He was surety for his son, who was indicted on the charge of petit larceny and failed to appear for trial. The remittance was granted, it is stated, because Mr. Moncrief is a crippled soldier and the payment of the sum would be a great hardship.

—State Veterinarian Pritchard, who went to Warren County to investigate a disease that was thought to be glanders among the horses there, and of which one man died, says while there was much sickness among the horses in that locality, nothing in the nature of glanders was discovered. The death of the man, George Brown, proved to be a case of blood poisoning.

—Dr. William H. Coover, aged 77, the oldest medical practitioner in Northern Indiana, died at Goshen, of chronic disorder of the stomach. He was unable to assimilate any food for weeks, and literally died of starvation. He was noted for his charitable acts, and leaves an estate valued at $100,000.

—Frank Morris, a young man about 20 years old, residing at Spencer, shot himself, accidentally. He was loading his shot-gun to go hunting, when it discharged, lodging a full load of shot in his temple and face. He is still living, but he cannot recover.

—Natural gas was found at Amboy four feet in Trenton rock, with a strong flow. Further penetration will undoubtedly reveal a gusher equal to others in the immediate vicinity. This is the first find of the series of borings for use in Peru.

—Granville Hook was killed by a runaway team, near New Middletown, Harrison County. He was about 50 years of age, and had a family. Mr. Hook was at one time a member of the New Albany police force.

—Burglars in Indianapolis resisted and escaped from an officer by throwing a bomb that struck the latter on the head and exploded and fractured his skull, broke an arm, and otherwise injured him.

—Thomas Ayres, son of Lemuel Ayres, of La Porte, was found drowned in Clear Lake. He went skating, and was not known to have met his death until his body was found.

—Dennis Dean accidentally fell from a wagon near Corydon, and broke his neck.

—Charles Pruitt, of Edinburg, aged about 16 years, press-boy in the Vincennes News office, had his right hand badly mangled by being caught in a job press.

—James A. Smart attempted to board a moving freight train at Jeffersonville. He fell under the cars, both legs were crushed, and he died in three hours.

—The Union Labor party of Indiana have determined to hold a convention at Indianapolis, March 7, for the purpose of nominating a State ticket.

—Mrs. Sarah G. Ewing was attacked and killed by hogs near Shelbyville.

—John Leaby, an employee of the Sandford Fork and Tool Works, at Terre Haute, was caught in a belt and sustained injuries that may prove fatal.

—William Henry, of Indianapolis, brakeman on the Chicago Air-line, was killed by a freight train at Ockley. It was his first trip.

—Fire broke out in the Indiana penitentiary at Michigan City, entirely destroying the shoe department, with a loss of $75,000.

—William Adams, aged 21, of Kokomo, was thrown against a circular saw recently, and was horribly mangled. He died.

—The miners in the coal regions at Brazil, have organized a mutual aid society, to provide insurance for its members.

—A fire gas well has been struck at Markleville, Madison County, at a depth of 946 feet, and twelve feet in Trenton rock.

EVENTS OF A WEEK.

THE OLD WORLD.

—Fresh accusations have been made against M. Wilson in connection with the decorations scandal, which it is expected will lead to his rearrest.

—A Berlin dispatch says: "Notwithstanding the semi-official denials, it is again asserted here that Russia tried to arrive at an understanding with Austria on the Bulgarian question, but was refused to the Berlin treaty as the only basis upon which a settlement could be effected. A Munich correspondent states that workmen belonging to the Austrian reserves have been ordered to rejoin their regiments forthwith."

—The British mission that went to Abyssinia to induce King John to sue for peace was unsuccessful, and will return at once to Cairo.

—Mr. Gladstone arrived at Dover on the 27th of December on his way to the Continent. A number of roughs outside the depot threw snow-balls at him, none of which, however, struck him. A delegation of Kentish Liberals waited upon him at the Town Hall and presented him with an address. Mr. Gladstone will spend some weeks in Italy.

—The revolution in Guatemala has been completely put down as the result of a desperate battle between the Federal and revolutionary forces, in which the latter were defeated and almost annihilated and their Generals captured and shot.

POLITICAL POINTS.

—Maj. J. M. Wright of Louisville, Ky., has been appointed Marshal of the United States Supreme Court to succeed John G. Nicolay, who retires to devote himself to literary work. The position is a life one with a salary of $3,000 a year. Maj. Wright is a graduate of West Point, and was at one time on Gen. Buell's staff. He was for some time an editorial writer on the Courier-Journal. Afterwards he was made Superintendent of the Board of Trade, and later President of the Southern Exposition Company.

—A St. Paul paper publishes letters from a large number of the members of the present House upon the subject of the admission of Dakota, from which it appears that the sentiment of Congress is against division and in favor of the one-State idea.

FINANCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL.

—The total value of the imports of merchandise into this country during the present year is placed at $712,980,918, and the exports have amounted to $727,460,625.

—A real estate company is said to have secured a title to 55,000,000 acres of land in eleven States of Mexico, which will be offered to immigrants upon very advantageous terms. The Government favors the enterprise, which it is thought will bring in many settlers from this country and Europe.

—A Philadelphia dispatch of Wednesday says: "The great strike on the Reading Road, which promised to develop into a long and bitter fight, 75,000 men out of work, and millions out of coal, has come to a sudden end. From what has transpired thus far it appears that the Knights of Labor have made an unconditional surrender. All the strikers have returned to work, and all business is going on as usual."

—Rand & Co.'s powder mill, at Pittsford, N. Y., was completely wrecked by an explosion, causing heavy loss.

FIRES AND ACCIDENTS.

—A terrible disaster happened near Freeport, Ill., to a Minnesota and Northwestern train, on route for the East with a large excursion party bound for Canadian points. The train encountered a broken rail, and the cars, seven in number, were all hurled down a twelve-foot embankment on either side. One of the cars was thrown fully fifty feet and turned completely over endways. All the other cars but one were thrown over on their sides down the bank. There were nearly 150 passengers on board the train, upward of thirty of whom were injured more or less seriously. Two, it is thought, were fatally hurt. One of the coaches caught fire, but the flames were extinguished by the train men before they gained any headway. Twelve physicians were summoned from Freeport by special train, and ministered to the needs of the injured.

—A fire which broke out in Wakefield, Mich., burned the best part of the town. The total loss is estimated at $100,000. The insurance is small. The fire started in a variety of places, and was caused by a monkey which overturned a lamp.

—In an accident which occurred on the Wisconsin Central near Fifield, Wis., one man was killed. His name was M. Montie. He got on the train at Butternut, Wis., and attempted to get out of a window when he felt the uneven motion of the train, but he was caught under the car and crushed to a jelly. Conductor C. H. Greenfield, who was passing through the train, was caught in the shower of falling debris, and held a prisoner between two timbers. He was released, but is thought to be fatally hurt.

—The reports of suffering from cold and hunger which have been received from Kansas are said to have been greatly exaggerated.

—Eight persons were frozen to death in Carson county, Tex., during the recent cold spell.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

—Following was the visible supply of grain as compiled by the New York Produce Exchange: Wheat, 44,247,634 bushels, increase 1,016,625 bushels; corn, 5,759,407 bushels, increase 378,998 bushels; oats, 5,859,191 bushels, decrease 232,065 bushels; rye, 274,077 bushels, decrease 5,692 bushels; barley, 3,676,855 bushels, increase 76,049 bushels.

—It is reported from East Saginaw, Mich., that Thomas B. Barry must pay the judgment of $29,018 taken against him for damages to the Hoyt estate in the great mill strike, or body execution will be issued against him and he will be imprisoned.

—A total of 3,534 miles of new railroad has been built in the Northwest during 1887, besides about 500 miles of road-bed made ready for the iron next year.

—After a careful examination by numerous scientists and experts, the gas recently discovered in the water-supply pipe of a Chicago brewery is pronounced to be natural gas.

—The Pacific Railway Company has been incorporated at Lincoln, Neb., with capital stock of $6,000,000, to build an extension, it is thought, of the Missouri Pacific's Hastings branch.

EX-SECRETARY MANNING DEAD.

—Ex-Secretary of the Treasury Daniel Manning died at the residence of his son James, in Albany, whether he had gone to spend the holidays. He passed away peacefully, surrounded by his family and near relatives.

Mrs. Manning received many tender telegrams of condolence, including the following from the President:

"Though in this hour of unutterable grief your sorrow is too sacred to be shared and too deep to be reached by earthly comfort, may I express to you my sincere and tender sympathy, saddened by my own affliction at the loss of a true and trusted friend and a loyal associate, who but lately stood at my side in the discharge, with patriotic zeal, of solemn public duty."

GROVER CLEVELAND.

The President caused an order to be issued directing that the flags on all public buildings in Washington be placed at half-mast, as a mark of respect to the memory of his dead ex-Minister.

Mr. Manning was born in Albany, N. Y., Aug. 16, 1831. His parentage was of Irish, English, and Dutch extraction. He was a poor boy, and his early opportunities for schooling were very limited. At 11 years of age he went to work as an office-boy at the establishment of the Albany Atlas, which was afterward merged into the Albany Argus, with which paper he was, in one capacity or another, connected until his appointment by President Cleveland as Secretary of the Treasury. In 1873 he assumed sole charge of the Argus and was elected President of the company. He was a member of the New York Democratic State convention of 1874 that nominated Samuel J. Tilden for Governor, and was a delegate to the St. Louis convention of 1876 that nominated Mr. Tilden for President. He was also a member of the New York Democratic State Committee since 1876, was its Secretary in 1879 and 1880, and was elected Chairman in 1881. He was warmly interested in the nomination of Mr. Cleveland for President at Chicago. Several months ago Mr. Manning's health compelled him to retire from the Cabinet. Mr. Manning was active and successful outside of journalism and politics.

—The funeral ceremonies over the body of the late ex-Secretary Daniel Manning were held at Albany, December 27, and it was placed in the mortuary chapel of the Rural Cemetery to await interment in the family lot next spring. Flags were hung at half-mast in the city out of respect for the memory of the dead statesman, and in accordance with the Mayor's request business was suspended during the time of the funeral. The President, all the members of the Cabinet, and many other prominent people were present.

CONVALESCENTS.

Simple Rules Often Disobeyed by Patients with Fatal Results.

The diet should receive particular attention. Nothing that is difficult of digestion or in the least likely to disagree should be taken.

The convalescence from fever should be especially watched. When all danger of infection is at an end—the patient, we must suppose, has been isolated—the room he has occupied must be carefully cleaned, scrubbed, and disinfected. Not only should hot water and soap be used in washing woodwork, floors, etc., but carbolic acid must be added to the last water. Of course, the clothing and bedding should all be washed and mattresses taken to pieces and thoroughly teased and fumigated. Then, to finish up withal, brimstone should be burned in the room, the doors and windows being closed and the keyhole stuffed.

It would be well for those who have the care of any one during the state of convalescence from severe illness to treat their patient as if he were a nervous and growing youth. The weakened tissues of both nervous and muscular matter are undergoing repair, and this is analogous to growth. In the ordinary state of health a man does not require food to build up this frame, so to speak, but simply to repair the waste that is constantly taking place in work, or even in thought. After sickness it is different.

The appetite is sometimes almost voracious, but it should be remembered that the slightest over-indulgence is most dangerous. Little and often must be the rule as regards eating, and while the dishes are tempting and appetizing, they should be most nutritious, and at the same time easy of digestion. Frequent changes should be made, too. At first solid food will be injudicious, but gradually as the health and strength return they should be resorted to, and will be found far more staying and invigorating than spoon foods. The hours for meals should be regular. I need hardly add that excessive indulgence in stimulants may induce irreparable mischief.

The doctor must also prescribe the tonic. It should not be forgotten that tonics taken without judgment may do much harm. The safest are quinine and iron, in small doses, and cod liver oil.

The patient must be safeguarded from cold and damp, but this does not mean that he is to be kept in the house; quite the reverse, and the more hours spent out of doors in the sunshine the more speedy and perfect will his return to health be; only he is to wear warm underclothing, and warm but not heavy overclothing as well.

patient during convalescence may sometimes be peevish and discontented. This is by no means a good sign, and every care should be taken to keep his mind contented and easy. Amusement greatly tends to hasten the coming health. Outdoor exercise should be commenced early, but it must be of the gentle kind at first—riding in a Bath chair or pony carriage, for example, or little walks on level ground—sauntering in fact.

If he can afford it, he ought to seek for a change of climate. The place chosen should not be of an excitingly bracing character, and if by the seaside so much the better. Of course he will not start until able to bear the journey, or a relapse might be the consequence. A really good, quiet hotel is often better than a lodging house. It must be a hotel, however, where the cooking is as near to perfection as can be expected.

Next in importance to nutritious and well-cooked food is sleep. Sleep is Nature's sweet restorer to the convalescence. He ought to have long hours, and it will be well if supper is not taken within two hours of retiring.

A nap on the sofa or easy chair after dinner will also be most refreshing. The exercise taken in the open air will usually be found to be the best narcotic; at any rate he is not to resort to the use of sleep producers, which he would only do at the greatest risk.

The sea bath is a very great restorative, and there are many ways of using it. At first, and while the patient is still far from strong, the warm sea water bath about three hours after breakfast will be best. At most seaside places there are establishments where these can be had. If not they can be taken in the bedroom.

The convalescent should not bathe in the sea before breakfast, and when he is strong enough to take the invigorating dip he should stop but a very short time in the water and rub himself thoroughly dry with a rough towel when he comes out; then dress slowly and go home. If drowsiness supervenes let him take a nap by all means on his return. By degrees, as strength is acquired, the usual occupations of life may once more be taken up, and this, so far from being injurious to the convalescent, will in reality complete his cure.—The Family Doctor in Cassell's Family Magazine.

TARGETS FOR SATIRE.

Aunts are more gently dealt with by dramatists and writers of fiction, inasmuch as they are rarely represented as absolute criminals, but they come in very handy as butts for ridicule or targets for satire. We know, indeed, quite as well what the spinster aunt in the play or the novel will be as we do how the Irishman, or the bumpkin, or the sailor, or any other conventional character will comport himself. She is certain to be precise and methodical, to be of a skittish deportment toward men, and of a monitorial aspect in the presence of women; to possess a cat and a bird in a cage, and, as if she had been christened with a forecast of her future career, she is only allowed the use of such names as Barbara, or Ursula, or Priscilla. If she is not an absolute misanthrope, she is generally at the bottom of all mischief that is going about; and when the hero and heroine on the eve of their happiness have the cup dashed from their lips, we are generally safe in laying the cruel blow at the door of the spinster aunt. Fiction, however, is in this conventional portraiture strongly supported by fact. There are, of course, jovial old spinsters, just as there are crusty old bachelors; but the spinsters are no more jovial because they are spinsters than the bachelors are crusty because they are bachelors. At the same time, when a woman arrives at a certain age and finds herself still unmarried she would hardly be a representative of her sex if she did not look upon the world with somewhat jaundiced eyes. A man remains a bachelor generally because he chooses so to remain, the number of masculine hearts blighted forever by an early disappointment in love being infinitesimal; but very few spinsters could conscientiously say that they are so of their own free will.—London Queen.

EDITORIAL AMENITIES IN ARIZONA.

Says the accomplished editor of the Arizona Howler: "This thing of New York editors calling each other 'Ananias' and 'Judas' makes us tired. Why rip up the record of these old parties when we've got much better ammunition right at our elbows? We don't do business that way. We have never yet called the rum-soaked galoot who helps his office boy to edit the Ripsnorter either an Ananias or a Judas. We can hurt the ornery old Jimplecute a great deal more by calmly telling him as we do now that he is a Fool from Foolville, Fool County, and that we are going to lick him the first time he shows himself in Al Blodgett's saloon. Whoopee! You hear us, old cuss; now come on."

CUSTOM doth make dotards of us all.—Carlyle.

WONDERFUL CHANGES.

The Far Seeing Take Advantage of Them in Time.

Is this country unconsciously undergoing a wonderful change, is the change to take place before we are aware of the fact, and when it has taken place will we wonder why we did not see it before it was too late?

Those that see the changes early avail themselves early, and thereby receive benefit.

The shrewd iron man sees the iron interest transferred from Pittsburgh and Pennsylvania to Birmingham, Alabama, and in his far-sightedness sees the furnaces in Pennsylvania torn down and deserted for this new and profitable field.

We have seen the grain-growing centers of this country shifted to the West. We have seen the pork-packing industry flit from Cincinnati to Chicago, and from thence to Kansas City and Omaha. Southern cotton mills undersell New England and American markets, and challenge the world.

We have seen and are seeing all this take place before our eyes, and know that other changes are taking place equally as prominent, and we wonder as we behold them. Ten years ago the insurance companies required an analysis of the fluids only when they were taking insurance for very large amounts. Today no first-class company will insure any amount unless a rigid analysis is had of the fluids passed, and if any traces of certain disorders are apparent, the application is rejected. In their reports they show that the death of sixty of every 100 people in this country, is one either directly or indirectly to such disorders. The Brompton Hospital for Consumptives, London, England, reports that sixty of every 100 victims of consumption also have serious disorders of the kidneys.

Among scientists for the treatment of this dread malady the question is being discussed: "Is not this disorder the real cause of consumption?"

Ten years ago the microscope was something seldom found in a physician's office; now every physician of standing has one and seldom visits his patients without calling for a sample of fluids for examination.

Why is all this? Is it possible that we of the present generation are to die of diseases caused by kidney disorders? or shall we master the cause by Warner's safe cure, the only recognized specific, and thus remove the effects? It is established beyond a doubt that a very large percentage of deaths in this country are traceable to diseased kidneys. For years the proprietors of Warner's safe cure have been insisting that there is no sound health when the kidneys are diseased, and they enthusiastically press their specific for this terrible disorder upon public attention.

This means wonders! Cannot the proprietors of this great remedy, who have been warning us of the danger, tell us how to avoid a disease that at first is so unimportant, and is so fatal in its termination? Are we to hope against hope, and wait without our reward?

It was formerly thought that the kidneys were of very small importance; to-day, we believe, it is generally admitted that there can be no such thing as sound health in any organ if they are in the least degree deranged.

Kerosene Cures Diphtheria.

A few years ago my little girl was very sick with diphtheria. The doctor did all he could, and so did I, but she grew worse, until one night we thought she could not live the night through. My husband saw a gentleman who told him to wet a cloth with kerosene and put it on the child's throat. I did so, using equal parts of kerosene and liquor. In less than an hour from the time I put it on she breathed better. I wet the cloth three or four times during the night. In the morning, when the doctor came, he said: "Your little girl is better this morning." I told him what I had done. He said that it was good, and he was glad I had used it. I write this that some mother's heart may be made light by using kerosene, as mine was, for it saved my child's life.—Housewife.

Remarkable Surgery.

The science of surgery has made such wonderful progress in modern times that the most intricate and delicate operations are now undertaken and carried to a successful issue. There are now several well authenticated cases of what is known as pneumotomy—that is to say, the removal of diseased portions of the lungs in cases of consumption. While, however, this delicate operation has sometimes been successfully performed, the risks attending it are so great and the chances of recovery so slight that it is seldom resorted to. The safest plan in consumptive cases is to use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. This will always cure the disease in its earlier stages, thoroughly arresting the ravages of the terrible malady by removing its cause, and healing the lungs.

The life of a Sultan is a harem-scarem existence at best.

FRANKLIN, OAKLAND CO., MICH.,
Dec. 2, 1887.

Rheumatic Syrup Company:
DEAR SIRS—Mr. A. A. Rust, of this place, furnished me one bottle of your Rheumatic Syrup. Have taken about two-thirds of it. Before taking it the slightest change in the weather affected me very much. I am now almost entirely free from the awful twinges of rheumatism, and changes in the weather do not affect me.
S. A. LONG,

THERE is one good thing about violin-playing—it keeps up the dead cat market.—Puck.

"Yes; I shall break the engagement," she said, folding her arms and looking defiant; "it is really too much trouble to converse with him; he's as deaf as a post and talks like he had a mouthful of mush. Besides, the way he hawks and spits is disgusting." "Don't break the engagement for that; tell him to take Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. It will cure him completely." "Well, I'll tell him. I do hate to break it off, for in all other respects he's quite too charming." Of course it cured his catarrh.

Gait and Character.

A Spanish student, Dr. Peracchira, has learned that bad men may be distinguished from good by their walk. In lawabiding people the right pace is longer than the left, the lateral separation of the right foot from the median line is less than that of the left. In persons predisposed to theft there is a pronounced widening of the base of support, together with a very long step; and in those of murderous intents the base of support is not as wide as it is in thieves, since the angle formed by the axis of the foot with the median line is less obtuse, but the peculiarity of their footprints is very marked.

His Photo.

The venerable benefactor of mankind, intent upon his good works, is known as we see him here. His familiar face and form have become a trade mark, and the good he has done is illustrated in the following marvelous instance: Jan. 17, 1883, George C. Osgood & Co., druggists, Lowell, Mass., wrote: "Mr. Lewis Dennis, No. 133 Moody St., desires to recommend St. Jacobs Oil to any afflicted with rheumatism, and desires especially to say that Orrin Robinson, of Grantville, Mass., a boy of 12 years, came to his house in the summer of 1881 walking upon crutches, his left leg having been bent at the knee for over two months and could not be bent back. He could not walk upon it. Mr. Dennis had some St. Jacobs Oil in the house and gave it to him to rub on his knee. In six days he had no use for his crutches and went home well without them, and he has been well since St. Jacobs Oil cured him." In July, 1887, inquiry was made of the Messrs. Osgood to ascertain the condition of the little cripple, which brought the following response: "Lowell, Mass., July 9, 1887.—The poor cripple on crutches, Orrin Robinson, cured by St. Jacobs Oil in 1881, has remained cured. The young man has been and is now at work every day at manual labor. Dr. George C. Osgood, M. D." No other remedy can make the same showing.

FRIDAY JANUARY 6, 1888.

Owing to the series of meetings now in progress at the Methodist church, Rev. Thomas will not preach next Sunday evening.

A brakeman, whose name we were unable to learn, was run over and killed by a freight train at Hicksville on Wednesday night.

The W. C. T. U. will meet at the residence of Mrs. R. A. Smith, on January 12th, at 2:30 o'clock. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

Found, near the gravel pit at this place, a ladies' leather hand bag. The contents are such as are usually used by ladies with small children. The owner can have same by calling at this office.

The Montpelier Democrat says: "During the year 1888 there will occur six eclipses—three of the sun two of the moon and one of the Republican party. The last will be witnessed by the people of all parts of the United States."

J. H. Conrad took his Sunday school class a sleigh ride Wednesday evening. They drove to his mother-in-law's, north of Concord, where they were treated to a fine supper. The boys enjoyed it hugely.

Thomas Draggoo, brother of Mrs. Samuel Lawhead, after a week's visit among his relatives and friends in this place and Concord, returned to his home at Allen Creek last Wednesday. He intends to stop off at Muskegon and visit a sister living at that place.

When M. T. Bishop gets his new hall finished up in shape, we may expect to have something occasionally in the way of entertainments. The Bell Ringers wrote for a date at this place, sometime ago, but as there was no hall to be had, they passed on to the next town.

One of our prominent citizens is quite a hand to snore, and of late his efforts in that direction have been more frequent and are increasing in volume of sound. The other night he and his good wife retired as usual, and after they had fallen into a sound sleep, he got off one of his extraordinary loud snores, which awaking his wife suddenly, and she raising up in bed and shaking him, said: "Jake, Jake, did you hear that explosion?" Of course he did, but never let on where it came from.

PERSONAL.—N. H. Frohlichstein, of Mobile, Ala., writes: I take great pleasure in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, having used it for a severe attack of Bronchitis and Catarrh. It gave me instant relief and entirely cured me and I have not been afflicted since. I also beg to state that I had tried other remedies with no good result. Have also used Electric Bitters and Dr. King's New Life Pills, both of which I can recommend.

Dr. King's New Discovery, for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, is sold on a positive guarantee. Trial bottles free at W. C. Patterson's Drug Store.

OUR CORRESPONDENTS.

CONCORD.

Mrs. M. E. Baker has been quite sick for several days.

Henry Milton and wife entertained friends last Saturday.

Misses Maggie and Ida Koch are visiting relatives in and near Hicksville.

John Baker and family have been visiting relatives in Ohio during the holidays.

James Johnson has been very much "under the weather" for several days.

Will Hilderbrand, of LaGrange, is visiting his friends and relatives in this place this week.

Frank Draggoo gave his first writing lesson at the Hay school house last Saturday evening.

Dan Wyatt lost a valuable cow the day before Christmas. The supposition is that she was poisoned.

SPENCERVILLE.

Mrs. O. W. Rummel is convalescent.

Rev. Curry is holding a series of meeting at this place.

Milt Downs returned to his home in Lansing, the first of the week.

W. W. Bishop, of Van Wert, Ohio, spent New Year's with his parents.

Mr. Keys, of Attica, Ohio, is visiting his daughter, Mrs. Dave Butler.

Miss Rallie Murphy, of Waterloo, spent a part of last week at this place.

Smith, Steward & Co. shipped a car load of ash lumber to Hicksville this week.

Mrs. E. Devilbiss, of Butler, is visiting her parents and friends in this vicinity.

Margaret Henderson slipped on the ice last Tuesday morning, and was seriously injured.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society will be entertained by Mrs. Allen, Saturday afternoon January 7th, 1888. All are cordially invited.

Every one should attend the debate next Monday evening, at the school house. The question is: Resolved that war is a greater evil than intemperance. It is sure to be interesting.

COBURN TOWN.

Mrs. Emma Abel will start for home next Tuesday. She has been visiting with relatives and friends here for several weeks.

Mr. Editor: I trust you have so far recovered from your attack of the "gimps," as to be able to get your paper out on time this week, so will send you a few items.

The viewers took the ninety-ninth view of the much contested road again Wednesday, in order to assess the damages, if any. We trust that road will be established ere long.

We just heard that William Coburn started for Bailey, Michigan, the first of the week, in answer to a telegram stating that his sister was not expected to live. Don't know if such is the case.

The band boys are having a good deal of trouble, to find a place to meet to practice, as the teachers of both schools have fired them out. The teacher of the north school because they broke a slate pencil, and they were shut out of the south house for spitting on the floor.

As none of Russ Coburn's friends saw fit to donate him a cow, to replace the one he lost, he got mad about it and went and bought a full blood prohibition cow of P. Shirts, and he thinks he has a good one too, and now he says if O. H. will send him over a few eggs from his "hold-over" chickens, he will have an old fashioned prohibition holdover custard pie for dinner.

W. D. Hoyt & Co., Wholesale and Retail Druggists of Rome Ga., say: We have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery, Electric Bitters and Bucklen's Arnica Salve for four years. Have never handled remedies that sell as well, or give such universal satisfaction. There have been some wonderful cures effected by these medicines in this city. Several cases of pronounced Consumption have been entirely cured by use of a few bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery taken in connection with Electric Bitters. We guarantee them always. Sold by W. C. Patterson's.

LOCALS.

John Leighty returned to college Saturday.

John P. Widney is spending a few days in town.

Don Van Fleit was at Garrett on business, yesterday.

Treasurer John Davis of Auburn, was in town Wednesday.

Mrs. Jane Baker and children spent last week at Butler.

Mrs. Jones, of Garrett, is assisting in a revival meeting at Butler.

About thirty people enjoyed a good dinner at Ed White's last Wednesday.

A pleasant leap year party was held at the residence of Chris Curie, last evening.

The Teacher's Reading Circle will meet regularly every Wednesday evening, at the school house.

Gas well No. 2 at Auburn is being put down through difficulties. Sunday about 200 feet of dirt caved in on it, which will cause quite a delay in the work. The well is down about 800 feet.

St. Joe needs another good furniture store.

Miss Minnie Walters, of Auburn, visited friends in town last Saturday and Sunday.

Rev. Albright, of Maysville, was the guest of Rev. Langley on Friday of last week.

Mrs. Alex. Devilbiss, of Butler, visited with the family of M. T. Bishop last week.

Agent McKee and Weighmaster Baker have been busy the past week, settling up accounts with the old year.

They had a clothes pin social at Spencerville one night last week. About the next thing ought to be a wash-tub social.

Wash Askew has purchased an interest in a barber shop in Auburn. Wash can now say, "all aboard for the barber shop."

Alex. Donaldson and son Charley, visited friends in town last week. Mrs. Donaldson is visiting relatives in Pennsylvania.

The old folk's at the Hub, are arranging for their annual hop, which will take place on the evening of January 24th, 1888.

Edgerton has fifty-five stoves burning natural gas, and the consequence is that wood don't bring a very high price in that burg.

The Dispatch now burns gas for fuel, and they don't have the pleasure of drumming up delinquent subscribers to bring in a load of wood.

Several persons from this place attended the Royal Spanish Troubadours at Hicksville Friday evening. They report the entertainment to be first class.

Misses Nettie and Nellie Ackley, of Hicksville, and Mr. Harry Congdon, of Bristol, were the guests of Miss Prudie Lounsbury over last Sunday.

Agent McKee reports that holiday travel on the B. & O. has been large this year. On the Saturday before Christmas, he sold over one hundred dollars worth of tickets.

A series of revival meetings are in progress at Auburn. Surely if there is a town in the county that needs a general shaking up in that direction, it is Auburn. A little religion mixed with the gas will make it burn brighter.

Waterloo is going to bore for gas, and don't you forget it; and we would laugh clear down in our shirt sleeve, if they would strike a vein that would lay all others in the shade. In that case the Garrett Clipper could get off its old gag of Waterloo being a graveyard town.

Some good friend at Butler presented the Methodist choir at that place, with two pounds of caramels on Christmas. Just imagine a church choir with two pounds of caramels to "chaw" at. We venture there wouldn't be much singing done until they were got away with.

Rev. D. W. Parr, the Methodist minister at Waterloo, was presented with a handsome gold watch, last week, valued at $75. He is an earnest worker in the cause, and it is largely through his efforts that a new church has been built in the place of the one that burned down last fall.

We received a letter from Mrs. Matilda Widney last week enclosing money, and requesting that the News be sent to her address regularly until she returns. She writes that, that part of Louisiana where she is stopping is a fine country, but that she would prefer to live where there are a few more white men, and not quite so many negroes.

Hippenhammer takes a Trip up into Michigan.

Bi the tyme this letter reaches yu I shal bea wel on mi wa tu Kanady, not that I hav defrauded anabody, stolen ana munny or robbed ana hen-roosts, and am compelled to flea in order to avoid being arrestud, but merely that I am going up into the northern part ov Michigan, to viset frends fur a fue days. We left Sant Jo on Saturday befour Nue Years, and strange ez it ma seem, the trane was onli 30 minets late. The B. & O. tranes, however, ar awlways behind; in fact it seams to be against the rules ov the company to run a trane on tyme, and wen a cuckoocter finds he iz liabel to git into a stushun on shedule tyme, he generally pules off onto a siding sunayder and wates, so az knot to dispoint the passen-pars. Wel, az we sed befour, we left Sant Joe, and arriving at Awburn Junctionshun, we take the Lake Shore trane north. At Awburn we wer surprized to see so many peepel gitting on the trane; we coodnt imagine wher thy wer awl-bound fur, but az a majority ov them got off at Waterloo, we at one cum tu the conclushun that tha wer Awburn peepel going up tu Waterloo to trade, (fur tha du sa Awburn is the deerest place in the kounty tu trade outside ov Garrit.) - Aftar leaving Waterloo we noticed a finely dressed, pompous looking individual sitting a fue seces in frunt ov us, talking in a sanktimonious wa, and cum tu find out it was Hu Culberson ov Awburn, tryng to pass himself off for a Metho diat preacher. We diddent say ana thing to give him awa, but we just luffed to ourself tu think how he'd swindel the pore farmers on machinera next summer. Our ride from Waterloo to Hillab, was unintersting; the severe cold that prevailed outside beet us, and the wind, so fearefully cold, that it muel ov a glance, and we wer so cold, which we wnt to say, that we had ana idee to get off fur th kountry iz so cold, and the best of the world, and the best of the world, had but coodnt. However, town, than 8 far it, that it, ly fur p, man w, kountry, then a sp, man, duckin, stop, ana peepel, ter at the, ing several, the hotel and, satisfying the, man and woman, (Mr. Mrs. Hippenhammer was with me,) we take stroll down town, to take in a fue ov the cites. Manchester is a town ov about a thousand inhabitants, moor or less; mostly germans, and the seemed to be a very fond by their, judging from the number ov salutes tu bea seen on exca land. Passing by a large church we noticed ther was servas being held and we went in. The services wer conducted in german by the preacher delievered a fine Nue Year's sermon; ov course we coodnt maik out a word he sed, but we kno it was splendid from the wh he was shuned with his hands. Wel, we had tu wate ther until the clock o'clock trane, an it was tegus waiting, especially wen yu dont hav anabody to talk tu but your wife. If it was sun body else's wife it woodnt bea so tedious; knot cheer. At last our trane came in and we got on board, and aftar a short run arrived at Hillab, our destinashun, wher we found our frends waiting fur us. What happened during the remainder ov our trip we quarely remembertym.

THE COMING GLORY.

New Year's Sermon by the Rev. Dr. Talmage.

In This World We Get No Idea of the Extent and Glory of Heaven—Eye Hath Not Seen Nor Ear Heard Anything Like the Advancing Splendors.

BROOKLYN, Jan. 1.—At the Tabernacle this morning the Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D., announced that next Sabbath he will begin a course of sermons to the women of America, with practical hints for men, the following subjects among others:

"The Women Who Have to Fight the Battles of Life Alone," "Marriage for Worldly Success, without Reference to Moral Character," "Is Engagement as Binding as Marriage?" "Women Who Are Already Uncongenially Married," "Influences Abroad for the Destruction of Women," "Wifely Ambition Right and Wrong," "What Kind of Men Women Should Avoid," "Simplicity as Opposed to Affectation," "Reformation in Dress," "Plain Women," "The Female Skeptic," and "Christian Housewifery."

This morning Dr. Talmage's subject was: "The Coming Glory," his text, I Corinthians ii, 9: "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him." He said: "Eighteen hundred and eighty-eight. How strange it looks, and how strange it sounds! Not only is the past year dead but the century is dying. Only twelve more long breaths and the old giant will have expired. None of the past centuries will be present at the obsequies. Only the twentieth century will see the nineteenth buried. As all the years are hastening past, and all our lives on earth will soon be ended, I propose to cheer myself, and cheer you with the glories to come, which shall utterly eclipse all the glories past; for my text tells us that eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, anything like the advancing splendors."

The city of Corinth has been called the Paris of antiquity. Indeed, for splendor the world beholds no such wonder to-day. It stood on an isthmus washed by two seas, the one sea bringing the commerce of Europe, the other sea bringing the commerce of Asia. From her wharves, in the construction of which whole kingdoms had been absorbed, war galleys with three banks of oars pushed out and confounded the navy yards of all the world. Huge handed machinery, such as modern inventions cannot equal, lifted ships from the sea on one side and transported them on tracks across the isthmus and set them down in the sea on the other side. The revenue officers of the city went down through the olive groves that lined the beach to collect a tariff from all nations. The mirth of all people sported in her Isthmian games, and the beauty of all lands sat in her theaters, walked her porticos and threw itself on the altar of her stupendous dissipations. Columns, and statue, and temple bewildered the beholder. There were white marble fountains, into which, from apertures at the side, there rushed waters everywhere known for health giving qualities. Around these basins, twisted into wreaths of stone, there were all of the beauties of sculpture and architecture; while standing, as if to guard the costly display, was a statue of Hercules of burnished Corinthian brass. Vases of terra cotta adorned the cemeteries of the dead—vases so costly that Julius Caesar was not satisfied until he had captured them for Rome. Armed officials, the Corinthian, paced up and down to see that no statue was defaced, no pedestal overthrown, no bas-relief touched. From the edge of the city a hill arose, with its magnificent burden of columns and towers and temples, (1,000 slaves waiting at one shrine, and a citadel so thoroughly impregnable that Gibraltar is a heap of sand compared with it. Amid all that strength and magnificence Corinth stood and defied the world.

Oh! it was not to rustics who had never seen anything grand that Paul uttered this text. They had heard the best music that had come from the best instruments in all the world; they had heard songs floating from morning porticoes and melting in evening groves; they had passed their whole lives among pictures and sculptures and architecture and Corinthian brass, which had been molded and shaped until there was no chariot wheel in which it had not sped, and no tower in which it had not glittered, and no gateway that it had not adorned. Ah, it was a bold thing for Paul to stand there amid all that and say: "All this is nothing." These sounds that come from the temple of Neptune are not music compared with the harmonies of which I speak. These waters rushing in the basin of Pyrene are not pure. These statues of Bacchus and Mercury are not exquisite. Your citadel of Acrocorinth is not strong compared with that which I offer to the poorest slave that puts down his burden at that brazen gate. You Corinthians think this is a splendid city; you think you have heard all sweet sounds and seen all beautiful sights; but I tell you eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him."

You see my text sets forth the idea, however exalted our ideas may be, of Heaven, they come far short of the reality. Some wise men have been calculating; how many furlongs long and wide is the New Jerusalem; and they have calculated how many inhabitants there are on the earth; how long the earth will probably stand; and then they come to this estimate: that after all the nations have been gathered to Heaven, there will be room for each soul—a room sixteen feet long and fifteen feet wide. It would not be large enough for me. I am glad to know that no human estate is sufficient to take the dimensions. "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard," nor arithmetics calculated.

I first remark that we can in this world get no idea of the health of Heaven. When you were a child, and you went out in the morning, how you bounded along the road or street—you had never felt sorrow or sickness. Perhaps later you felt a glow in your cheek, and a spring in your step, and an exuberance of spirits, and a clearness of eye, that made you thank God you were permitted to live. The nerves were harp-strings, and the sunlight was a doxology, and the rustling leaves were the rustling of the robes of a great crowd rising up to praise the Lord. You thought that you knew what it was to be well, but there is no perfect health on earth. The diseases of past generations came down to us. The airs that float now upon the earth are not like those which floated above Paradise. They are charged with impurities and distempers. The most elastic and robust health of earth, compared with that which those experienced before whom the gates have been opened, is nothing but sickness and emaciation. Look at that soul standing before the throne. On earth she was a life-long invalid. See her step now, and hear her voice now. Catch, if you can, one breath of that celestial air. Health in all the pulses—health of vision, health of spirits, immortal health. No racking cough, no sharp pleuritis; no consuming fevers, no exhausting pains, no hospitals of wounded men. Health swinging in the air; health flowing in all the streams; health blooming on the banks. No headaches, no sideaches, no backaches. That child that died in the agonies of croup, hear her voice now ringing in the anthem. That old man that went bowed down with the infirmities of old age, see him walk now with the step of an immortal athlete—forever young again. That night when the needle-woman fainted away in the garret, a wave of the heavenly air resuscitated her forever. For everlasting years to have neither ache, nor pain, nor weakness, nor fatigue. "Eye hath not seen it, ear hath not heard it."

I remark, further, that we can, in this world, get no just idea of the splendors of Heaven. John tries to describe them. He says "the twelve gates are twelve pearls," and that "the foundations of the wall are garnished with all manner of precious stones." As we stand looking through the telescope of St. John, we see a blaze of amethyst, and pearl and emerald and sardonyx and chrysoprasus and sapphire, a mountain of light, a cataract of color, a sea of glass, and a city like the sun.

John bids us look again and we see thrones; thrones of the prophets, thrones of the patriarchs, thrones of the angels, thrones of the apostles, thrones of the martyrs, throne of Jesus—throne of God. And we turn round to see the glory and it is thrones! thrones! thrones!

John bids us look again, and we see the great procession of the redeemed passing; Jesus, on a white horse, leads the march, and all the armies of Heaven following on white horses. Infinite cavalcade passing, passing; empires pressing into line, ages following ages. Dispensation tramping on after dispensation. Glory in the track of glory. Europe, Asia, Africa, North and South America pressing into line. Islands of the sea, shoulder to shoulder. Generations before the flood following generations after the flood, and as Jesus rises at the head of that great host and waves his sword in signal of victory, all crowns are lifted, and all ensigns slung out, and all chimes rung, and all hallelujahs chanted, and some cry: "Glory to God most high," and some, "Hosanna to the son of David;" and some, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain"—till all exclamations of endearment and homage in the vocabulary of Heaven are exhausted, and there comes up surge after surge of "Amen! amen! and amen!" "Eye hath not seen it, ear hath not heard it."

Skim from the summer waters the brightest sparkles and you will get no idea of the sheen of the everlasting sea. Pile up the splendor of earthly cities and they would not make a stepping stone by which you might mount to the city of God. Every house is a palace. Every step a triumph. Every covering of the head a coronation. Every meal is a banquet. Every stroke from the tower is a wedding bell. Every day is a jubilee, every hour a rapture, and every moment an ecstasy. "Eye hath not seen it, ear hath not heard it."

I remark further, we can get no idea on earth of the reunions of Heaven. If you have ever been across the seas and met a friend, or even an acquaintance, in some strange city, you remember how your blood thrilled, and how glad you were to see him. What will be our joy, after we have passed the seas of death, to meet in the bright city of the sun those from whom we have long been separated. After we have been away from our friends ten or fifteen years, and we come upon them, we see how differently they look. The hair has turned, and wrinkles have come in their faces, and we say, "How you have changed!" But oh, when we stand before the throne, all cares gone from the face, all marks of sorrow disappeared, and feeling the joy of that blessed land, methinks we will say to each other, with an exultation we cannot now imagine, "How you have changed!" In this world we only meet to part. It is good-by; good-by. Farewells floating in the air. We hear it at the rail car window, and at the steamboat wharf—good-by. (Children hush it, and old age answers it. Sometimes we hear it in a light way—

"good-by;" and sometimes with anguish in which the soul breaks down. Good-by! Ah, that is the word that ends the thanksgiving banquet; that is the word that comes in to close the Christmas chant. Good-by; good-by. But not so in Heaven. Welcomes in the air, welcomes at the gates, welcomes at the house of many mansions—but, no good-by. That group is constantly being augmented. They are going up from our circles of earth to join it—little voices to join the anthem—little hands to take hold in the great home circle—little feet to dance in the eternal glee, little crowns to be cast down at the feet of Jesus. Our friends are in two groups—a group this side of the river, and a group the other side of the river. Now there goes one from this to that, and another from this to that, and soon we will all be gone over. How many of your loved ones have already entered upon that blessed place. If I should take paper and pencil, do you think I could put them all down? Ah, my friends, the waves of Jordan roar so hoarsely, we cannot hear the joy on the other side when that group is augmented. It is graves here, and coffins and hearse here. A little child's mother had died, and they comforted her. They said: "Your mother has gone to Heaven—don't cry," and the next day they went to the graveyard and they laid the body of the mother down into the ground; and the little girl came up to the verge of the grave, and, looking down at the body of her mother, said: "Is this Heaven?"

Oh, we have no idea what Heaven is. It is the grave here—it is darkness here—but there is merry-making yonder. Methinks when a soul arrives some angel takes it around to show it the wonders of that blessed place. The usher angel says to the newly arrived: "These are the martyrs that perished at Piedmont; these were torn to pieces at the Inquisition; this is the throne of the great Jehovah; this is Jesus." "I am going to see Jesus," said a dying boy; "I am going to see Jesus." The missionary said, "You are sure you will see Him?" "Oh! yes; that's what I want to go to Heaven for." "But," said the missionary, "suppose Jesus should go away from Heaven—what then?" "I should follow Him," said the dying boy. "But if Jesus went down to hell—what then?" The dying boy thought for a moment and then said, "Where Jesus is there can be no hell!" Oh! to stand in his presence! That will be Heaven. Oh! to put our hand in that hand which was wounded for us on the cross—to go around amid the groups of the redeemed, and shake hands with the prophets, and apostles, and martyrs, and with our own dear beloved ones! That will be the great reunion; we cannot imagine it now, our loved ones seem so far away. When we are in trouble and lonesome, they don't seem to come to us. We go on the banks of the Jordan and call across to them, but they don't seem to hear. We say, "Is it well with the child? Is it well with the loved ones?" and we listen to hear if any voice come back over the water. None! none! Unbelief says, "They are dead, and they are annihilated;" but blessed be God, we have a little Bible that tells us different. We open it and we find that they are neither dead nor annihilated—that they never were so much alive as now—that they are only waiting for our coming, and that we will join them on the other side of the river. Oh, glorious reunion! we cannot grasp it now. "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him." Oh! what a place of explanation it will be!

I see every day profound mysteries of Providences. There is no question we ask oftener than Why? There are hundreds of graves in Greenwood and Laurel Hill that need to be explained. Hospitals for the blind and lame, asylums for the idiotic and insane, almshouses for the destitute, and a world of pain and misfortune that demand more than human solution. Ah! God will clear it all up. In the light that pours from the throne no dark mystery can live. Things now utterly inscrutable will be illumined as plainly as though the answer were written on the jasper wall, or sounded in the temple anthem. Bartimeus will thank God that he was blind; and Lazarus, that he was covered with sores; and Joseph, that he was cast into the pit; and Daniel, that he denuded with the lions; and Paul, that he was humpbacked; and David, that he was driven from Jerusalem; and that invalid, that for twenty years he could not lift his head from the pillow; and that widow, that she had such hard work to earn bread for her children. The song will be all the grander for earth's weeping eyes, and aching heads, and exhausted hands, and scourged backs, and martyred agonies. But we can get no idea of the anthem here. We appreciate the power of secular music, but do we appreciate the power of sacred song? There is nothing more inspiring to me than a whole congregation lifted on the wave of holy melody. When we sing some of those dear old psalms and tunes they rouse all the memories of the past. Why, some of them were cradle songs in our father's house. They are all sparkling with the morning dew of a thousand Christian Sabbaths. They were sung by brothers and sisters gone now—by voices that were aged and broken in the music—voices none the less sweet because they did tremble and break. When I hear these old songs sung it seems as if all the old country meeting-houses joined in the chorus; and city church and sailors' beehel and Western cabins, until the whole continent lifts the doxology and the scepters of eternity beat time to the music. Away, then, with your starveling tunes that chill the devotions of the sanctuary and make the people sit silent when Jesus is marching on to victory. When generals come back from victorious wars, don't we cheer them and shout, "Huzza! huzza!" and when Jesus passes along in the conquest of the earth, shall we not have for Him one loud, ringing cheer?

All hail the power of Jesus' name!
Let angels prostrate fall.
Bring forth the rival dulcians,
And crown Him Lord of all.

But, my friends, if music on earth is so sweet, what will it be in Heaven? They all know the tune there. All the best singers of all ages will join it—choirs of white-robed children, choirs of patriarchs, choirs of apostles. Morning stars clapping their symbols. Harpers with their harps. Great anthems of God, roll on! roll on!—other empires joining the harmony till the thrones are all full and the nations all saved. Anthem shall touch anthem, chorus join chorus, and all the sweet sounds of earth and Heaven be poured into the ear of Christ. David of the harp will be there. Gabriel of the trumpet will be there. Germany, redeemed, will pour its deep bass voice into the song, and Africa will add to the music with her matchless voice.

I wish we could anticipate that song. I wish in your closing hymn to-day we might catch an echo that slips from the gates. Who knows but that, when the heavenly door opens to-day to let some soul through, there may come forth the stream of the jubilant voices until we catch it? Oh, that as the song drops down from Heaven, it might meet half way a song coming up from earth.

They rise for the doxology, all the multitude of the blest! Let us rise with them; and so at this hour the joys of the church on earth and the joys of the church in Heaven will mingle their chaises, and the dark apparel of our morning will seem to whiten into the spotless raiment of the skies. God grant through the rich mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ we may all get there.

"What did he say?"

"He said dat ob course he didn't hab no objections, because it was a house of public resort and ebervbody could sit whar he pleases."

"What did you say?"

"I said dat I was mighty obleeged ter him; dat I had no race objections needer; dat I knowed he was a generman as soon as I sot eyes on him, and I sot down at de same table and called for coffee."

"What did the white generman say when yer sot at de same table?"

"I nebber was so 'sprised in my life. He said dat dis being a place ob public resort ebervbody had a right to sit whar he pleased, so he would take advantage ob dat circumstance and sit at de oder end ob de dining-room, before he would sit at de same table wid a kinky-headed, splay-footed coon like me; and pickin' up his glass he sot hisself at anoder table. ## Australian Mythology.

Every one who has lived in Australia has heard of the Bunyip, which corresponds to our sea-serpent. It is the one respectable flesh-curdling horror of which Australia can boast. The Old World has her tales of ghouls and vampire, of Morelei, spook and pixie, but Australia has nothing but her Bunyip. There never were any fauns in the eucalyptus forests, nor any naiads in the running creeks. No mythological hero left behind him stories of wonder and enchantment. No white man's hand has carved records of a poetic past on the gray volcanic looking boulders that overshadow some lonely gullies which I know. There are no sepulchres hewn in the mountain rampart surrounding a certain dried-up lake—probably the crater of an extinct volcano—familiar to my child, and which in truth suggests possibilities of a forgotten city of Kor. Nature and civilization have been very niggard here in all that makes romance.

No Australian traveler ever saw the Bunyip with his own eyes, and, though there are many stockman's yarns and Black's patters which have to do with this monster, they have all the hazy uncertainty which usually envelops information of the legendary kind. Some night perhaps when you are sitting over a camp fire brewing quart pot tea and smoking store tobacco, with the spectral white gums rising like an army of ghosts around you and the horses' hobbles clanking cheerfully in the distance, you will ask one of the over-landing hands to tell you what he knows about the Bunyip. The bushman will warm to his subject as readily as an Irishman to his banishee. He will indignantly repel your insinuation that the Bunyip may be after all as mythical as Alice's Jabberwock, and he will forthwith proceed to relate how a friend of his had a mate, who knew another chap, who had once in his life had a narrow escape from the Bunyip and had actually beheld it—and in a certain lagoon not a hundred miles from where you are squatting. He himself had never set eyes upon the Bunyip, nor has his mate, but there is not the smallest doubt that the other chap has seen it. When facts come to be boiled down, however, "the other chap's" statement will seem seriously vague and contradictory, and if the details are to be accepted as they stand a remarkable contribution to natural history must be the result.—London Society.

The Motive Power of the World.
The Bureau of Statistics in Berlin has recently issued some interesting information in connection with this subject. It appears that four-fifths of the engines now working in the world have been constructed during the last twenty-five years. France owns 49,500 stationary or locomotive boilers, 7,000 locomotives, and 1,850 boats' boilers; Germany has 59,000 boilers, 10,000 locomotives, and 1,700 ships' boilers; Austria, 12,000 boilers and 2,800 locomotives. The force equivalent to the working steam engines represents—in the United States, 7,500,000 horse-power; in England, 7,000,000 horse-power; in Germany, 4,500,000; in France, 3,000,000, and in Austria, 1,500,000. In these figures the motive power of the locomotives is not included, whose number in all the world amounts to 105,000, representing a total of 3,000,000 horse-power. A steam horse-power is equal to three actual horses' power, and a living horse is equal to seven men. The steam engines of the world represent, therefore, approximately the work of 1,000,000,000 men, or more than double the working population of the earth, whose total population amounts to 1,455,923,000 inhabitants. Steam has accordingly trebled man's working power, enabling him to economize his intellectual development.—London Standard.

The New Prize Story is eagerly sought for, read with pleasure or disappointment, is then tossed aside and forgotten. But ladies who read of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription read it again, for they discover in it something to prize—a messenger of joy to those suffering from functional derangements or any of the painful disorders or weaknesses peculiar to their sex. Periodical pains, internal inflammation, and ulceration readily yield to its wonderful curative and healing power. It is the only medicine for women sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

It's curious how affection and affection seem to harmonize.

AN OPEN LETTER

From Rev. J. Roberts, Pastor First M. E. Church, Fremont, Mich.
Rheumatic Syrup Co., Jackson, Mich.
GENTLEMEN—My daughter Anna has used Hubbard's Rheumatic Syrup and Plasters, which you so strongly recommended her to try. It has now been about eleven weeks since she commenced, and her inflammatory rheumatism is nearly broken up. Her limbs were badly swollen, and the poor girl was in terrible agony. In the midst of the pain we wound the Plasters about her limbs, and, as a result, the swelling was reduced and she became quiet and rested. The Syrup corrected her indigestion, cleansed the rheumatic poison from her blood, and she is now able to be around the house. She still uses the Syrup and Plasters, and will continue to do so until entirely well. We consider Hubbard's Rheumatic Syrup and Plasters remedies of great merit.

Dyspepsia

Does not get well of itself; it requires careful, persistent attention and a remedy that will assist nature to throw off the causes and tone up the digestive organs till they perform their duties willingly. Among the agonies experienced by the dyspeptic, are distress before or after eating, loss of appetite, irregularities of the bowels, wind or gas and pain in the stomach, heart-burn, sour stomach, etc., causing mental depression, nervous irritability and sleeplessness. If you are discouraged be of good cheer and try Hood's Sarsaparilla. It has cured hundreds, it will cure you.

The treatment of many thousands of cases of those chronic weaknesses and distressing ailments peculiar to females, at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., has afforded a vast experience in nicely adapting and thoroughly testing remedies for the cure of woman's peculiar maladies.
Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the outgrowth, or result, of this great and valuable experience. Thousands of testimonials, received from patients and from physicians who have treated it in the more aggravated and obstinate cases which had baffled their skill, prove it to be the most wonderful remedy ever devised for the relief and cure of suffering women. It is not recommended as a "cure-all," but as a most perfect Specific for woman's peculiar ailments.
As a powerful, invigorating tonic, it imparts strength to the whole system, and to the womb and its appendages in particular. For overworked, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," housekeepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon, being unequalled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic.
As a soothing and strengthening nerve, "Favorite Prescription" is unequalled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, irritability, exhaustion, prostration, hysteria, spasms and other distressing, nervous symptoms commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease of the womb. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency.
Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a legitimate medicine, carefully compounded by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable in its composition and perfectly harmless in its effects in any condition of the system. For morning sickness, or nausea, from whatever cause arising, weak stomach, indigestion, dyspepsia and kindred symptoms, its use, in small doses, will prove very beneficial.
"Favorite Prescription" is a positive cure for the most complicated and obstinate cases of leucorrhoea, excessive flowing, painful menstruation, unnatural suppressions, prolapsus, or falling of the womb, weak back, female weakness, anteversion, retroversion, bearing-down sensations, chronic congestion, inflammation and ulceration of the womb, inflammation, pain and tenderness in ovaries, accompanied with "internal heat."
As a regulator and promoter of functional action, at that critical period of change from girlhood to womanhood, "Favorite Prescription" is a perfectly safe remedial agent, and can produce only good results. It is equally efficacious and valuable in its effects when taken for those disorders and derangements incident to that later and most critical period, known as "The Change of Life."
"Favorite Prescription," when taken in connection with the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and small laxative doses of Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets (Little Liver Pills), cures Liver, Kidney and Bladder diseases. Their combined use also removes blood taints, and abolishes cancerous and scrofulous humors from the system.
"Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

REMINISCENCES OF PUBLIC MEN.

BY BEN: PERLEY POORE.

Charles Sumner possessed that root of statesmanship, the power of forethought. Stepping boldly in advance of the Republican forces, he would plant a banner bearing as an inscription some movement toward emancipation, and then urge others, the President, Congress, the Cabinet, to come forward and sustain it. He was the only directing mind in the Senate which deliberately fixed a distinct end of action, selected the means for arriving at that end, and pursued it steadily with a courage which shrank before no opposition and suffered no abatement in defeat. "Why, Mr. Sumner," said Mr. Lincoln one day to the Massachusetts Senator, "I am only six weeks behind you." Mr. Sumner was always in the advance, and his place on the service roll of the Great Rebellion will be "Leader of the Vanguard of Freedom."

Mr. Sumner as a Senator was a man of more imposing presence than was Mr. Sumner when a student, and it might be said of him in his latter days, as Dr. Johnson once said of Edmund Burke, "Sir, if you should meet him under a bridge during a shower, and had never seen him before, you would know him to be a great man." He was six feet two inches high, his average weight was 208 pounds, and he measured forty inches around the chest. After his infelicitous marriage, his thought-worn face was serious, even to sadness, and his long, waving hair became silvered. His manners were gentlemanly and cordial; he was an industrious collector of paintings, engravings, rare books, autographs and historical curiosities; he was hospitable and generous, and those who served him loved him. He possessed no element of humor or romance, and his modesty was so well known at Washington that the most famous teller of ribald stories there never uttered one in his presence.

Mr. Sumner's share in the diplomatic success of the North during the great Rebellion should not be lost sight of. He endeavored to have the President select for appointment to diplomatic positions men of experience in public affairs and of known integrity, rather than bestow those places as rewards for political services or asylum retreats for defeated candidates for office. Mr. Lincoln and Mr. Seward both entertained the highest regard for him, and by humoring some of his weaknesses, made him a valuable coadjutor in conducting foreign affairs during the difficult and delicate period of the Rebellion. Mr. Sumner had always been accused of "Anglo-mania," but in 1869 he blew such a "jarring blast" concerning the responsibilities of Great Britain for the damages committed on American commerce by Confederate privateers fitted out in the British ports, as to awaken the ire of her gracious majesty's subjects, especially those of them connected with the public press. Indeed, he rarely made a speech of any length in which the well-balanced periods, the terse expressions, and the purity of the language were not marred by violent and audacious phrases.

The closing years of Mr. Sumner in the Senate were not happy ones for him. He found himself at war with some of those with whom he had stood shoulder to shoulder in the great battle for equality before the war, while corrupt men were wearing the uniform of the Republican party that they might plunder the military chest.

An Albany raconteur is responsible for the following anecdote of the "Great Expounder": "How do you like that Daniel Webster?" said Caterer John Keeler to one of the guests at his restaurant on State street, the other day. The guest was eating a fish ball deliciously browned, with a silvery poached egg on top of it. "Why do you call these 'Daniel Websters?'" was the reply. "Why," said Mr. Keeler, "because Mr. Webster got them up. He was the first man who ever prepared them, and I make them from his recipe, and, by the way, I am having a copy made of Webster's clam-chowder recipe, the regular old New England chowder. I will astonish you with that some day." As the conversation progressed, a gentleman with long hair and with a carpet-bag between his feet, who had been eating a plate of oyster soup, turned around, caught Mr. Keeler by the sleeve, and inquired: "Say, mister, who got up them fish balls and eggs?" "Why, Daniel Webster," said Mr. Keeler. "Daniel Webster," repeated the stranger, "where did he keep his eatin' house?"

The opportunity for a lecture on American history suddenly developed itself to Mr. Keeler, of which the rural visitor obtained full benefit free of charge.

Watered Oysters.

Not every lover of the oyster knows that the size and plumpness which are so highly prized in the great American bivalve, and which are so attractive in specimens on the half-shell or in the stew as to lead the average man to pay a considerably extra price for extra size, are not entirely natural; and even those who do know that the majority of the oysters in the market are artificially swollen by introducing water into the tissues are not all aware that the process by which this is done is closely analogous to that by which the food in our own bodies is conveyed through the walls of the stomach and other parts of the digestive apparatus and poured into the blood and lymph to do its work of nourishment.

Physiologists are, I believe, agreed that the passage of the digested food through the walls of the alimentary canal in man and other animals is, in large part, due to osmosis or dialysis, and that the operation of this physical law is a very common one in the animal body. But the quantitative study of the chemical changes involved is generally rendered difficult or impossible by the very fact of their taking place in living animals, where the application of chemical analysis is impossible. An opportunity is, however, offered by the oyster, which, since it lives in water and has a body so constituted as to readily permit the inflow and outflow of water and solutions of salts, may be easily used for experiments. The results of the experiments have a practical as well as scientific interest, since they confirm the common explanation of the increase in bulk of oysters by "floating," and show that it is essentially a process of watering, in which the bulk is increased without any corresponding increase, but rather, if anything, a loss of nutritive material. —Prof. W. O. Atwater.

What the Man Said to the Horse.

Apropos of "horse whispering," a correspondent points out that the mystery is very simply explained by Barrow. Here are his words in the "Roman Rye": "I knew a cob in Ireland that could be driven into a state of kicking madness by a particular word used by a particular person in a particular tone; but that word was connected with a very painful operation which had been performed upon him by that individual, who had frequently employed it at a certain period while the animal had been under his treatment. The same cob could be soothed in a moment by another word used by the same individual in a very different kind of tone—the word 'deaghblasda,' or sweet-tasted. Some time after the operation, while the cob was yet under his hands, the fellow—who was what the Irish call a fairymith—had done all he could to soothe the creature, and had at last succeeded by giving it gingerbread buttons, of which the cob became passionately fond. Invariably, however, before giving it a button he said: 'Deaghblasda,' with which word the cob by degrees associated an idea of unmixed enjoyment. So, if he could rouse the cob to madness by the word which recalled the torture to its remembrance, he could easily soothe it by the other word, which the cob knew would be instantly followed by the button which the smith never failed to give him after using the word 'deaghblasda.' —St. James Gazette.

An Old Viking.

When the grave of an old Viking was opened recently his skeleton showed that he had been laid to face the setting sun. He had worn a woolen surcoat, edged with a frilling of gold, and buckled at the neck with a golden clasp. His belt was of stamped leather, fastened with two gold buckles. Over his lap was his shield, round, two feet across, with the underside of wood and the outer of bronze, with a rim of iron. His hands were placed across his shield as if to clasp it to his breast, and on them had been bracelets of bronze, with serrated edges and rims of gilded silver. His two-edged sword of iron, thirty inches long and sheathed in wood, lay at his side, and close at hand was a dagger of iron and a barbed javelin. To the right of his feet was a bucket, such as the Saxons carried on their war ships, made of the same materials as his shield.

The Winter Nap.

By mid-October most of the Rip Van Winkles among our brute creatures have lain down for their winter nap. The toads and turtles have buried themselves in the earth. The woodchuck is in his hibernaculum, the skunk in his, the mole in his; and the black bear has his selected, and will go in when the snow comes. He does not like the looks of his big tracks in the snow. They publish his goings and comings too plainly. The coon retires about the same time. The provident woodmice and the chipmunk are laying by a supply of nuts or grain, the former usually in decayed trees, the latter in the ground. I have observed that an unusual disturbance in the woods near where the chipmunk has his den, will cause him to shift his quarters. One October, for many successive days, I saw one carrying into his hole buckwheat which he had stolen from a near field. The hole was only a few rods from where we were getting out stone, and as our work progressed and the racket and uproar increased, the chipmunk became alarmed. He ceased carrying in, and after much hesitating and darting about, and some prolonged absences, he began to carry out; he had determined to move; if the mountain fell, he at least would be away in time. So by mouthfuls, or cheekfuls, the grain was transferred to a new place. He did not make a "bee" to get it done, but carried it all himself, occupying several days, and making a trip every ten minutes.

Insects also go into winter quarter, by or before this time; the bumble-bees, hornet, and wasp. But here only royalty escapes; the queen-mother alone foresees the night of winter coming and the morning of spring beyond. The rest of the tribe try gyping for awhile, but perish in the first frosts. The present October I surprised the queen of the yellow-jackets in the woods looking out a suitable retreat. The royal dame was house-hunting, and on being disturbed by my inquisitive poking among the leaves, she got up and flew away with a slow, deep hum. Her body was unusually distended, whether with fat or eggs, I am unable to say. In September I took down the nest of the black hornet, and found several large queens in it, but the workers had all gone. The queens were evidently weathering the first frosts and storms here, and waiting for the Indian summer to go forth and seek a permanent winter abode. If the covers could be taken off the fields and woods at this season, how many interesting facts of natural history would be revealed! The crickets, ants, bees, reptiles, animals, and for aught I know, the spiders and flies, asleep or getting ready to sleep in their winter dormitories; the fires of life banked up and burning just enough to keep the spark over until spring. —John Burroughs.

Fine Crape—How It Is Manufactured.

"What's that?" A jobber in imported dry goods was showing a visitor a piece of flimsy black material that looked uncommonly like common gauze. "Why do you ask?" "I didn't know that you imported any goods of that description." "Why, that is one of our staple articles. That is a very fine quality of crape!" "The kind of crape that widows wear?" "The same. It has been washed in hot water. That makes the change in its appearance." "How could it?" "I'll tell you. Crape is light, transparent, plainly woven of hard silk of the natural color. Its peculiar appearance is caused by the dyeing and dressing after it leaves the loom. Gum is added to the material, and the threads, owing to their stiffness, unweave the twist they receive in the mill. This gives it its unevenness." "Doesn't any kind of wetting hurt it?" "Yes, more or less, but it never looks like gauze until it is thoroughly soaked in hot water. That is one of our tests as to the quality of the material and workmanship. If you ever want to test any crape that you may buy, you had better take the dealer's word instead of your own experiment, for once crape is washed out it can never be restored." —New York Mail and Express.

INDIANA STATE NEWS.

The officers of the northern prison have filed their annual reports with the Governor. The condition of the prison is, in the customary language, represented as being in every way perfect. The directors state that solitary confinement is the most severe mode of punishment now used, and the warden, in speaking of the same matter, says: "Since my last report I have abolished the use of the 'cats' as a means of punishment. After a long experience, I have become convinced that it is lowering in its tendencies, and is not conducive to good discipline, and degrading in its effects, and is wholly unnecessary in controlling convicts. I think better results come from a more humane system of treatment, with a judicious use of milder disciplinary measures. As the years go by I am more strengthened in my opinion that a classification of the inmates of our prisons into different grades is imperatively necessary, if we hope to decrease crime and place unfortunates under our charge on the road to reformation. The promiscuous herding of the young in age and crime with the old and hardened criminals is a relic of the past. This age demands better methods, and every effort should be brought to bear in our Legislature to bring about a change in this respect." The number of convicts in the prison at the beginning of the year was 697, and at the close 634. The number discharged was 314, against 290 received, while sixteen were paroled by the Governor and thirteen died. The warden paid to the State Treasurer during the year $110,245.56 and received from the State $102,245.56. His receipts and earnings amounted to $105,635.42. He now has $10,107.59 due the State and $3,270.98 due the convicts. The sales to prisoners amounted to $5,250.63. The average cost of feeding each prisoner is 35-6 cents per meal; of clothing, 2 cents a day, and fuel, 1 1/2 a day. Including everything, the average cost of maintaining each prisoner is 37 3/10 cents per day.

A serious accident occurred at Martin's ice house, two miles north of Crawfordsville. Preparations were being made to put in a new stock of ice; the old ice left over from last season was being removed, and in doing this work dynamite cartridges were frequently used. Charles Coombs laid one of the cartridges on a stove in a small room adjoining. When the cartridge became sufficiently hot it exploded with disastrous effect, the occupants of the room being ignorant of the fact that such a thing was upon the stove. The following persons were injured: Perry Endicott, frightfully cut about the head and face, having thirteen gashes; B. F. Snyder, severely cut about the head; Will Martin, hit in the face and one cheek badly injured, also one eye. Three other men were also more or less injured.

The press dispatch sent out from Louisville to the effect that there is a great scarcity of coal in the Ohio Valley does not apply to the lower Ohio Valley, of which Evansville is the center. There is no scarcity of coal there, there being sixty coal shafts within twenty miles, six of which are within the city limits, Evansville being situated over two heavy veins of rich bituminous coal. Higher prices elsewhere never affect Evansville materially, the average price for coal for steam-making purposes being 75 cents per ton the year round.

While boring for gas, one mile west of Edinburg on S. C. Thompson's farm, coal was struck in paying quantities at the depth of sixty feet, which was tested and pronounced equal to Cannelton coal. A company was organized with a capital stock of $10,000, with the following officers: S. Cutsinger, President; H. Maily, Vice President; S. C. Thompson, Treasurer; H. W. Schooler, Manager. Preparations will be begun at once to work the mine.

John W. Vaughn, an employe at the Ohio Falls car works, Jeffersonville, was killed while assisting to raise a new coal car in one of the setting-up shops. The iron "jack" Vaughn was using being out of repair, the catch slipped, allowing the car to topple over on him. The main sill on the side of the car on which he was working caught Vaughn across the chest, pinioning him to the ground and crushing out his life in an instant.

Mrs. Hannah Ellis, of Rockport, met a horrible death by fire. She was more than 70 years old and a helpless paralytic, and was left in her room by the family sitting in an arm-chair by the fire. No one visited her room for half an hour, and when she was discovered her clothing was all burned up. She was speechless, and her suffering was terrible. She died within an hour without regaining consciousness.

Postmaster John E. Banta, of Muncie, issued an order which provides that no minor can get mail at the office without an order from his or her parents or guardian. The moral effect of the proclamation is working good results, as the schemes of many young ladies who have been carrying on correspondence with young men, for no good cause, has been checked altogether.

In the number of pensioners on its list the Indiana pension agency ranks third in the country. During the month of December there was a decrease of 116 and a net gain of 286, making the number on the list 36,081. The last quarterly disbursement amounted to a million and a quarter.

At Columbus, Bemie Springer and wife were driving in a single buggy, when the horse became frightened and ran away, throwing them violently to the frozen ground. Both were dangerously hurt. Mrs. Springer is in a delicate condition, and it is feared she cannot withstand the shock.

Frank Bruder, 8 years of age, son of C. F. Bruder, of the New Albany Fire Department, in attempting to get on a train in the yards of the New Albany and Chicago Railroad, fell and was run over. The left leg was so badly crushed that death ensued in two hours.

A large vat of mash in the distillery at Terre Haute exploded, breaking the leg of an employe, destroying the building, and causing a loss of several thousand dollars.

Archie Smith was run over by a freight train at Spray's Station and killed. His head was severed from his body.

Judge Vinton, of the Lafayette Circuit Court, has decided that telephone companies doing a general telephone business, are compelled by statutes to furnish instruments at the legal rate of $3 per month.

The Executive Committee of the Hendricks Monument Association of Indianapolis, have $18,000 in the treasury, and only require $3,000 more. The committees are considering several designs.

The silver mines of Dubois County are turning out ore rock that assays $69 of silver and $4 of gold to the ton. The smelter treats about twenty tons of the rock per day.

Congressman Brown, of Ohio, has introduced a bill to appropriate $20,000 to erect a monument at the grave of Gen. W. H. Harrison, at North Bend.

Indianapolis is credited with having the second largest baking-powder manufactory in the United States.

Susan Wilson, aged 82 years, was found dead in bed at Cloverdale from heart disease.

George Halverson, fireman, was crushed to death in a railway accident at Wabash.

"This is a fee-nominal case," remarked a lawyer who received a dollar for defending a man.

EVENTS OF A WEEK.

THE OLD WORLD.

—Unusually severe winter and heavy snows are reported in various parts of Europe. In Austria railroad trains are blocked.

—An American prima donna, Miss Ella Russell, of Cleveland, has made a successful appearance in opera at Warsaw, the capital of Poland.

—The National Zeitung, of Berlin, in an article on the political situation, says: "Germany neither expects nor desires war. Prince Bismarck has thrown into the scale the decisive word in favor of peace. It is hardly probable that Russia will be in a position to force a war upon Germany and her allies. The chances are, therefore, that peace will prevail, although this peace cannot be taken as synonymous with the restoration of European tranquillity—a fact for which Russia must answer to the world."

—Gladstone expresses the belief that peace will continue throughout the winter, but he is not so sure as to what the spring will bring forth.

—A cable dispatch to the Chicago Herald says:

The conviction is rapidly solidifying that the already strained relations of the various European powers with one another are fast becoming unbearable, and that the irksome and barriers must soon be swept aside with the inevitable consequence of bloodshed. The Standard, discussing the situation in an exceedingly serious strain, concludes that there must be an armed struggle on the continent in the near future, or else there must be on the part of the weaker powers an abject submission to the will of the stronger. Nothing in the nature of a middle course, the Standard believes will suffice, while a continuance of the present state of things must necessarily lead to the bankruptcy of the leading European powers, both in home and foreign affairs. The outlook for Great Britain for the New Year is anything but promising. Trade is dull, and the expenses of coercion in Ireland are enormous and threaten to be still heavier. There is a feeling that war upon the continent is inevitable in the spring, and a fear exists that England may be dragged into the struggle. Bismarck and his intrigues are distrusted by the British mind.

—The observance in St. Peter's, at Rome, on the 1st inst., of the Pope's jubilee, was most enthusiastic. The Pontiff took part in the ceremonies, and was greeted with shouts by the assembled worshippers. The occasion was suitably commemorated in all parts of the world where the Pope's dominion is recognized.

POLITICAL POINTS.

—Great excitement prevails throughout Harper County on account of the bitter feeling between Harper and Anthony over the contest for the county seat. In the last election Harper received a majority of 300 votes. The candidates were given certificates, but the Anthony folks are contesting the election on the ground of fraud and ballot-box stuffing in Harper. A few days ago the citizens of Anthony held a mass-meeting, and after passing a series of very belligerent resolutions proceeded to organize a Winchester Rifle Klub. The Anthony paper is taking an active part in the matter, and when the news of the developments reached Harper hundreds of men offered their services to defend that burg's people and property. The outcome is a matter of lively speculation.

—Lieut.-Gov. Albert P. Morehouse has been sworn in as Governor of Missouri to finish the unexpired term of the late Gov. Marum. His first official act was to appoint V. C. Yantis, Private Secretary to the dead executive, to the same position under himself. Gov. Morehouse was born July 11, 1835, in Delaware county, Ohio. His early life was spent on a farm. He moved to Nodaway county, Missouri, in 1856 with his parents, who are still living there. He served through part of the war as a lieutenant in the Union militia of Missouri. Most of his life has been spent in teaching school and practicing law. He was a delegate to the Democratic National Conventions of 1872 and 1876, and has served in the legislature. His only state office has been that of Lieutenant-Governor, to which position he was elected on the ticket with Gov. Marum in 1884.

—The Kansas Temperance Union, in convention at Topeka, passed resolutions to continue earnest work for constitutional prohibition, and declared against third party agitation.

FINANCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL.

—A statement of the comparative growth of industry and business in the South for the past two years shows remarkable progress. During 1887 the total amount of new capital employed, including the capital stock of incorporated companies, was $256,248,000, against $124,224,000 for 1886.

—The Wall street magnates pronounce the year just closed one of weakness and low prices on the Stock Exchange.

—The following is a recapitulation of the debt statement (cents omitted) issued by the United States Treasurer on the 3d inst.:

—The great Reading strike promises to become a serious matter in the anthracite region. A telegram from Reading says:

Had the strike on the Reading Road proved successful and traffic been entirely paralyzed there could not have been more genuine alarm throughout the great industrial regions of the Schuylkill Valley than there is to-day. The proprietors of large furnaces and iron works in this section predict that if the mines are shut down for two weeks the majority of the large establishments will be obliged to close owing to the lack of a supply of coal. Many of them have been running for weeks short of coal and most of them have less than a week's supply on hand. All the industrial cities and towns in this section such as Reading, Birdsboro, Norristown, Pottstown, Hamburg, and smaller places, receive their coal over the Reading Railroad, and with the stoppage of work at the mines, trade will be entirely paralyzed. The members of the Knights of Labor in this city, while refusing to strike, have promised the Schuylkill miners financial support, the same as they are giving the men in the Lehigh region. There is a movement on foot among the business men of this end of the Schuylkill Valley to hold a meeting in this city and bring such pressure to bear upon President Corbin as to cause him to consent to arbitration of the miners' strike at least. It is argued that the immense industries of this section of the State cannot afford such a fearful paralysis to business and trade. The strike will not only throw 30,000 miners out of employment but 30,000 ironworkers as well.

FIRES AND ACCIDENTS.

—The greater part of the town of Hicksville, Ohio, was wiped out by fire. The loss to business men will reach $100,000, and the inhabitants are suffering. Porter & Macreau's wholesale grocery house at Memphis, Tenn., was destroyed by fire; loss, $90,000. A. H. & O. K. Jones' shoe factory at Stratford, N. H., was burned, entailing a loss of $80,000. The Lake Shore and Michigan Southern depot at Okego, Allegan County, Mich., and the Stevens & Brace Iron Company's establishment, Kansas City, were likewise destroyed. Damage in the latter case is estimated at $100,000. The loss by fire at Houma, La., is estimated at $150,000.

—A Livingston (Ala.) special says: "A landslide on the Queen and Crescent Railroad caught and buried eight cars on a freight-train. Two minutes later the south-bound express came dashing along, struck the debris, and wrecked two passenger-cars, injuring sixteen passengers."

—A collision on the Cincinnati Southern Railroad, at Louisville, Ky., resulted in the death of seven persons and serious injury to many others. A dreadful smash-up took place on the New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio Railroad, five miles west of Meadville, Pa., the New York limited dashing into a freight train. Both trains were two hours late. Five persons were killed instantly, and sixteen badly injured. Another disastrous wreck took place at Kouts, Ind., on the Chicago and Atlantic Railroad. The second section of a freight train ran into the first in a blinding snow-storm, and a fireman lost his life.

—Storage warehouse property along the Brooklyn water front amounting in value to $10,000,000 is about to be put into the control of a colossal trust. Fully one-half the foreign commerce of the port of New York will be involved.

THE CRIMINAL RECORD.

—The Coroner's jury at Waverly, Iowa, has finished its investigation of the celebrated Billings-Kingsley murder case, and returned a verdict finding Billings guilty of willful and premeditated murder. He was subsequently arrested on a Coroner's warrant charging murder in the first degree.

—Judge Steneman, of the United States Circuit Court, at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, has declared the Iowa registry law unconstitutional.

—A special dispatch from St. Francis, Ark., says:

William Herrig, who murdered his young wife and her paramour near here, has been hanged by a band of vigilantes. After the murder Herrig set out toward the northern boundary line, with the purpose, evidently, of escaping into Missouri, and making for Kansas City or St. Louis. Directly after the crime was discovered a posse of men set out to find him. They caught him about four miles north of Keosauqua. He was informed that he must die, and he made no protest. In fact, he said he was willing and ready; he had done nothing he had cause to regret. His wife had been untrue to him and he had killed her lover, and this he regarded as justice. Regarding the shooting of his wife he said he could offer nothing in the way of defense.

—A recent telegram from Wichita, Kan., says: "Charles Green, a cattle dealer from 'No Man's Land,' has arrived here, and gives some details of the capture and lynching of the Kelly family, whose horrible crimes, published widely a few days ago, were as equally atrocious as anything committed by the Bender family. The Kelly family left their ranch near Oak City, going south. A posse of citizens started in pursuit, and found them fifty miles south, in Texas. The old man escaped, but the son, Bill, was hanged, and the mother and daughter were shot while the posse was endeavoring to capture them."

—A negro incendiary named Oscar Conger was hanged by a mob at Cherokee, Ala. He was caught in the act of setting fire to a house.

—A negro watch-meeting at Fordtown, Alabama, wound up with a shooting-match in which three persons were killed and several wounded.

—The Lathrop memorial building at Albany, N. Y., erected by Mrs. Leland Stanford as a home for working women's children, has been dedicated. It cost, with its furniture, $75,000.

—The United States Consul at Odessa has unearthed customs frauds in wool invoices shipped to this country amounting to $10,000,000 or $15,000,000.

—A special dispatch from Waverly, Iowa, says: "The preliminary examination of M. E. Billings closed at Waverly on Tuesday. O. C. Miller, one of the leading attorneys of Waterloo, appeared for the defense. After some preliminary discussion the State offered in evidence the documents which were taken from Billings when he was arrested. They consisted of the decoy, letters, the alleged confession, etc. The defense objected to their admission, but the magistrate decided they were admissible, on the ground that Billings in his evidence had voluntarily testified to their contents. The counsel for the defense then waived further examination, and Billings was bound over to the February term of the District Court without bail."

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

—The recommendation to place the Union Pacific in the hands of a receiver created no alarm in Boston, where the owners live. The following of Gov. Patterson's suggestions, it was said would lead to twenty years' litigation and settle nothing.

—A movement has been organized in North Carolina for securing a repeal of the tax on tobacco, and a delegation will be sent to Washington for that purpose.

—The saloon-keepers of St. Paul are hereafter to be taxed $1,000 for license. They are working up a scheme to consolidate the business of liquor-selling on the "trust" principle, the brewers to furnish the capital and give employment to men only engaged in the business.

—The list of veterans of the war of 1812 has decreased to 1,064, while widows of veterans survive to the number of 11,831, which indicates that the old soldiers very numerously took young women for wives. Senator Hearst, of California, will shortly introduce a bill to increase from $8 to $25 per month the pensions of these surviving veterans.

SOME CURIOUS FIRES.

Singular Instances of Spontaneous Combustion Accounted For.
(Fire and Water.)

Cotton in bales has always been supposed to be free from spontaneous combustion until lately, when a case was discovered in a storehouse in northern New Jersey. A number of bales of sea island cotton stored there were found to be on fire, and when it was extinguished in one spot it would break out in another. A careful examination of the cotton and its condition showed that it was roller-gin cotton—that is, cotton which had not been run through a gang of saws, after the method of Eli Whitney, but the lint had been drawn away from the seeds by a pair of rolls, one large and one small, set at just the distance to keep the seeds from passing through, while the fiber passes on and goes into a bag.

It was found in this lot of cotton that some of the seeds had passed into the rolls and been cracked, which caused the oil to exude, saturating the fiber, which was thus, by the time it arrived in the north, in the proper condition for spontaneous combustion. Careful and extensive inquiry among northern mills failed to reveal any other such case, and therefore it can hardly be taken as a strong objection against the use of roller-gins in general. The ordinary roller-gin is practically a prehistoric tool, as it has been in use since cotton was known in ancient India. It is not nearly so fast as the ordinary saw gin, but it is said to do its work something better and with the least possible injury to the fiber, and to be therefore preferred for sea island cotton, which is of long fiber, and almost double the value of the ordinary grades.

Another curious fire was that which occurred in a knife factory in Massachusetts. In the middle of a room a small milling machine was working on hard-wood handles of knives. The dust or small fragments of the wood which were ground off were drawn up through a metal tube about one foot in diameter by a blower in the room above, and then forced through a wooden pipe out into the air. A spark from an emery wheel fifteen feet away from the milling machine struck a window twenty feet away, and glancing back entered the mouth of the metal tube, and set the hard-wood dust on fire, a stream of which twenty feet in length poured out of the wooden pipe into the air. The alarm was given by people outside, the workmen in the room being entirely unaware of any fire.

Another peculiar instance was a fire started by some cotton waste which an engineer in cleaning up a mill put in front of a boiler where it would be convenient for the firemen to burn in the morning. During the night the waste got on fire from spontaneous combustion and set fire to the kindlings and succeeded in raising sufficient steam to cause the boiler to blow off, very thoroughly scaring the watchman, who naturally thought the boiler, which he knew had been left without a fire, was going to explode.

Still another singular case was that of a fire caused in a picker-room of a jute-mill by a man driving a nail in the ceiling. The nail glanced off and was struck by the rapidly moving beaters, and the sparks which were caused thereby led to a serious blaze.

TOO IRREGULAR.

"If men voted as they pray," said a prohibition orator, "the prohibitionists would elect the next President of the United States." Oh, come off, thou reservoir. If men voted as they pray some men would spend their lives in the penitentiary for repeating, while others would never cast a vote in all their lives, and others again would do all their voting during babyhood. Vote as they pray, indeed—Burdette.

ONE need not be in the ring to have a large circle of acquaintances.

DIVINES DISAGREE.

A Discussion Not Decided by Prayer—Intolerance of Opinion.

The following is an extract from a late New York Tribune editorial: "There is, perhaps, no mental vice so common as intolerance of opinion. Even such as think they have emancipated themselves from the clinging defect find it hard to acknowledge frankly to themselves that the opinion of some one else upon a matter they have studied may very well be as deserving of respect as their own, if it differs radically from their own. If we could all get rid of this last infirmity, not only of 'noble minds,' but of nearly all human minds, how much less friction there would be in life, how much less bitterness and heart burning and envy and all uncharitable feelings."

In an adjoining column of the same paper was found the following peculiar commentary on the editorial:

"The bitterness of the controversy in the American Board over the question of probation after death was very great. This rather shocked the simple-minded and earnest foreign missionaries who attended the sessions of the board, one of whom said he had always thought such questions were decided by prayer. But if the debate was not altogether Christian in spirit, it was strictly parliamentary. The brethren didn't forget to put a copy of Cushing's Manual in their valise along with their Bible; and apparently some of them consulted it oftener than the Bible."

"Is it a fact that there is but little toleration in this country, and less than in others?"

"Comparisons are odorous," said Mrs. Malaprop. Perhaps we have been claiming too much for this free nation.

We must admit that in the professions there is yet much of the old-time prejudice against new ideas. Preachers preach the old doctrines and doctors prescribe the old medicines. Bitter controversies arise when anything new is proposed.

But the march of progress is not stayed. Men are traveling heavenward under new creeds and being cured by new medicines.

Much the same state of facts seems to exist in other countries.

When Dr. Robson, a leading physician of London, formerly of the Royal Navy, proclaimed that Warner's safe cure was a specific in kidney derangements, the hide-bound school to which he belonged threatened to debar him from practice if he did not recant. But he replied that his statement was based on such evidence that he could not recant.

Since then Dr. Wilson, F. R. S. E., editor of "Health," a recognized English authority, announces in his magazine that "Warner's safe cure is of a perfectly safe character and perfectly reliable." Many English physicians are now prescribing it.

The "schools" in this country still bar all proprietary medicines. But Dr. Gunn, Dean of a New York Medical College, long since published: "Warner's safe cure is a very valuable remedy," and says he knows that many physicians prescribe it, though not by name.

Good things in creed or practice are not to be cried down by the old fogies simply because they are new. The spirit of toleration thrives on opposition.

A Smart but Mean Girl.

First Omaha Girl—Oh, I'd like to bite somebody!

Second Omaha Girl—What's happened?

"You know that horrid Miss Pert?"

"Yes."

"She has a spite against me, and when she found out Mr. Nicefellow was coming to see me what do you think that horrid, envious, jealous creature did?"

"Told him you had an awful temper, I suppose."

"No, indeed, she didn't. She's too smart for that. She's the smartest girl I ever saw." She told him something which will just keep me in misery, and if I do a thing to give him any other impression he'll think I'm a little hypocrite and deceive my own friends. Oh, that creature is smart. I'd like to bite her."

"But what did she say?"

"She told him I was so shy that if he ever came within five feet of me I'd get horrified and never look at him again."—Omaha World.

AN OPEN LETTER

From Rev. J. Roberts, Pastor First M. E. Church, Fremont, Mich.

Rheumatic Syrup Co., Jackson, Mich.:
GENTLEMEN—My daughter Maud has used Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup and Plasters, which you so strongly recommended her to try. It has now been about eleven weeks since she commenced, and her inflammatory rheumatism is nearly broken up. Her limbs were badly swollen, and the poor girl was in terrible agony. In the midst of the pain we wound the Plasters about her limbs, and, as a result, the swelling was reduced and she became quiet and rested. The Syrup corrected her indigestion, cleansed the rheumatic poison from her blood, and she is now able to be around the house. She still uses the Syrup and Plasters, and will continue to do so until entirely well. We consider Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup and Plasters remedies of great merit.

Pastor First M. E. Church,
FREMONT, Mich., Oct. 20, 1887.

"I Don't Want Relief, But Cure."

is the exclamation of thousands suffering from catarrh. To all such we say: Catarrh can be cured by Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. It has been done in thousands of cases; why not in yours? Your danger is in delay. In close a stamp to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y., for pamphlet on this disease.

In General Debility, Emaciation,

Consumption, and wasting in children, Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites is a most valuable food and medicine. It creates an appetite for food, strengthens the nervous system, and builds up the body. Please read: "I tried Scott's Emulsion on a young man whom physicians at times gave up hope. Since he began using the Emulsion his cough has ceased, gained flesh and strength, and from all appearances his life will be prolonged many years."—JOHN SULLIVAN, Hospital Steward, Morganza, Pa.

ST. JACOBS OIL.

WHAT IT HAS DONE.

Relief.—In any climate at any season one or two applications of St. Jacobs Oil relieves, often cures permanently. This is the average experience in ten years.

Cures.—The contents of a bottle have cured thousands of extreme chronic cases. Used according to directions there is a cure in every bottle.

The Testimony.—Thousands of testimonials substantiate the above statements in the cure of all kinds of painful ailments.

The Proof.—To make sure of this showing, answers to inquiries concerning the permanency of the cures resulted as follows: That from date of healing to date of response every cure has remained permanent without recurrence of pain.

Its Supremacy.—The twenty million bottles sold can be justly rated as so many cures; in almost every case a permanent cure. Its price is the surety of every bottle being the same, every bottle being a cure and the poor are protected.

Sold by Druggists and Dealers Everywhere.

FRIDAY JANUARY 13, 1888.

There were 13,000 miles of railroad built in the year 1887.

The icy roads of late has been money in the blacksmith's pocket.

Miss Emma Tustison returned last week from an extended visit with friends in Ohio.

Obas. Emanuel, one of the legal lights of Auburn, was in town Wednesday, on business.

Ira Gingery, a prominent merchant of Hicksville, made an assignment last week, to Bert Morris, of Toledo.

The Teacher's Reading Circle of this township, enjoyed a pleasant session, at the school building, on Wednesday evening.

The mercury got down below zero on Tuesday night. It was not so terrible cold, and yet it fit up pretty snug around the corners.

A boy threw a ball at his sister and hit her on the back of the head so hard, that the bowl came out of her mouth. Do you see the point?

The English sparrows have incurred the everlasting displeasure of Grandfather Leighty, and he has borrowed a shot-gun and proposes to slay all that come in his way.

The leap year party last week was a success, and the girls just waltzed the boys around in fine shape. One of them came in and took our devil off in such a rush, that he had not even time to wax up his moustache.

Mina Van Heyde, who was agent at this place several years ago, but is now located at Fostoria, was awarded a premium of $25, for having the best kept station on the Chicago Division during the year 1887. Mina was not the least bit stingy, with his good luck, but divided the money among his clerks and set up a couple boxes of cigars besides.

Squire Ables hitched up another couple this week in his usual graceful manner. Chauncy Patterson and Mary Younglove of Coletown, were the happy pair. Uncle "Jeems" seems to have a corner on marrying folks over in that neighborhood. Preachers don't stand any show at all. His Honor, ought to pay the News a royalty of two dollars on each ceremony he performs, as it is largely through our efforts in his behalf that he gets so much business in that line.

George Hinsdale lives at Grangeville and takes life about as easy as the common run of mortals. He came into St. Joe the other day on business, and after transacting the same, he started for home. He rode a horse and when near the gravel pit, it became frightened in some way, and threw him off against the railing of the creek bridge. He was considerably bruised up, and bled quite freely, but gathered up what he could of himself, and walked the rest of the way, leading the horse. George didn't propose to go through any more acrobatic performances.

OUR CORRESPONDENTS.

SPENCERVILLE.

Ben Zimmerman was at Auburn Tuesday.

Mrs. T. S. Murray was in Hicksville Saturday.

Miss Emma Prosser is visiting in the family of J. A. Provines.

John Wise, of Auburn Junction, was in town a couple of days this week.

Rev. Charles Hollopeter filled the pulpit in the M. E. church Saturday and Sunday evenings.

Becks Erick and wife left for White Pigeon, Mich., Wednesday to attend the wedding of his sister.

Quite a number of the Masons from this place, attended a public installation at Newville Monday evening.

Mrs. Dr. Hull has been in the country during the past week, having been called there by the illness of her mother.

The many friends of Miss Susie Kinsey, formerly of this place, but now of Kansas, will be surprised to hear of her marriage on New Year's day. We wish her much happiness in her western home.

OBITUARY.

Otis R. Coburn, oldest brother of C. M. and R. G. Coburn, of Coburntown, died very suddenly at his home in Trumbull Co., Ohio, December 31st, 1887 and was buried January 2nd 1888, age 71 years. Mr. Coburn was born in Ontario Co., New York, November 1816, and moved with his parents to Trumbull Co., Ohio, in 1827, being at that time eleven years old. He was married to Emma Barstow in 1836. With the exception of five years spent in Wisconsin, he has continued to reside in Trumbull Co. He leaves a wife and four children to mourn his loss, one son and three daughters; he also has four brothers and one sister in this county. He had been a member of the Christian church for over fifty years, and has always been a zealous and faithful christian, therefore he was prepared to meet his God. Frank Smith, of Garrett, was in town one day last week.

Miss Matie Bohls spent last Sunday with her parents in this place.

Mrs. Robert Davis spent New Year's day with her daughter, in Gallion, Ohio.

Mrs. Dr. Bowman and her sister, Mrs. Thayer, visited friends at Fort Wayne this week.

S. & F. Barney are buying large quantities of clover seed. They pay the highest price in the market.

If you think of getting any pictures enlarged, by all means see William Leighty before doing so. He can supply you with an excellent quality of work at reasonable prices.

LOCALS.

Preaching at the Lutheran church Sunday evening.

Freight traffic on the B. & O. is booming at present.

There are a few slight changes in the B. & O. time card this week.

The series of meetings at the Methodist church closed Tuesday evening.

Several of the Masonic brethren of this place attended lodge at Newville Monday evening.

Traveling-men are out with spring samples. Mosquito bar and palm leaf fans, for instance.

Butler has quite a supply of gas, some of which is being piped into residences and used for fuel.

Nearly all of our correspondents seem to be frozen up this week. A little warm sunshine will probably bring them out alright.

Mr. Groff, who has been running the Orangeville Mill for three or four years, will move back onto his farm near Edgerton, in the spring.

Already the contracts have been let for the erection of several new brick buildings on the site of the burnt out district at Hicksville. Her citizens are not the chronic kind that sit down in sackcloth and ashes, and weep over their loss, but they go right to work to make better and more permanent improvements.

Ben Harper, the hoosier-prohibition-democrat, who is wintering over at Mack Leighty's, went down below Mayville some time ago, and traded horses. Ben got badly worsted in the dicker, but went back the next day and "crawfished" out of the trade. Both of the nags wasn't worth more than seventeen cents.

The Lake Shore railroad changed time Saturday.

Hicksville will have a farmer's Institute in February.

J. H. Conrad and family visited with Mrs. Conrad's mother over last Sabbath.

W. C. Patterson, wife and daughter Bessie, spent last Sunday with friends in Hicksville.

August Kinsey expects to put up a new furniture room, on the lot west of Frank Walker's harness shop, in the spring.

The Disciples organized their Sunday school last Sunday by electing, Alex. Filley, Superintendent, Miss Prudie Lounsberry, Organist, and Frank Hart, Chorister.

Hugh Nelson, of Hicksville, well known to many of our citizens, fell and broke his arm last week. Mr. Nelson seems to be having his full share of this world's troubles.

It is said there was quite a circus at Washler's model saloon Saturday evening. Quince Fusselman of Newville, was the star actor, and he entertained the audience in first class manner.

An exchange gets off the following, and there is about as much truth in the item as you ever find in that many words: "Women are the dearest, cutest, creatures in the world, but they can't tell how a shoe fits until they see the number."

Hicksville is like the man who locked his barn after his horse was stolen—now that part of the town has burned down, they talk of purchasing a fire engine. But seriously, a good fire department would have no doubt saved most of the buildings that were destroyed in the fire of last week.

Dr. Mitchell, of Ligonier, formerly owner of the drug-store, at this place, was in town for a few hours one day last week. The Doctor thinks there has been a wonderful improvement in St. Joe since he left, and by the way he rather intimated to one of our citizens, that he would have been better off had he remained in this place.

A WOMAN'S DISCOVERY.—"Another wonderful discovery has been made and that too by a lady in this country. Disease fastened its clutches upon her and for seven years she withstood its severest tests, but her vital organs were undermined and death seemed imminent. For three months she coughed incessantly and could not sleep. She bought of us a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption and was so much relieved on taking first dose that she slept all night and with one bottle has been miraculously cured. Her name is Mrs. Luther Lutz." Thus writes W. C. Hamrick & Co., of Shelby, N. C.—Get a free trial bottle at W. C. Patterson's Drug Store.

Don't mention it to any one, but there is a rumor going the rounds to the effect that the B. & O. company will straighten their track in the spring, and in that case the road will run directly through Spencerville. The reason assigned for the change is, that it will shorten the distance, and prevent a great many accidents, which are caused by the curves in the road. We think there is some foundation to the rumor, as we noticed a man in town last week, wearing a plug hat, and he said he was going to Spencerville on business. He had a tape line with him and it is but reasonable to suppose that he was looking up a new right-of-way. Further developments will be watched with great interest by our citizens, but the best thing we can do at present is to lay low and keep "mum."

We were in error last week in saying that J. H. Conrad took his Sunday school class up to his mother-in-law's, north of Concord; instead of that, he took them to the residence of John Davis, near town, where Mrs. Davis served them with as fine a supper as a pack of hungry boys ever sat down to. It seems that it was the birthday of Frank Davis, and a party had been arranged for him, and he knew nothing of it. The boys were all completely taken by surprise, but that didn't prevent their having the jolliest kind of a good time.

THE VERDICT UNANIMOUS.

W. D. Sult, Druggist, Bippus, Ind. testifies: "I can recommend Electric Bitters as the very best remedy. Every bottle sold has given relief in every case. One man took six bottles and was cured of Rheumatism of 10 years standing." Abraham Hare, druggist, Bellville, Ohio, affirms: "The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my 20 years' experience, is Electric Bitters." Thousands of others have their testimony, so that the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters do cure all diseases of the Liver, Kidneys or blood. Only a half dollar a bottle at W. C. #### TOWNSHIP INSTITUTE.

At a late hour Saturday morning the Institute was called to order by the Trustee, who was immediately chosen chairman, with Miss Maud Murray as secretary. "School government," was talked about by two teachers, having had much experience in this line. While newer and better methods than using the club were brought forward and recommended; still the subject was left with the weapon well poised for the first culprit who broke a rule in any of the schools of the township. After the discussion, we adjourned to meet at one o'clock. At the afternoon session the Reading Circle work was taken up, and an interesting time was spent in reading Psychology by the entire class of teachers present. Mr. Irwin Hadsell talked about the possessive pronoun, and did good work. This ended the work of the day. All the teachers of the township were present except the teacher from district No. 1. The Institute adjourned to meet in four weeks at this place.

A fine lot of ice is being put up at this place.

There was a public installation of officers of the Masonic lodge, at Newville Monday night.

A very pleasant party was held at the residence of Henry Hull, on Tuesday evening.

THE TABERNACLE SERMON.

"The Women Who Fight the Battles of Life Alone."

Woman Is an Independent Creation and Is Able to Be Her Own Supervisor and Achieve Her Own Destiny—The Story of the Dove and the Vulture.

BROOKLYN, Jan. 8.—The Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D., preached at the Tabernacle this morning the first of a series of sermons to the women of America, with practical hints to men. The subject of this discourse was "The Women Who Fight the Battles of Life Alone," and the text was from Proverbs xiv, 1: "Every wise woman buildeth her house." Dr. Talmage said:

Woman a mere adjunct to man, an appendix to the masculine volume, an appendage, a sort of afterthought, something thrown in to make things even—that is the heresy entertained and implied by some men. This is evident to them: Woman's insignificance as compared to man is evident to them, because Adam was first created and then Eve. They don't read the whole story or they would find that the porpoise and the bear and the hawk were created before Adam, so that this argument drawn from priority of creation might prove that the sheep and the dog were greater than man. No! Woman was an independent creation, and was intended, if she chose, to live alone, to walk alone, act alone, think alone, and fight her own battles alone. The Bible says it is not good for man to be alone, but never says it is not good for woman to be alone, and the simple fact is that many women who are harnessed for life in the marriage relation would be a thousand-fold better off if they were alone. God makes no mistake, and the fact that there is such a large majority of women in this land proves that He intended that multitudes of them should go alone.

Who are these men who, year after year, hang around hotels and engine houses and theater doors, and come in and out to bother busy clerks and merchants and mechanics, doing nothing even when there is plenty to do? They are men supported by their wives and mothers. If the statistics of any of our cities could be taken on this subject you would find that a vast multitude of women not only support themselves, but masculines. A great legion of men amount to nothing, and a woman by marriage managed to one of these nonentities needs condolence. A woman standing outside the marriage relation is several hundred thousand times better off than a woman badly married. Many a bride, instead of a wreath of orange blossoms, might more properly wear a bunch of nettles and nightshade, and instead of the Wedding March a more appropriate tune would be the Dead March in Saul, and instead of a banquet of confectionery and ices there might be more appropriately spread a table covered with apples of Sodom, which are outside fair and inside ashes.

Many an attractive woman of good sound sense in other things has married one of these men to reform him. What was the result? Like when a dove noticing that a vulture was rapacious and cruel set about to reform it and said: "I have a mild disposition, and I like peace, and was brought up in the quiet of a dove cote, and I will bring the vulture to the same liking by marrying him." So one day, after the vulture had declared he would give up his carnivorous habits and cease longing for blood of flock and herd, at an altar of rock covered with moss and lichen the twain were married, a bald-headed eagle officiating, the vulture saying: "With all my dominion of earth and sky I thee endow, and promise to love and cherish till death do us part." But one day the dove in her flight saw the vulture busy at a carcass and cried: "Stop that! Did you not promise me that you would quit your carnivorous and filthy habits if I married you?" "Yes," said the vulture, "but if you don't like my way you can leave," and with one angry stroke of beak and another fierce clutch of claw the vulture left the dove eyeless and wingless and lifeless. And a flock of robins flying past cried to each other and said: "See there! that comes from a dove's marrying a vulture to reform him."

Many a woman who has had the hand of a young inebriate offered, but declined it, or who was asked to chain her life to a man selfish or of bad temper and refused the shackles, will bless God throughout all eternity that she escaped that earthly pandemonium.

Besides all this, in our country about 1,000,000 men were sacrificed in our civil war, and that decreed 1,000,000 women to celibacy. Besides that, since the war several armies of men as large as the Federal and Confederate armies put together have fallen under malt liquors and distilled spirits so full of poisoned ingredients that the work was done more rapidly, and the victims fell while yet young. And if 50,000 men are destroyed every year by strong drink before marriage, that makes in the twenty-three years since the war 1,150,000 men slain, and decrees 1,150,000 women to celibacy. Take then the fact that so many women are unhappy in their marriage, and the fact that the slaughter of 2,150,000 men by war and rum combined decides that at least that number of women shall be unaffiliated for life, my text comes in with a cheer and a potency and appropriateness that I never saw in it before when it says, "Every wise woman buildeth her house," that is, let woman be her own architect, lay her own plans, be her own supervisor, achieve her own destiny.

In addressing these who will have to fight the battle of life alone I congratulate you on your happy escape. Rejoice forever that you will not have to navigate the faults of the other sex, when you have faults enough of your own. Think of the bereavements you avoid, of the risk of unassimilated temper which you will not have to run, of cares you will never have to carry, and of the opportunity of outside usefulness from which marital life would have partially debarred you, and that you are free to go and come as one who has the responsibilities of a household can seldom be. God has not given you a hard lot as compared with your sisters. When young women shall make up their minds at the start that masculine companionship is not a necessity in order to happiness, and that there is a strong probability that they will have to fight the battle alone, they will be getting the timber ready for their own fortune, and their saw and ax and plane, sharpened for its construction, since "Every wise woman buildeth her house."

As no boy ought to be brought up without learning some business at which he could earn a livelihood, so no girl ought to be brought up without learning the science of self-support. The difficulty is that many a family go sailing on the high tides of success, and the husband and father depends on his own health and acumen for the welfare of his household, but one day he gets his feet wet, and in three days pneumonia has closed his life, and the daughters are turned out on a cold world to earn bread, and there is nothing practical that they can do. The friends of the family come in and hold consultation. "Give music lessons," says an outsider. Yes, it is a useful calling, and if you have great genius for it go on in that direction. But there are enough music teachers now starving to death in all our towns and cities to occupy all the piano stools and sofas and chairs and front door steps of the city. Beside that, the daughter has been playing only for amusement, and is only at the foot of the ladder, to the top of which a great multitude of masters on piano and harp and flute and organ have climbed.

"Put the bereft daughters as saleswomen in stores," says another adviser. But there they must compete with salesmen of long experience or with men who have served an apprenticeship in commerce, and who began as shop boys at 10 years of age. Some kind-hearted dry goods man having known the father, now gone, says: "We are not in need of any more help just now, but send your daughters to my store and I will do as well by them as possible." Very soon the question comes up, Why do not the female employees of that establishment get as much wages as the male employees? For the simple reason, in many cases, the females were suddenly flung by misfortune behind that counter, while the males have from the day they left the public school been learning the business.

How is this evil to be cured? Start clear back in the homestead and teach your daughters that life is an earnest thing, and that there is a possibility, if not a strong probability, that they will have to fight the battle of life alone. Let every father and mother say to their daughters: "Now, what would you do for a livelihood if what I now own were swept away by financial disaster, or old age or death should end my career?" "Well, I could paint on pottery and do such decorative work." Yes, that is beautiful, and if you have genius for it go on in that direction. But there are enough busy at that now to make a line of hardware from here to the East River and across the bridge.

"Well, I could make recitations in public and earn my living as a dramatist. I could render 'King Lear' or 'Macbeth' till your hair would rise on end, or give you 'Sheridan's Ride' or Dickens' 'Pickwick.' Yes, that is a beautiful art; but ever and anon, as now, there is an epidemic of dramatization that makes hundreds of households nervous with the cries and shrieks and groans of young tragedians dying in the fifth act, and the trouble is that while your friends would like to hear you, and really think that you could surpass Ristori and Charlotte Cushman and Fanny Kemble of the past, to say nothing of the present, you could not, in the way of living, in ten years earn ten cents.

My advice to all girls and all unmarried women, whether in affluent homes or in homes where most stringent economies are grinding, is to learn to do some kind of work that the world must have while the world stands. I am glad to see a marvelous change for the better, and that women have found out that there are hundreds of practical things that a woman can do for a living if she begin soon enough, and that men have been compelled to admit it. You and I can remember when the majority of occupations were thought inappropriate for women, but our civil war came and the hosts of men went forth from North and South, and to conduct the business of our cities during the patriotic absence, women were demanded by the tens of thousands to take the vacant places, and multitudes of women who had been hitherto supported by fathers and brothers and sons were compelled from that time to take care of themselves. From that time a mighty change took place, favorable to female employment.

Among the occupations appropriate for woman I place the following, into many of which she has already entered, and all others she will enter:

Stenography, and you may find her at nearly all reportorial stands in our educational, political, and religious meetings.

Savings banks, the work is clean and honorable, and who so great a right to toil there, for a woman founded the first savings bank, Mrs. Priscilla Wakefield?

Copist, and there is hardly a professional man that does not need the service of her penmanship, and, as amanuensis, many of the greatest books of our day have been dictated for her writing.

There they are as florists and confectioners and music teachers and stationers and book-keepers, for which they are specially qualified by patience and accuracy, and

Wood engraving, in which the Cooper Institute has turned out so many qualified, and Telegraphy, for which she is specially prepared, as thousands of the telegraphic offices would testify.

Photography, and in nearly all our establishments they may be found there at cheerful work.

As workers in ivory and gutta serena and gum elastic and tortoise shell and gilding and in chemicals, in porcelain, in terra cotta, in embroidery.

As postmistresses, and the President is giving them appointments all over the land.

As keepers of lighthouses many of them, if they had the chance, are ready to do as brave a thing with our and boat as did Ida Lewis and Grace Darling.

As proof-readers, as translators, as modelers, as designers, as draughtswomen, as lithographers, as teachers in schools and seminaries, for which they are especially endowed, the first teacher of every child, by divine arrangement, being a woman.

As physicians, having graduated after a regular course of study from the female colleges of our large cities, where they get as scientific and thorough preparation as any doctors ever had, and go forth to a work which no one but women could so appropriately or delicately do.

On the lecturing platform, for you know the brilliant success of Mrs. Livermore and Mrs. Hallowell and Mrs. Willard and Mrs. Lathrop.

As physiological lecturers to their own sex, for which service there is a demand appalling and terrific.

As preachers of the Gospel, and all the protests of ecclesiastical courts cannot hinder them, for they have a pathos and power in their religious utterances that men can never reach. Witness all these who have heard their mother pray.

O, young women of America! as many of you will have to fight your own battles alone, do not wait until you are flung of disaster, and your father is dead and all the resources of your family have been scattered; but now, while in a good house and environed by all prosperities, learn how to do some kind of work that the world must have as long as the world stands. Turn your attention from the embroidery of slippers, of which there is a surplus, and make a useful shoe. Expend the time in which you adorn a cigar case in learning how to make a good, honest loaf of bread. Turn your attention from the making of flimsy nothings to the manufacturing of important somethings.

Much of the time spent in young ladies' seminaries in studying what are called the "higher branches" might better be expended in teaching them something by which they could support themselves. If you are going to be teachers, or if you have so much assured wealth that you can always dwell in those high regions, trigonometry of course, metaphysics of course, Latin and Greek, and German and French and Italian of course, and a hundred other things, of course, but if you are not expecting to teach, and your wealth is not established beyond misfortune, after you have learned the ordinary branches, take hold of that kind of study that will pay in dollars and cents in case you are thrown on your own resources. Learn to do something better than anybody else. Buy Virginia Penny's book entitled, "The Employments of Women," and learn there are five hundred ways in which a woman may earn a living.

My sisters, give not your time to learning fancy work which the world may dispense with when hard times come, but connect your skill with the indispensables of life. The world will always want something to wear and something to eat and shelter and fuel for the body, and knowledge for the mind, and religion for the soul. And all these things will continue to be the necessities, and if you fasten your energies upon occupations and professions thus related the world will be unable to do without you. Remember that in proportion as you are skillful in anything your rivalries become less. For unskilled toil, women by the million. But you may rise to where there are only a thousand; and still higher until there are only a hundred; and still higher till there are only ten; and still higher in some particular department till there is only a unit and that yourself. For a while you may keep wages and a place through the kindly sympathies of an employer, but you will eventually get no more compensation than you can make yourself worth.

Let me say to all women, who have already entered upon the battle of life, that the time is coming when women shall not only get as much salary and wages as men get, but for certain styles of employment women will have higher salary and more wages for the reason that for some styles of work they have more adaptation. But this justice will come to woman not through any sentiment of gallantry, not because woman is physically weaker than man and therefore ought to have more consideration shown her, but because through her finer natural taste and more grace of manner and quicker perception and more delicate touch and more educated adroitness she will in certain callings be to her employer worth 10 per cent. more, or 20 per cent. more, than the other sex. She will not get it by asking for it, but by earning it, and it shall be hers by lawful conquest.

Now, men of America, be fair and give the women a chance! Are you afraid that they will do some of your work and hence harm your prosperities? Remember that there are scores of thousands of men doing women's work. Do not be afraid! God knows the end from the beginning, and He knows how many people this world can feed and shelter, and when it gets too full He will end the world and, if need be, start another. God will halt the inventive faculty, which, by producing a machine that will do the work of ten or twenty or a hundred men and women, will leave that number of people without work. I hope that there will not be invented another sewing machine, or reaping machine, or corn thresher, or any other new machine for the next 500 years. We want no more wooden hands, and iron hands, and steel hands, and electric hands substituted for men and women who would otherwise do the work and get the pay and earn the livelihood.

But God will arrange all, and all we have to do is to do our best and trust Him for the rest. Let me cheer all women fighting the battle of life alone, with the fact that thousands of women have in that way won the day. Mary Lyon, founder of Mount Holyoke Female Seminary, fought the battle alone; Adelaide Newton, the tract distributor, alone; Fidelity Fisk, the consecrated missionary, alone; Dorothea Dix, the angel of the insane asylums, alone; Caroline Herschel, the indispensable re-enforcement of her brother, alone; Maria Takrzeska, the heroine of the Berlin Hospital, alone; Helen Chalmers, patron of sewing schools for the poor of Edinburgh, alone. And thousands and tens of thousands of women of whose bravery and self-sacrifice and glory of character the world has made no record, but whose deeds are in the heavenly archives of martyrs who fought the battle alone, and, though unrecognized for the short thirty or fifty or eighty years of their earthly existence, shall through the "quintillion ages of the higher world be pointed out with the admiring cry, 'These are they who came out of great tribulation and had their robes washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb.'"

Let me also say for the encouragement of all women fighting the battle of life alone, that their conflict will soon end. There is one word written over the faces of many of them, and that word is Despair. My sister, you need appeal to that Christ who comforted the sisters of Bethany in their domestic trouble, and who, in His last hours forgot all the pangs of His own hands and feet and heart as he looked into the face of maternal anguish and called a friend's attention to it, in substance saying: "John, I cannot take care of her any longer. Do for her as I would have done if I had lived. Behold thy mother!" If under the pressure of un-rewarded and unappreciated work your hair is whitening and the wrinkles come, rejoice that you are nearing the hour of escape from your very last fatigue, and may your departure be as pleasant as that of Isabella Graham, who closed her life with a smile and the word "peace." The daughter of a regiment in any army is all surrounded by bayonets of defense, and, in the battle, whoever falls, she is kept safe. And you are the daughter of the regiment commanded by the Lord of Hosts. After all you are not fighting the battle of life alone. All Heaven is on your side. You will be wise to appropriate to yourself the words of sacred rhythm:

One who has known in storms to sail
I have on board;
Above the roaring of the gale
I hear my Lord.
He holds me; when the billows smite
I shall not fall.
I shout, 'tis sharp; 'tis long, 'tis light;
He tempers it.

Truthful Diplomacy.

"Solomon," said, remarked the dominie, as he carefully trimmed a birch switch four feet long before going into committee of the whole on the state of the country. "Solomon said, 'Spare the rod and spoil the child.'"

"Yes," said the trembling minority members of the committee, "but see what awful children Solomon raised." And while the master thought and thought and thought, the minority went out to revise his report and forgot to come back.

MARINE MINERS.

Old Habitations Constructed by the Inhabitants of the Deep.
(Golden Days.)

Some of the most remarkable miners are found among the marine animals, especially in the shell group, or mollusks. Some years ago, while living on a key at the extreme end of the Florida peninsula, I had an opportunity of observing the practical results of their work.

The key boasted only two docks, made of heavy yellow pine, the logs under water being protected by a casing of hard wood, thoroughly covered with tar and fine concrete.

This would seem a sufficient protection against a delicate mollusk, but such was their power of boring that in a few months the strong structure was made insecure, and at times, when loaded heavily, the entire dock caved in. From the outside the wood showed no evidence of its weakness, and often what appeared to be a solid post was a mere empty shell.

The animal that committed these ravages was the teredo, or ship worm. It attacks woodwork, especially in the Southern waters, and burrows in, forming a tube as it goes, and carefully lining it with a smooth, calcareous deposit that forms it home and is really a living extension of its shell.

These tunnels wind in and out through the wood, in some incomprehensible way avoiding nails and other shells, showing in this way much more penetration than many human delvers under the earth's crust, and in a very short time a strong solid timber will be found completely honey-combed by these leads or tunnels.

In this same locality I often visited the wreck of an old ship that was high on the reef and partly under water. I had always thought the timbers were strong and heavy until one day I slipped and my foot struck the bottom of the hull and sank into it as if it had been pasteboard. I then found that the entire hull of the old ship was a mere skeleton, and not long after, during a heavy gale, it fell in pieces, very much after the fashion of the "one-hoss shay." Experiments have showed that the palmetto was the only wood that resisted their inroads for any length of time.

The amount of damage these little animals are capable of doing is well shown in the case of the dikes of Holland. These immense structures are strengthened by heavy piles driven into the ground, and upon them depends, to a greater or less extent, the safety of the "longshore" folks.

In the year of 1730 a dangerous leak was discovered that threatened the entire coast. Repairs were immediately commenced, when it was found that the cause of the mischief was the teredo. All of the great piles were pierced in every direction by these silent miners.

In this case new piles were driven in, and the surface under water covered with broad-headed nails, the rust having some effect upon the animals.

The ordinary teredo is about six inches in length, but in the waters of Sumatra and Borneo specimens have been found whose tunnels were four or five feet long, several inches through, and when covered with shells and other animals weighing many pounds.

These giants (and they are called Teredo gigantes) were discovered after a violent earthquake, the withdrawal of the water leaving their great tunnels standing upright in the mud.

One of the most powerful of the molluskous miners is the pholas, a bivalve shell that carries its light like a human miner, being phosphorescent in the dark. They penetrate the hardest granite, and after attaining a position within the stone they enlarge their cell and grow, building or increasing the size of their shell, until finally they are imprisoned.

Pieces of granite containing these large shells, with only a small opening through which they have seemingly gone, are often exhibited as puzzles, the uninitiated being unable to explain the seeming paradox.

The pholas bores by, perhaps, grinding with its shell and dissolving the stone by some secretion which it emits. Such, at least is the theory.

In every branch of the animal kingdom we find these miners. Birds, fishes, insects, mammals, all have their representatives among the subterranean workers.

FUN FOR THE MISSIONARY.

A missionary in the San Juan Islands, in Washington Territory, gives, in the Golden Rule, the following curious notes from his life among the "children of nature" to be found in that region. His first service there was continually interrupted by men going out to drink whisky from bottles concealed in the bushes. On another occasion, when a collection had been taken amounting to $1.75, a man came to the desk after the close of the service and demanded his money again.

"What money?" asked the minister. "Why, the money I put in the collection plate."

"If you put it in why do you want it back?"

"Oh," said he, "I only put it in for example's sake."

He then sought in the plate, and having selected two five-cent pieces pocketed them and left.

Having kept an appointment for preaching one Sunday, the missionary found seventy-five or eighty people waiting for him near the cabin of a leading man in the islands.

"Shall I conduct the service here?" asked the preacher.

"No, sir. Just you wait a little," replied the man, and going into his house presently reappeared with hammer, nails, saw, ax, and a shingle, which he handed the minister, saying:

"You take that and follow me."

Minister and congregation accompanied the man through a narrow trail for a long distance and halted at an open space. The man then took off his coat and began cutting brush for seats, after which he drove two stakes into the ground and nailed a shingle on them.

"There's your pulpit, sir," said he, turning to the minister. "Fire away."

So the preacher fired away, while the congregation did so in another sense, for almost all of them indulged, while listening, in a quiet smoke.

Another anecdote is good enough to conclude the series. At the close of a marriage ceremony the minister was given a fee of $5, and a week later the newly-married husband appeared at his house, asking that he might take back the money, as he needed it to buy provisions.

HUNTING FOR A BATTLE-FIELD.

"What is your politics, Mr. Hotspur?" "Well, sometimes I'm blessed if I hardly know. I am a Republican, a red-hot Republican; voted for Fremont, Lincoln, Grant, Garfield, and Blaine; but when I lay myself out for a good, red-hot discussion with my neighbor Spitfire, who is a poison Democrat, and voted for Buchanan, Breckridge, Seymour, and Tilden, I find we are both high-tariff protectionists, and Grand Army men. I can't understand it, and I don't like it. I'd like to be something that Spitfire isn't, so as to enjoy a little lively discussion now and then. What's the matter with politics in these days, anyhow?" —Burdette.

Mrs. WALDO of Boston—I have a letter from your Uncle James, Penelope, who wants us to spend the summer on his farm. Penelope (dubiously)—Is there any society in the neighborhood? Mrs. Waldo—I've heard him speak of the Holsteins and Guernseys. I presume they are pleasant people.

DOM PEDRO II., the present Emperor of Brazil, and who visited this country in 1876, was born in 1825.

Are you sad, despondent, gloomy?
Are you sore distressed?
Listen to the welcome bidding—
"Be at rest."
Have you aches and pains unnumbered,
Poisoning life's Golden Cup?
Think not there's no balm in Gilead, and Give it up.

A Golden Remedy awaits you—
Golden not alone in name—
Reach, oh, suffering one, and grasp it,
Health lies in it.

There is but one "Golden" Remedy—Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It stands alone as the great "blood-purifier," "strength-renewer" and "health-restorer" of the age! The Liver, it regulates, removing all impurities. The Lungs it strengthens, cleansing and nourishing them. The whole system it builds up, supplying that above all other things most needed—pure, rich Blood.

No Law to Her.

A little miss of 5, with a good deal of originality and independence in her composition, has a brother-in-law of whom she is very fond. They are great chums, and it is hard to decide whether the little girl or the man is the more mischievous when they begin their romps. She persists in calling him "my brother."

"Your brother-in-law," corrected a precise lady visitor one day.

"He's no law to me," retorted the youngster—a fact so self-evident that it precluded further genealogical explanations.

"I have been occasionally troubled with Coughs, and in each case have used Brown's Bronchial Troches, which have never failed, and I must say they are second to none in the world."—Ellis A. May, Cashier, St. Paul, Minn.

When your toes are asleep they are coma-tose. —St. Paul Herald.

Only pill boxes are spread over the land by the thousands after having been emptied by suffering humanity. What a mass of sickening disgusting medicine the poor stomach has to contend with! Too much strong medicine. Dr. King's A-H-B-L-T-R is rapidly taking the place of all this class of drugs, and curing all the ills arising from a disordered condition of the liver, kidneys, stomach and bowels.

MONEY flies pretty fast, considering that it has no wings. —Judge.

Consumption Surely Cured.

To the Editor:—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above-named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy FREE to any of your readers who have consumption if they will send me their Express and P. O. address. Respectfully,
T. A. SLOCUM, M. C., 181 Pearl St., N. Y.

If afflicted with Sore Eyes, use Dr. Isaac Thompson's Eye Water. Druggists sell it.

Scrofula

Probably no form of disease is so generally distributed among our whole population as scrofula. Almost every individual has this latent poison coursing his veins. The terrible sufferings endured by those afflicted with scrofulous sores cannot be understood by others, and their gratitude on finding a remedy that cures them, astonishes a well person. The wonderful power of

Hood's Sarsaparilla

In eradicating every form of Scrofula has been so clearly and fully demonstrated that it leaves no doubt that it is the greatest medical discovery of this generation. It is made by C. I. HOOD & CO., Lowell, Mass., and is sold by all druggists.

Don't! Don't!

DON'T continue to suffer from the many ailments brought on by an impure state of the blood when Dr. Guyssot's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla will restore perfect health and physical strength. Use it, and you use the best blood purifier and tonic that medical science is able to produce. It cures Scrofula, King's Evil, Erysipelas, Boils, Pimples, Sore Eyes, Pains in the Bones, Joint-aches, Syphilis and Syphilitic Symptoms, Dyspepsia, Jaundice, Costiveness, Salt-rheum, Weak Kidneys, Liver Complaints, Female Irregularities, Sick and Nervous Headaches, General Debility, Low Spirits, Loss of Appetite, Chronic and Constitutional Disorders, and as a Spring and Fall Medicine, as a Cleanser and Renewer of the entire system. Dr. Guyssot's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla is far better than any other remedy made.

Cough! Cough! Cough!

What is more grating to the ears and saddening to the hearts of loving friends who thus behold their dearly beloved who have inherited consumptive tendencies approaching the brink of an early grave? What effort can be counted great, what exertion too severe, that will give to all such suffering ones a new lease of life? And yet the way is open. Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry will give satisfaction when all else fails. Keep a bottle always in the house; a single dose will relieve a painful fit of coughing.

PERSONAL VANITY.

Why People Will Not Admit Their Own Identity of Character.

Why is it that most people won't admit their own essential unity and identity of character with their brothers and their sisters, their cousins and their aunts? Vanity, vanity, pure human vanity, is at the bottom of all their violent reluctance. Every man flatters himself at heart that he possesses an immense number of admirable traits not to be found in any other, and inferior members of his own family. Those spurious imitations may indeed resemble him somewhat in the rough, as coarse pottery resembles eggshell porcelain; but they lack that delicacy, that refinement, that native grace and finishing touch of character which distinguish himself, the cream and flower of his entire kindred, from all the rest of a doubtless worthy but very inferior family. I fancy see you now—you, even you, my excellent critic—with that graceful cynical smile of yours playing lambent upon your intellectual upper lip, when you loiter at your ease in your club armchair, and murmur to yourself complacently as you read, "The idea of identifying me with my brother Tom, for instance. Me, a cultivated intelligent university man, with that stolid, stupid Philistine sugar broker. If only I'd his wealth, how differently I'd use it! The notion's simply too ridiculous! Why, I'm worth a dozen of him!" My dear sir, believe me, at this very moment your brother Tom, glancing hastily through the pages of the present paper in an interval of relaxation on his way home by Metropolitan Railway from his lair in the city, is observing with a corresponding calm smile of superiority to himself, "Ha, ha, what an absurd idea of this magazine fellow, to tell me I'm no better than my brother Jack, that briefless barrister; Jack indeed, in the name of all that's ridiculous! If only now, I'd had his advantages and his education—sent to Rugby and Oxford for the best years of his life while I was stuck at seventeen into a broker's office to shift for myself and pick up my own living! And yet, what has my native talent and industry enabled me to do? Here am I at barely fifty a wealthy citizen, in spite of all my disadvantages, while he, poor idle dog, has never been able to secure as much as a brief, with all his learning!" Vanity of vanities, saith the preacher, all is vanity.

The fact is, if we want impartially to discuss this question of characters we must each leave our own supernaturally beautiful character out of the question, and think only of the vastly inferior and ordinary characters of other people. We mustn't even allege striking instances from the history of our sisters, our cousins and our aunts, because there on the one hand, our calm sense of the excellence of the stock from which we ourselves are the final flower and top-most outcome is apt to prejudice our better judgment; while on the other hand our natural contempt for the gross shortcomings of our near relations under such closely similar circumstances, when compared with our own virtues and strong points, is liable to beget in us too lordly a superciliousness toward their obvious failings. It is best entirely to dismiss from consideration all the persons standing to ourselves within the list of prohibited degrees set forth in the Prayer Book, to abstain from too fond an affection for our grandmother and to concentrate our attention wholly on the person of that common vulgar herd of outsiders falling as aforesaid under the contemptible category.

Mammoth Turtles and Their Eggs.

Every few days there are great green turtles landed at the wharf that have been taken in the Gulf of Mexico, and are soon put in a conspicuous place in the market, but there are few women who know they are still alive, as they lie perfectly motionless for hours at a time. Turtles often live a month after being caught without food or water, and do not appear to lose flesh or deteriorate in flavor from their long fast. Turtle-fishers have several methods of catching them, the most successful of which is to watch the female when she comes ashore to deposit her eggs, when by simply turning them over on their backs in the sand they are rendered helpless. The mother turtle exhibits a great deal of cunning in concealing the exact locality in which the eggs are left, and will back around in several directions, seeming to know by intuition that her unwieldy body makes deep tracks by which she can be easily followed. After the eggs are laid she repeats the same cautious maneuvers, and the ground for quite a distance around the eggs is a mass of deep tracks. Turtle eggs are a delicacy for soup superior to the flesh itself, and they are eagerly sought. They are enveloped in a square-shaped sack, of a motley gray color, which gives the eggs the appearance of a lump of mud rather than anything edible. When a turtle is killed it is struck on the head and stunned, after which the throat is cut and the carcass hung up and allowed to bleed five or six hours. Then the shell is removed from the back, the entrails cleaned, and the feet and curious front fins are used in connection with the flesh for soup. An ordinary turtle weighs from seventy-five to one hundred pounds, and its meat will keep fresh for several days.—San Francisco Examiner.

Rev. Whangdoodle Baxter on "Ter-backer."

De subject ob dis ebenin's discourse am de wice ob terbacker.

On dis heah-subjeo' dar's a great diffunce of erpinyun wedder or not terbacker am calkerlate ter injure de human frame, and permote premature insalubrity or otherwise.

Far one, I se not exposed ter smokin' cigarettes, sence I heered dat hit kills off de doodes. De smoke ob de cigarette am no doubt de bes' disinfectant. No self-respectin' cholera germ or yaller-feeber germ would stay in de neighborhood whar dar was one ob dose cigarette suckers. Dar may be cigarettes what has good terbacker in 'em, but dey ain't made in dis kentry.

Talking about cigars, I mus' tell yer a story about Sam Johnsing. He was employed as a servant by Kurnel Yerger, and de Kurnel he cotched Sam smoking one ob his fine Conneterkut cigars. Kurnel Yerger was gwinter cuss Sam out, when dat niggah spoke up and says: "Ef dermostic cigars ain't intended fur de use ob dermostics whaffor am dey called by our name for?"

Dat broke de Kurnel all up. Terbacker was first interdooced inter England by Sir Walter Raleway, but his appetite for smoking was interfered wid by his having his head cut off. Dis goes ter show de unhealfulness ob terbacker.

I knows anoder instance ob de unhealfulness ob terbacker. Hit killed a niggah in Houston so dead he nebber kicked. A hogshead ob de stuff fell on him from de second story ob de warehouse.

Den, agin, smoking has hits 'advantages. De cannibals in de Souf Sea Island what eats de mishunaries we sends 'em nebber teches de meat ob a man who has been in de habit ob chewin' terbacker.

I heahs a heap a talk about de money de man who don't use terbacker sakes up in a yeah, but ef yer wantter stump him jess ask him ter show yer de money.

Dar's a great deal ob smokin' what hasn't got nuffin ter do wid terbacker. In der langwidge ob Tom Chrystal, ob de Sunday Morning New York Journal, dar's a tendency ter palm off oleocabinage cigars fer de generwine Havanaer.

Hit's no use ter-preach ebout de evils ob terbacker so long as dar am in ebry community a man who nebber uses terbacker in no shape, and who am so triffin' and wiffless dat he ain't wuff de powder hit would take ter shoot him.—Texas Siftings.

The Journalistic Nose for News.

"What will you give," asked the space writer, "for a tip top sensation about a German deserter, who is a coachman in Providence, falling heir to a fortune of $2,500,000?" "Couldn't use it," replied the editor; "we had him in from Camden, Buffalo, and Louisville since August. But I say, I'll tell you what I do want for Sunday morning: A beautiful and accomplished white girl, graduate of Wellesley and all that, sold to a tribe of Alaska Indians by her drunken father. Sell her little sister, too, and get rid of her mother some how. About a column." "I will start for Alaska this very hour," said the scribe, and hastily wending his way to the library he copied a few Indian names from Jones' "Rivers of Alaska," and called himself up to receive a special.—Kurdette.

THE speaking trumpet used by ships at sea is a very early invention, one of them being used by Alexander, it is said in 335 B. C.

HOW THEY SAY IT IN GERMANY.

BY CARL DUNDER.

When I see a long funeral procession I vhas sure der widow or der widower vill marry again shust like grease.

If der vind doan' blow my haystacks down I doan' stop to ask where he comes from nor whither he goes.

I haf seen lots of great men buried in costly caskets, but dey vhas shust as dead as der poor man in his pine coffin.

Some folks dot doan' whistle nor sing haf lots of time to ponder oafar devltry. When I find a poy who doan' whistle I look out for my apples.

I haf noticed sometimes dot I get madt oafar vhas I doan' know aboutt sooner dan if I know all aboutt her. We can forgive men who dispute facts sooner dan men who dispute theories.

After all, what was it to us if der worldt vhas made in six days or six hoondred years? We look more dot it shall be a good year for cucumbers.

It vhas like all of us dot we could train oop somepody else's poy in der vhay he should go, while our own trains himself oop.

Der man who runs a wagon all der time mitout any grease would be called a fool. Der man who never allows himself a play-spell vhas no petter.

I haf no use for somepody who gets drunk. It has taken man too long already to reach a point where der peast leaves off and der man begins.

Maype, if you watch eafery day for feefy years, you can tell from der sunset vhas der weather next day shall pe, but if you spend dot same time mit der pumpkins you vhas rich und doan' care for weather.

To say of some mans dot he vhas goot-hearted vhas a more shentle vhay of saying dot he got left behind when der rest of der peoples goes mit der idiot asylum.

Maype I shall agree mit my neighbors; maype not. A good deal depends on whether my shickens scratch on my land or his.

Envy vhas a canker dot gnaws at der heart. If some rich mans vhas poor dot doan' make me any petter off. When somepody goes by mit a carriage der pest vhay vhas to pelief dot walking vhas der pest for der health.

I know peoples who pelief in luck, und I know some lucky people. Der last vhas peoples who vhas willing to work hardt und pe saving. Der former vhas peoples who lif on deir neighbors.

If I find a man who doan' haf some troubles I put him down as a person who vhas either too hard-hearted to feel grief or of too little consequence for der Lord to notice.

Maype I belief in second marriages, but I also like to say dot all der first husband's clothes should be sold py der peddlers, und dot der second husband doan' pay for der gravestone.

When you find a man ready to fight for his opinion you must walk avhay. He vhas more certain to be deadt wrong, und if you lick him he vhas no petter.—Detroit Free Press.

Ben Butler and the Apple.

An old-timer who was in the mob said: "I was quite a shaver at the time Gen. Butler made his famous speech in this city. It was not made in Union Square, but in the city hall park opposite the city hall, alongside the old, hideous statue of Washington, which stood a few feet from where the present park fountain stands. Butler did not take an apple out of his pocket. The fact is the mob had been throwing all sorts of things at the General, none of which hit him, but some fellow in the crowd, with a more accurate aim than that of the others, threw an apple which hit him plump in the stomach. As the apple struck him he instinctively slapped his hand over his stomach, and in doing so caught the apple against his vest. It was then that he deliberately took out his penknife, coolly proceeded to peel it, and then began eating it. The mob, which had up to this time been savage in its attacks, broke out in roars of laughter, and Butler won the day. The speech he delivered was a 'corker.' One of the mildest things that he told his listeners was that when he was in New Orleans he had hanged better men than they were.—New York Telegram.

RURAL VISITOR (to waiter)—Reckon you may bring me some clams. Waiter—Little Necks, sir? Rural Visitor—Naw, gimme the biggest you've got. Just sold a load of hay, an' I'm going to have a good time if it costs twenty cents.—Pittsburgh Chronicle.

INDIANA STATE NEWS.

Muncie has put another feather in her cap. The Hemingrays' glass factory, of Covington, Ky., the largest west of Pittsburgh, will positively remove to that city at once. The contract has been signed. Mr. Hemingray, after a thorough investigation of the gas field in Ohio and Indiana selected Muncie as the point for the investment of their $250,000 capital. They will employ 150 hands. The magnitude of this industry may at first not be appreciated, but when it is considered that 1,500 people will be added to Muncie's rapidly increasing population, some idea of what this and other factories that will locate there, with those now in course of construction will be for Muncie, it may be no idle boast to say that in a few years Muncie will become a very important manufacturing town.

Captain Charles Reese, the present Assessor of the city of Fort Wayne, was in command of the Twentieth Indiana Volunteers in the battle of Gettysburg. A minnie ball entered his forehead, almost between the eyes, and he was left for dead upon the field. The Captain recovered, but surgeons always feared to extract the ball. The bullet worked downward, and frequently the wound discharged through the nose. Recently Captain Reese awoke with an uncomfortable feeling in his throat and began coughing. He coughed up the Gettysburg bullet of twenty-four years ago. It was rough and irregular and weighed 46½ grains, 27½ grains over an ounce. Captain Reese has drawn a large pension for his wound, and his face is badly disfigured.

Patents have been issued to Indiana inventors as follows: James Collins, Crawfordville, wood joint; Wallace H. Dodge and R. D. O. Smith, Mishawaka, manufacture of wooden boots and wooden shoes; Isaac N. Elliott and P. A. Reid, Richmond, fence machine; Daniel C. Ganter, Indianapolis, device for steaming and cooking purposes; Henry A. Goetz, New Albany, seed tester; Amos E. Kunderd, Cornuna, animal trap; Hugh S. Null and J. Bussard, Huntington, plow attachment; Hermon Nye, Corydon, liquid-measuring faucet; Henry B. Pitner, assignor of one-half to J. F. Croft, LaPorte, carriage top; Joshua Sandage, South Bend, drop hammer; Joseph E. Schooley, Kyle, band-cutter.

The Buck Shoals Silver-mining and Smelting Company are smelting about twenty tons of silver-bearing rock daily. The product is from sixty-five to seventy-five pounds of metal from each blast of twenty-four hours. An assay of one ton of the rock showed a silver product of $60 and $4 in gold. The ledge of rock is in the bluffs of White River, in Dubois County.

John Bergdahl, a Swede, of Attica, met his death in a peculiar manner. He was crossing a wooden bridge over a stream that runs from the Lithium spring, when he made a misstep and fell into the water. He was intoxicated, and, though the fall was only two feet and the water but four inches deep, he drowned before discovered. He was 65 years of age.

Mrs. Otis Fuller, of Milford, was accidentally shot and killed by her husband, who was cleaning his revolver near by. According to Mr. Fuller, he was in the act of laying the revolver on the table, when it was discharged, shooting her through the chest and instantly killing her. The deceased was 21 years of age, and leaves an infant child.

The Tri-State Fair Association which has been holding annual fairs in Fort Wayne for many years past, has reorganized, as follows: President, W. D. Page; Vice President, E. A. K. Hackett; Secretary, W. W. Rockhill; Treasurer, D. C. Fisher; Superintendent, J. W. Pearson. The standing member of the association is P. A. Randall.

Mrs. Catherine Burgess, widow of one of the pioneer real-estate owners of Richmond, fell down stairs, and it is possible that, on account of advanced age, her injuries will prove fatal. She is 83 years of age, and, besides sustaining three broken ribs and a dislocated shoulder, her physician fears she is injured internally.

Dogs attacked a flock of eighty sheep belonging to John Meer, in Washington Township, Hendricks County, slaughtering about forty of the number, and seriously wounding several others. The loss will probably reach $200. The appraised value of those killed will be paid by the township.

At the house of Fred Sadenwater, four miles south of Michigan City, his 14-year-old daughter Mary, while passing a stove, brushed her dress in the fire, and she came near being literally roasted before the fire could be extinguished. Her father was also badly burned. The girl will die.

The other day while Wm. Crouch, a laborer, was at work at Oak Hill Cemetery Crawfordville, he killed a hoop-snake which was rolling around on the ice as lively as though it were the 1st of July instead of the middle of winter. His snake-ship measured four feet in length.

James Tutt, a farmer living a short distance north of Brazil, died of what was first thought to be inflammatory rheumatism. One of his horses was afflicted with glanders, and it is supposed he contracted the disease while doctoring it, and died from the effects.

While Robert Henry, aged 17 years, a farmer living in Knight Township, Vanderburg County, was engaged in felling a tree the limbs caught on an adjacent tree, caused it to roll over, and, before he could get out of the way he was caught and crushed to death.

One of a battery of boilers in furnaces Nos. 13 and 14, at Brazil, exploded, destroying the mill and scattering ruin everywhere. One man was fatally burned, others seriously injured.

About a year ago the citizens of Knightstown voted to build a city hall, to cost not over $10,000. The Council has purchased grounds for that purpose, and work will commence as soon as spring opens.

A large vat of mash in a distillery at Terre Haute, exploded, breaking the leg of an employee, destroying the building, and causing a loss of several thousand dollars.

Governor Gray has appointed Thomas L. Sullivan Judge of Marion and Hendricks Counties, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Judge A. C. Ayers.

The Pennsylvania Company is to reconstruct the yards at Fort Wayne, increasing the capacity by some four miles, the heavy through freightage handled there making such an improvement necessary.

Indianapolis lumber dealers in 1887, sold 98,000,000 feet of lumber. In this statement is not included the hard-wood lumber handled, but simply the lumber used for building purposes.

Henry Occleson, a rich farmer, living six miles north of Fort Wayne, slipped on the ice. His skull was cracked, and he died almost instantly of concussion of the brain. His age was 77.

Oscar B. Hord, a member of the law firm of Baker, Hord & Hendricks, at Indianapolis, was stricken with paralysis while sitting in his office. His condition is critical.

The shooting of gas well No. 1 at Amboy, has trebled the flow, making it one amongst the gushers of the State. Much satisfaction is exhibited at Peru over the result.

Archie Smith was run over by a freight train at Spray's station and killed. His head was severed from his body.

Two freight trains collided at Lafayette, demolishing both engines and injuring an employee.

EVENTS OF A WEEK.

THE OLD WORLD.

—The Lourde Gazette (St. Petersburg) states that the Budget for 1888 will retrench 2,000,000, of which 8,000,000 rubles will be accounted of reductions in the expenses of the war and marine departments.

—Advices from San Remo say that the Crown Prince's throat continues to improve. His voice is good and his health excellent. A Berlin dispatch says: "The Emperor slept badly last night. He had an interview lasting half an hour with Prince William yesterday. The Emperor was able to receive verbal reports from Gen. Albedyll and others to-day."

—A cable dispatch from London states that thousands of persons, packed Fleet street, attracted by a public notice that the great Sullivan would be at the Sportsman office at two o'clock. The police sent a special detail, whose members had all they could do to suppress a riot. Sullivan's business was to sign with any or all comers for a fight, and he had his money with him. A long wait, and nobody came. Sullivan grew furious, and called Smith, Kilrain, and Mitchell, especially the last-named, the hardest kind of names. In vain his friends tried to soothe him. After an hour's waiting the police came up, scared but deferential, to know if the big fellow could do something to quiet the crowd and he said: "I'll go down and give 'em a chance to see me." So he went down and smiled benignly, while the crowd surged about him, patted his brawn and called him pretty names. He went through the crowd like a snow-plow, took a cab and drove away, followed still by shouting, surging thousands.

—Dispatches from Bucharest state that Prince Ferdinand would rather leave his bones on the field of battle than abdicate, which would mean the assassination of Bulgaria. The government has made requisition for horses and wagons for war service in the proportion of one cart and two horses to every 200 householders, thus placing a large transport service at the disposal of the government.

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Dr. Peter Parker has just died at his residence in Washington, aged 84. He was United States Minister to China thirty years ago, and had lived in Washington since 1821. He held the office of regent of the Smithsonian Institution for many years, and was one of the most eminent and respected citizens of the capital.

POLITICAL POINTS.

—A Dubuque dispatch says that "out of 100 interrogations on the choice for President and other questions of National and State interest, sent out to the Republican officials and leading politicians in Iowa, seventy replies have been received. These replies conclusively establish the fact that Iowa's choice for President is Senator Allison. He leads by a handsome majority, as the first and also as the second choice for President. All of the State officials, from Governor Larrabee down, name Allison as their first choice, except Auditor Lyon, and he is for the nominee of the convention. For Vice President, Harrison, of Indiana, and Hawley, of Connecticut, are favorites, Lincoln being third. To the question, 'Do you favor a protective tariff?' all answer yes, with four exceptions. As to national prohibition, 37 favored it, 25 opposed it, and 10 expressed no opinion. Only four of the entire number opposed the continuance of prohibition in Iowa."

—Representative Phelan, of Tennessee, has introduced in the House a joint resolution proposing the following amendment to the constitution:

ARTICLE IV, SECTION 1. Congress shall have power to grant aid to the public school systems of the several States of the Union.
Sec. 2. The aid so granted shall not exceed $10,000,000 annually, to be distributed pro rata among the States on the basis of illiteracy.
Sec. 3. The appropriations so made shall be paid to the person or persons designated by an act of the Legislature of each State, which shall specify that the aid so received shall be expended for public school purposes alone.
Sec. 4. Congress shall not supervise the expenditure of the appropriations herein provided for. But it may require a report from the State officer or officers disbursing the same, and if it shall appear from said report that the aid so granted, or any part of it, has not been expended for public school purposes, then it may withhold from subsequent appropriations an amount equal to that not so expended.

FINANCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL.

—A Reading (Pa.) dispatch says: "Arbitration or no arbitration, the Reading Company's miners as well as those employed by individual colliers in the Schuylkill regions, have decided to remain out until the Reading Company takes back its discharged employees on the railroad. In consequence of this stand every colliery is idle. There is not enough men left to work the machinery, even the engineers having deserted their posts. The Reading officials are badly frightened at the magnitude of the strike, which they say is the most complete in the history of the anthracite regions. The striking committees of railroads and miners held a large meeting in Pottsville, and declared that unless Mr. Corbin comes to terms the struggle promises to be one of the most bitter in the history of strikes."

—R. G. Dun & Co., of New York, in their last weekly review of trade, say:

With perhaps a little more than the usual dullness for the first half of January, business still progresses without monetary pressure or unusual embarrassment from the failure of collections in any part of the country. While failures at some points are numerous, the aggregate is less than for the corresponding week last year, and complaint of collections is much less frequent than a month ago. Within thirty or sixty days payments on large fall purchases will be required, and some increase in failures would not be surprising. For the shrinkage in business toward the end of last year indicated that there had been overconfidence buying in some departments. But the new year opens with less embarrassment from that or other causes than was reasonably apprehended. The business failures during the week numbered for the United States 28, and for Canada 30, or a total of 58, as against 179 the previous week, and 323 for the corresponding week of 1887.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

—In the case of Miss Campbell against Millionaire Arbuckle for breach of promise the jury at New York rendered a verdict giving the plaintiff $45,000 damages. The court also granted the prosecuting counsel $1,000. A motion to set the verdict aside was rejected, and the case probably will be appealed.

—John A. Arndt, of Sioux City, Iowa, who was recently acquitted of the charge of killing the Rev. Dr. Haddock, is in Neenah, Wis., negotiating for the purchase of a brewery.

SCORES FROZEN TO DEATH.

—The terrible storm which swept over the Northwest last week was the worst blizzard experienced since 1872. The victims of its fury are counted by the scores. From Dakota, Minnesota, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, and Montana, come pitiful stories of suffering and death from the icy blast which swept down from the regions of Korea. The wind blew at the rate of fifty miles an hour, and the snow, fine as powder, was hurled along by the gale. On the prairie an object forty feet distant could not be seen. A man's voice could not be heard six feet distant. The air was full of snow as fine as flour, and the roaring of the wind and the darkness caused by so much snow in the air made the scene the most dismal, drear and forsaken that man ever looked upon. Every railroad in Dakota and Minnesota and many in Iowa, Nebraska and Wisconsin were blocked. Telegraph wires everywhere were down, and it was not until Sunday night that the awful results of the storm became known. The following is the list of deaths so far received, while fifty more persons are missing:

In Dakota—Emil Gilterson, at Hitchcock; a Sioux Falls man, two sons of William Lister, at Raymond; two Mitchell youths, Emma Lauer, Carrie Annan, William C. Gathwaite, Laura Curtis, at Delmar; Mr. Davis and son, W. B. Hendly, at Burkston; Rowland Chambers, T. E. Gekerson, and James Newcomb's son, at Huron; Frank and William Nelson and Joseph Wilson, at Virgil; Mrs. Devine, Adam Germer, and J. W. Joslee, at Irons; George Allen, Jr., and Joseph Anderson, at Mitchell; four farmers, two Bridgewater men, Emil Gilman, Lewis Merriman and son, at Hitchcock; Miss Jacobson, — Glende G. Grundstrom, three unknown men, three children of Joseph Hutchinson, three Tyndall people, two Wakonda girls, Jacob Krutz, an unknown teacher, J. Paine, at Bowdler; Peter Parkins, at Koscoe; a White Lake man, four school children, James Smith and two sons, at Minot.

In Minnesota—John Loy at Luverne; Mrs. Knutson; Ole A. Beke at Albert Lea.

In Iowa—Two children of Mrs. Fitzgerald in Inwood; two boys; an unknown man at Sioux City.

In Nebraska—Child of John Dellinger at David City; Fred Eller, Wexwell Beck, and a young lady, at Omaha; Mrs. P. Smith at Lincoln; John Sparks of Cass County; Emil Grossman of Peru; Mrs. Chapman and her two little grandchildren at Stuart; Mr. Mason near Stuart; — Matthews near Sutton; a child named Bodine. Others are reported lost, and a number of escapes with frozen feet and hands are reported.

In Montana—Patrick Hanley at Marysville; William Overman at Belgrade.

In Kansas—James Kennedy, in Sherman County.

The following special dispatch from Huron, D. T., tells a graphic story of thrilling scenes in Southern Dakota:

Thos. E. Gilterson and a man named Rice went a short distance from town. When the storm struck them they started for home, but the team would not face it. The men then tied their horses to the wagon and each started for shelter. Rice got to the house much sooner than Gilterson, and after six hours' search Gilterson had not got home yet. A force of neighbors has searched for him all day, but found no trace of him.

James Newberry went to his slaughter-house and killed some sheep. Then he tried to ride home, but his horse would not face the storm. The man left the horse and tried to walk in the ball race, but failed. Not realizing the severity of the storm he tramped around in the slaughter-house and tried to keep warm but could not. Later he made a fire with some tallow but could not get warm. Then he lay down on the sheep pelts and got nearly to sleep. The cold aroused him and he kept on his feet till daylight. He then walked home with his feet and hands badly frozen.

Signal Service report: Men started to go over an ice block, which had a sidewalk, and timed for home, and instead of going a block west he brought up against a fence a block southeast. He then stumbled along as well as a man could and soon fell over a drift in his own yard, not knowing where he was.

There were many cases of persons lost in crossing streets. Every railroad is at present packed full of hard snow, and there are drifts to the leeward of every spear of grass and fence-post. The passenger train that is in the drifts four and a half miles east of Bataton is dead and waiting for spring-time. It had thirty-four passengers. Nine relief trains were sent to them from Bataton, but could not get there.

Then the people turned out with a long rope, and the man at the head of the rope stood at the first telegraph pole. The second, with the rope, took his place at the next pole, and so on till the last man had reached his pole. Then he notified the one behind him, by shouting, which was repeated till the first man was notified, who then started on ahead. This round was followed till the train was reached. The passengers refused to see them, and to eat the food they had brought. When it came to return there were a dozen of the travelers who preferred staying in the cars. The others went back in safety to Bataton. The station hands carried a quantity of provisions to the snow-bound passengers, who said they were gay and happy. Another train from Hawarden was caught on the fly two miles north of Vilas. Its passengers were rescued in much the same manner as that of the Bataton train.

Two men named Pierson and a man named Wilson started home from Virgil. The dead bodies of the Piersons have been found, but Wilson's has not.

Mary Connell taught at a school eight miles northeast of Huron. She and James Newcomb's son and daughter started home together, but were soon lost. The boy, aged 13, insisted on striking out for himself and leaving the girls. The two latter wandered around all night on the prairie, and were found next morning badly frozen. The boy was found too—dead.

The death of Robert Chambers is the most pathetic reported. He, with his two sons, one 9 years old and the other 11, went together one mile distant to water some cattle. Mr. Chambers was on foot and each of the boys had a horse. The father, seeing indications of a storm, sent the older boy immediately home, as he is troubled with rheumatism. Mr. Chambers and Johnny undertook to drive the cattle home. They were soon bewildered and lost. Johnny, who lived through the storm, says that when his father said that they were lost, the father made a place in the snow for him and wrapped him up the best he could. They had no overcoat or extra clothing. Johnny says that he was so covered up that he was warm. His father went out and called and called, and a St. Bernard dog which was with them barked, but no answer came. Then the father and the dog got into the snow beside the boy. While the boy was warm he knew that his father was getting very cold. He urged his father to go on and find trees and then he could make the house, but the father said: "No, I cannot go and leave you here." The boy urged, but the father would do no more than to call for aid within certain reach of the boy's bed of snow. The dog also kept by the boy. Through the long night they had conversations about perishing, but the father kept assuring the boy they would get through all right if he would only be pure and be still. The boy was quite comfortable and finally fell asleep. When he awoke it was nearly morning.

His father was still alive, and discovering that Johnny was awake the father said to him: "Now, Johnny, you pray and I will pray, and then I know God will take you through all right." They prayed and a sun shone through all right. The boy was entirely covered up, except a little breathing place in the snow, and he laid still. The dog stood sentry and afforded the clew by which the bodies were found soon after daylight by a searching party. Johnny thinks his father had not been dead more than an hour when they were found. The boy's hands and feet are only slightly frozen.

A married man, spectral says, a Swede coming in from a remote Swedish settlement to the southeast of Miles Lake states that a Swede farmer named Henry Olsson butchered his whole family, consisting of his wife and seven children. The deed was done because the father found that all of them were going to perish in the extreme cold weather.

At Chester, Minn., six children of James Baker were frozen to death while returning from school.

MR. CORBIN'S POSITION.

—A Reading (Pa.) dispatch says: "The breach between the Reading Railroad Company and its striking miners seems to be widening. To-night the impression prevails throughout the regions that they are farther from a settlement of their difficulty than ever before. President Corbin's refusal to see the committees of the strikers, his decisive answers to the business people of Schuylkill County, that he will not treat with any body of men as a labor organization, are all looked upon as evidence that he has decided to defy the miners. Coal is getting scarcer daily, and many of the dealers are entirely out and can not supply the demands of their customers."

THE carriage which was made by the United States Government especially for the use of Lafayette during his visit to this country in 1824 is owned in Chicago. It is a quaint old ark, hung on big springs and wide straps, and from his lofty seat the old Frenchman used to descend to the ground by steps with many foldings.

A BACHELOR in Frankfort, Germany, advertised for a "helpmate of agreeable exterior and good education; money a secondary consideration." He received 3,643 offers. Of these 2,137 came from Germany, and 237 from Frankfort. There were 1,827 who said nothing about their fortune, and 1,816 who gave their wealth at various figures from $250 to $50,000. Photographs accompanied 3,112 of the offers, and it cost the advertiser nearly $250 for return postage on them. He picked out a poor Hanoverian maiden and married her.

THE aroma of red cedar is fatal to house moths; the aroma of black walnut leaves is fatal to fleas. It is a matter of common observation that persons engaged in the business of making shingles from odoriferous cypress are rarely, if ever, affected by malarial diseases, and that persons engaged in distilling turpentine do not suffer from either malarial diseases or consumption. It is said that when cholera was epidemic in Memphis, Tenn., persons working in livery stables were entirely exempt from it. It is affirmed that since the destruction of the clove trees on the island of Ternate, the colony has suffered from an epidemic unknown before; and in times when cholera has prevailed in London and Paris, those employed in the perfumery factories have escaped its ravages.

Ice That Never Melts.

It is remarkable, indeed, that so much of the surface ground on the Yukon is frozen solid to a depth of several feet. It is all the more so when we come to realize the fact that during the summer it gets as hot there as in the South. During the heat of last summer the miners found it a great convenience to go in bathing in the streams at least twice a day, and to seek shady places in which to rock the gold out of the gravel. At the breaking up of winter the hours of sunshine are rapidly increasing, and continue so until mid-summer, when the sun beams forth twenty-two hours out of the twenty-four, while on the high mountain peaks it is for a period of several days in June not entirely out of sight during the twenty-four hours. But during all this heat and long days of continuous sunshine, the sun's rays do not penetrate the heavy mosses that cover nearly the entire surface of the country, and, consequently, the frozen ground underneath lies in that state as if packed in an icehouse. After it once becomes frozen, as any damp ground will do in the winter time, it rapidly becomes covered with this moss, which is of a remarkably rapid growth, and attains a depth of some two feet or more. During the heat of summer this moss becomes dry to the depth of several inches, and the miners think that by a continuous burning of it as fast as it dries they will soon have the gravel bars along the creeks, at least, cleared off, being of the impression that when the gravel deposits are exposed to the scorching rays of the sun, and rains and atmosphere, they will readily thaw out. When winter sets in the hours of sunshine gradually decrease until during the shortest days the sun shines but four hours out of the twenty-four. But at this period the aurora is most intense and helps very materially in driving darkness from that dreary land. The thermometer goes down to seventy degrees in winter, but the atmosphere is very dry, and, consequently, the cold is not so perceptible as one would imagine. — Juneau, (Alaska) Free Press.

Nutritious Meats.

Beef.—Among all civilized people beef is regarded as the principal animal food. By common consent we admit that beef is more nutritious than any other kind of flesh. This universal opinion is supported by the investigations of science. There is a larger proportion of nutritious material in beef than in the flesh of the sheep or hog. Beef is of closer texture and is fuller of red blood juices. It is richer in flavor than the flesh of any other domestic animal, and a smaller amount of it will satisfy hunger.

Mutton.—This is more easily digested than beef, though in a healthy man no marked difference would be observed, since in the stomach of such a man there arises no inconvenience from the digestion of beef. However, mutton will be found to tax the stomach of the dyspeptic less than beef does, and mutton broth is both acceptable and valuable to a person suffering from dysentery or kindred affections of the bowels. But mutton is not so nutritious as beef. There is quite a perceptible difference in the flavor of mutton taken from a fattened wether, which has been for some time deprived of all excess in his woolly coat, and of that taken from a sheep which has a heavy fleece. The smallest proportion of both fat and bone to muscle is found in the leg, consequently that is the most valuable part of the animal.

Veal is not nearly so nutritious as beef, and is much more difficult of digestion. Some persons are wholly unable to digest veal. It is more easy of digestion when well roasted or broiled than when boiled. The time required for the digestion of veal is five hours or more, while beef is digested in from two and a half to three hours.

Lamb.—This is not nearly so nutritious as mutton. The tissue is soft, gelatinous and rich in water. It is used principally on account of its delicacy of flavor, which, however, is very variable, depending upon the breed and nourishment. Lamb should not be selected for those whose digestive organs are weak.

Pork, Bacon, and Ham.—As a rule, dried meats are more difficult of digestion than the same meats in the fresh state. Bacon and ham are, however, exceptions to this rule, for when well cured they are digested with more ease than fresh pork. In cold weather nice bacon is especially suited for furnishing a large amount of heat by its oxidation in the body. The inhabitants of cold countries find fatty food necessary to their existence. Of all the meats ordinarily eaten this is most likely to be diseased. The flesh of the hog, therefore, should not be eaten unless it has been thoroughly cooked. — Housewife.

Oh, Wise Young Judge!

Little Mabel, 5 years old, is not so young but that she has picked up some knowledge of the world. She said to her mother the other day, after a fit of deep musing:

"Say, mamma, who was papa before he married us, anyway?"

"Who was papa? Why, he was the same man that he is now."

"Yes; but what was he to you? Was he just a man that you mashed?" — Alton (Ill.) Democrat.

An accession of wealth is a dangerous predicament for a man. At first he is stunned, if the accession be sudden; he is very humble and very grateful. Then he begins to speak a little louder, people think him more sensible, and soon he thinks himself so. — Cecil.

FAILING FINANCIERS.

Wall Street Leaders Go Down One by One—What Causes Their Fall.

Bank Presidents say that 75 per cent of the men who go into business fail. The percentage is much larger among financial operators. Ninety nine out of a hundred of the "Napoleons of Finance" of Wall street end their career in failure.

John Tobin, once President of the Hudson River Railroad, and worth $2,000,000, is now a $5 bucketshop operator. He gambled, lost money to John Morrissey, refused to pay, was reported to old Commodore Vanderbilt, and turned out of his Presidency.

Henry Smith was a noted operator in Wall street, for a time very successful, and accumulated a fortune of over $5,000,000. He fought Jay Gould in numerous speculations, and once said: "I'll make Jay Gould earn his living with a hand organ and monkey." When he failed for $5,000,000, Gould quietly remarked: "He might now try the hand-organ himself."

John Ponder was once famous as the homeliest, but one of the most successful men of Wall street. He was worth $1,000,000, but has at last joined the long procession of "the busted."

These men are said to lose their heads. They first lose, in the granding processes of speculation, their physical stamina. Mental feebleness naturally follows. With physical weakness also comes lack of nerve. A clear head and nerve are essential requisites to Wall street success; with the primary organs out of gear, neither can be retained.

Derangement of the kidneys is a common result of mental overwork. When they fail to carry off the waste matter of the system, uric acid, that deadly poison accumulates, and sneaks through all the blood channels. The whole system becomes a sort of cess pool and every function is impaired. Unless help is found, the "general break-up" soon follows.

Mr. E. Evans, President of the Lumber Exchange Bank, of Tonawanda, N. Y., broke down in 1887, and ran down in weight from 180 pounds to 125 pounds. He rallied somewhat, but afterward became very low, with terrible pain in the kidneys. Physicians could not help him, but he finally procured Warner's safe cure, and he writes: "I was relieved of pain within twenty minutes after I had taken the first dose. I began to improve rapidly, and am still improving and gaining in strength and weight."

If the young "Napoleons of Finance" would "call" for fewer cocktails, "put" an occasional dollar into Warner's safe cure, and keep their kidneys "at par," they would retain longer grip on Wall street.

Fish in the Sea of Galilee.

It has been discovered that the fish of the Sea of Galilee belong to the fish system of the great inland lakes of Africa, and the inference is that ages ago lake communication existed between Genesareth and Tanganyika, the Red Sea—then a fresh-water lake—being a link between them. One thing is even more certain than this, says a correspondent—that the fish represented in Raphael's famous cartoon of the "Miraculous Draught of Fishes" are not and never were to be found in the Sea of Galilee. — London Exchange.

PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION

With a large lumber dealer of Grand Rapids, Mich., was in town over last Sunday. M. T. Bishop has bought over three thousand dollars worth of lumber of this firm in the last few weeks.

Rev. W. W. Lineberry, formerly pastor of the Methodist church at this place, but now located at Indianapolis, was in town for a short time on Saturday. His many friends will be sorry to learn that his health is very poor.

Two men and a bear struck the town last week, but the weather was too cold for out-door performances, and as a consequence their audiences were slim, and the nickels slimer. They claimed to have walked all the way from New York and were going to Wisconsin.

The Garrett Clipper says that this would be a splendid time for Representative Leighty to add to himself a great amount of glory, by introducing a bill to the legislature to have the law governing grand juries revised. Is it possible, that the Clipper man is not aware of the fact that there is no session of the legislature this winter, or does he mean that Mr. Leighty should introduce such a bill after he has been re-elected next fall?

BRACE UP.—You are feeling depressed, your appetite is poor, you are bothered with Headache, you are fidgetty, nervous, and generally out of sorts, and want to brace up. Brace up, but not with stimulants, spring medicines, or bitters, which give for their basis very cheap, bad whisky, and which stimulate you for an hour, and then leave you in worse condition than before. What you want is an alternative that will purify your blood, start healthy action of Liver and Kidneys, restore your vitality, and give renewed health and strength. Such a medicine you will find in Electric Bitters, and only 50 cents a bottle at W. C. Patterson's Drug Store.

Quite a large number of the good people of Sodom drove into town Saturday evening, and headed directly for the Methodist parsonage, and before Rev. Langley and family were aware of it, they had taken possession of the house, filled the woodshed full of wood, and left a liberal supply of horse-feed in the barn. The ladies, of course, had not forgotten one of the most essential features, and that was something to eat, and after exchanging friendly greetings with each other, a splendid supper was served, and the remainder of the evening was spent in a sociable and pleasant manner. Such occasions are always profitable, especially so to the recipient, and when we think of the many things that were donated, including a big pile of wood already cut for the stove, it almost makes us wish that we were a preacher, ourself.

Frank and Joe Scholes are at home this week.

Flora Tustison's health is very poor at present.

Emma Abels started for her home in Michigan last Monday.

Henry Saylor fell down cellar and hurt himself quite badly.

There was another hop at Freeman Abels' Wednesday evening.

Wilson Beaber's folks have gone to Hometown to visit his parents.

Perry Beaber was in the neighborhood last Thursday. He is laid up with a sore hand.

This is leap year, and I heard the remark made that there would be a great many weddings.

John Milliman's folks came near having a burn out the other day. The fire got to burning around the stove pipe.

There was a pleasant party at R. G. Coburn's last Friday evening. It was Ida Scholes' and Alva Coburn's birthday.

CONCORD.

Little Inez Guyinger has been on the sick list.

Mrs. Huffman's wood chopping was not very largely attended.

Miss Samantha Buchanan visited friends at Mt. Hope last week.

Miss Alice Draggoo was the guest of her aunt Mrs. Clara Reed of Auburn, last week.

Geo. Morr and family are lamenting the loss of a cow that they were fattening for beef.

The social was slimly attended last week on account of the very cold and stormy weather.

Mrs. Lena Rickett has been very sick for the past week, and at present is but very little better.

The young people crowded in at John Smith's last Wednesday evening, surprising him very much; and told him they were there because it was his birthday.

Mrs. Geo. Johnson was so completely taken by surprise last Saturday morning, that she said she did not know what she was about. It was her forty-fifth birthday, and friends flocked in until the house was full. Much credit is due her little son Georgie for the management of the whole affair.

With this issue of the News, we believe, closes our correspondence for one year. Whether the items have been of very great importance or not, we have tried to be faithful in furnishing them, and do not think we have missed many weeks. We have tried to write them correctly, and just as they were told to us, not always being an eye witness. If at any time we have offended any of the News readers we beg pardon, and think there can be some one else chosen to fill the position more acceptably than we have done.

PIGEON RETREAT.
Jack Moody sallied forth one night,
To call upon his neighbor;
To chat awhile on women's rights,
And of the Knight's of Labor.

As on he trudged he wandered what,
Would be the price of leather?
For new boots he must likely have,
If it kept such rainy weather.

His neighbor Shutt he found alone,
For a wonder at his leisure;
To talk about the folks at home,
Which gave Jack greatest pleasure.

Jack talked till nine or ten o'clock,
Then said he must be going,
For he must see about his stock,
Because he saw 'twas snowing.
His thoughts upon his homeward way,
Was turned on novel stories;
He had read about an Indian fray,
And longed to share its glories.

"I'd fight the chief himself," thought Jack,
"For I'm brave as a major;
His scalp from the battle I'd bring back,
I'm not afraid to wager."

He sat down to think o'er his griefs,
And dropped off into slumber;
He dreamed of Indian squaws and chiefs,
And battles without number.

Meantime Elmer had started out,
A searching for his brother;
This state of things was brought about
By Jack's anxious wife and mother.

Ell wakened Jack, with a deafening shout,
Jack thought it was a warrior;
And the way he ran from the frightful spot,
Would credit a Spencerville lawyer.

He could not be induced to stop,
Where was the bravery boasted?
"They'll tie me to a stake tip-top," Thinks Jack, "and I'll be roasted."
They say, that he is wandering yet,
Through fields and woods Oh! pity,
Minerva's afraid she'll have to get,
Him taken to Indianapolis city.

This one is sad, but shed no tears,
Perhaps it is a fable;
But we must write what news we hear
The best that we are able.

Don't know why, but St. Joe, school-marius are always popular among the school boys of Pigeon's Retreat. Only the other day one of them remarked that the teacher was minus a hair-pin, for he had stolen one to keep for a keep-sake. The rest will be likely to follow suit.

*LOCALS*

The meetings at the Lutheran church are being well attended.

The sleighing is good but the weather is most too cold to enjoy it.

Hugh Watt, living north of Concord, fell and broke his arm one day last week.

Jacob Fridt, one of the old substantial farmers of Springfield township, Allen county, made us a pleasant call on Tuesday.

A party of young people from Hicksville drove over on Wednesday evening, and were royally entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Frank Coughanour.

Frank Barney has a new dog he calls by the scriptural name of "Joab." He is a terror to the young men that hang around Frank's front gate.

A sled-load of people from this place drove down to Lew Zeis's, near Maysville on Tuesday evening. They had a jolly sleigh-ride and were pleasantly entertained.

A telegram was received Tuesday, from Michigan, announcing the death of Mrs. Nichols, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Baker, of Concord. The funeral occurred on Wednesday.

A broken wheel caused the wreck of two coal cars near the river bridge at this place yesterday morning. The wreck-train came down from Garrett, and after a short delay of trains, the track was cleared.

The Salvation army struck Waterloo last week.

Rev. Thomas will preach Sunday afternoon at three o'clock.

Harry Meek has been working in Chicago for some time past.

A canning establishment is one of the talk-of new enterprises at the Hub.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Coughanour spent last Sabbath with friends at Hicksville.

Mr. and Mrs. George De Long of Newville, made this office a pleasant call on Friday, of last week.

The political pot is beginning to boil, and conventions are being called for the purpose of organizing for the campaign of next year.

It is said that the cold weather makes the gas pressure at Auburn very light, and the patrons find it difficult to keep their rooms warm.

Foreman Ridgway fell on his thumb last week and strained it quite severely. George should know better than to carry his thumb in his hip pocket.

Another wind mill company is to be organized at Auburn. There's millions in it, but like every thing else, there is a probability of its being over-done.

Art Woodcox says he swore off using tobacco on New Year's day, and hasn't had a chew since. The swelling in Art's right cheek didn't seem to bear him out in his good resolutions.

New cabbages are being offered for sale by the enterprising grocery-men of Hicksville. They were not raised in that vicinity, but were imported from Holland, and are quite expensive.

To live long, it is necessary to live slowly. But that isn't the way things are done now-a-days; everything is hurry-fury, and a person has to get up pretty early in the morning to keep up with the rush of the times.

George Weeks, postmaster at Newville, has resigned the position, and Miss Lizzie Seeley has been appointed to fill the office. Mr. Weeks has been postmaster for several years, and aside from his peculiarities, has given general satisfaction.

Arbuckle, the great coffee producer, was sued for a breach of promise recently, by Miss Campbell, of New York, and a judgement of $45,000, was rendered in her favor. Probably that has something to do with the present high price of coffee. The old gentleman ought to keep out of such scrapes, and then perhaps he could reduce the price on his coffee.

A fine supper was served at the residence of Elmer Wyatt, near Newville, on Wednesday evening, for the benefit of the U. B. church. Over one hundred persons were present and a most enjoyable time was had. We understand that these socials are to be held quite frequently, and the proceeds are to be used for needed improvements on the interior of their church.

There is considerable petty thieving going on in our neighboring towns, and it would be well for our citizens to keep on the look-out for suspicious characters. Last week two tough looking tramps struck the town and hung around in the vicinity of the depot all day; toward evening George Ridgway told them that the citizens of the place were watching for them, and that only a short time before a man had been shot for breaking into a store, and if they knew when they were well off, they would get up and get. And they got.

CHANGE OF FIRM!

Owing to certain changes that will take place in our firm on the first of March, we have decided to offer our stock at cost from now until that date. This is a rare opportunity to get goods at a bargain. All Best Prints at 4 and 5 cents. Ladies' Cloaks and Jackets at even less than cost. Clothing at your own price; in fact we want to close out what clothing we have on hand, and will make special low prices on same. Now is your time to buy an Overcoat cheap. Mrs. Anna Dwire and her daughter of Tiffin, Ohio, visited with the family of Charley Widney and other friends in this vicinity, last week.

One of those stinging cold days the fore part of the week, William Simanton came in and purchased three pair of ear muffs. We've been puzzled to know what he wanted with so many, and can't account for it in any other way, than that it took three pair of muffs to cover his ears.

Two men have been stopping at this place this week, and going out in the country, selling dry goods, clothing and notions, and taking notes for same. We know nothing about the parties or their manner of doing business, but as we have said heretofore, we would caution our readers against having anything to do with them whatever. When men offer goods at one third less than wholesale prices, there is a screw loose somewhere.

THEIR BUSINESS BOOMING.

Probably no one thing has caused such a general revival of trade at W. C. Patterson's Drug Store as their giving away to their customers of so many free trial bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. Their trade is simply enormous in this very valuable article from the fact that it always cures and never disappoints. Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Croup, and all throat and lung diseases quickly cured. You can test it before buying by getting a trial bottle free, large size $1. Every bottle warranted.

There will be an oyster supper in Blair's Hall, Newville, on Thursday evening, Jan. 26th, 1888.

S. & F. Barney bought nearly one thousand dollars worth of clover seed one day last week. On the plan that people generally spend their money where they get it, that, including the other business that was transacted, was a pretty big day's trade for St. Joe.

DR. TALMAGE'S SERMON.

Second of the "Series to Women" at the Tabernacle.

"Marriage for Worldly Success Without Regard to Moral Character" the Subject
Men Who Pretend to Despise Religion
Are Rank Hypocrites.

BROOKLYN, Jan. 15.—In the Brooklyn Tabernacle this morning the Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D., preached the second of the series of sermons to the women of America, with important hints to men. The subject of the sermon was, "Marriage for worldly success without regard to moral character," and the text was from I. Samuel xxv, 2: "And there was a man in Maon, whose possessions were in Carmel, and the man was very great, and he had three thousand sheep and a thousand goats." Dr. Talmage said:

My text introduces us to a drunken bloot of large property. Before the day of safety deposits and government bonds and national banks people had their investments in flocks and herds, and this man, Nabal, of the text, had much of his possessions in live stock. He came also of a distinguished family and had glorious Caleb for an ancestor. But this descendant was a sneak, a churl, a sot, and a fool. One instance to illustrate: It was a wool raising country, and at the time of shearing a great feast was prepared for the shearers; and David and his warriors, who had in other days saved from destruction the threshing floors of Nabal, sent to him asking, in this time of plenty, for some bread for their starving men. And Nabal cried out: "Who is David?" As though an Englishman had said, "Who is Wellington?" or a German should say, "Who is Von Moltke?" or an American should say, "Who is Washington?" Nothing did Nabal give to the starving men, and that night the scoundrel lay dead drunk at home, and the Bible gives us a full-length picture of him sprawling and mandlin and helpless.

Now that was the man whom Abigail, the lovely and gracious and good woman married—a tuberoso planted beside a thistle, a palm branch twined into a wreath of deadly nightshade. Surely that was not one of the matches made in Heaven. We throw up our hands in horror at that wedding. How did she ever consent to link her destinies with such a creature? Well, she no doubt thought that it would be an honor to be associated with an aristocratic family, and no one can dispise a great name. Besides this, wealth would come and with it chains of gold and mansions lighted by swinging lamps of aromatic oil, and resounding with the cheer of banqueters seated at tables laden with wines from the richest vineyards, and fruits from ripest orchards, and nuts threshed from foreign woods, and meats smoking in platters of gold, set on by slaves in bright uniforms. Before she plighted her troth with this dissipated man she sometimes said to herself: "How can I endure him? To be associated for life with such a debauchee I cannot and will not!" But then again she said to herself: "It is time I was married, and this is a cold world to depend on, and perhaps I might do worse, and may be I will make a sober man out of him, and marriage is a lottery anyhow." And when one day this representative of a great house presented himself in a parenthesis of sobriety, and with an assumed geniality and gallantry of manner, and with promises of fidelity and kindness and self-abnegation, a June morning smiled on a March squall, and the great souled woman surrendered her happiness to the keeping of this infamous son of fortune whose possessions were in Carmel; and the man was very great, and he had three thousand sheep and a thousand goats.

Behold here a domestic tragedy repeated every hour of every day all over Christendom—marriage for worldly success without regard to character. So Marie Jeanne Philipon, the daughter of the humble engraver of Paris, became the famous Mme. Roland of history, the vivacious and brilliant girl united with the cold, formal, monotonous man because he came of an affluent family of Amiens and had lordly blood in his veins. The day when, through political revolution, this patriotic woman was led to the scaffold, around which lay piles of human heads that had fallen from the ax, and she said to an aged man whom she had confronted as they ascended the scaffold: "Go first, that you may not witness my death," and then, undaunted, took her turn to die—that day was to her only the last act of a tragedy of which her uncongenial marriage day was the first.

Good and genial character in a man, the very first requisite for a woman's happy marriage. Mistake me not as depreciative of worldly prosperities. There is a religious cant that would seem to represent poverty as a virtue and wealth as a crime. I can take you through a thousand mansions where God is as much worshiped as He ever was in a cabin. The gospel inculcates the virtues which tend toward wealth. In the millennium we will all dwell in palaces and ride in chariots and sit at sumptuous banquets and sleep under rich embroideries and live 400 or 500 years, for, if, according to the Bible in those times, a child shall die 100 years old, the average of human life will be at least five centuries. The whole tendency of sin is toward poverty, and the whole tendency of righteousness is toward wealth. Godliness is profitable for the life that now is as well as for that which is to come. No inventory can be made of the picture galleries consecrated to God, and of sculpture and of libraries and pillared magnificence and of parks and fountains and gardens in the ownership of good men and women. The two most lordly residences in which I was ever a guest had morning and evening prayers, all the employees present, and all day long there was an air of cheerful piety in the conversation and behavior. Lord Radstock carried the gospel to the Russian nobility. Lord Cavan and Lord Cairns spent their vacation in evangelical services. Lord Congleton became missionary to Bagdad. And the Christ who was born in an Eastern caravansary has again and again lived in a palace.

It is a grand thing to have plenty of money, and horses that don't compel you to take the dust of every lumbering and lazy vehicle; and books of history that give you a glimpse of all the past; and shelves of poetry to which you may go and ask Milton or Tennyson or Spencer or Tom Moore or Robert Burns to stop now and spend an evening with you, and other shelves to which you may go while you feel disgusted with the shame of the world, and ask Thackeray to express your chagrin, or Charles Dickens to express the Pecksniffianism, or Thomas Carlyle to thunder your indignation; or other shelves where the old Gospel writers stand ready to warn and cheer us while they open doors into that city which is so bright the noon-day sun is abolished. There is no virtue in owning a horse that takes four minutes to go a mile, if you can own one that can go in a little over two minutes and a half; no virtue in running into the teeth of a northwest wind with thin apparel, if you can afford furs; no virtue in being poor when you can honestly be rich. There are names of men and women that I have only to mention, and they suggest not only wealth, but religion and generosity and philanthropy, such as Amos Lawrence, James Lennox, Peter Cooper, William E. Dodge, Shaftesbury, Miss Wolfe, and Mrs. Astor. A recent writer says that of fifty leading business men in one of our Eastern cities, and of fifty leading business men of one of our Western cities, three-fourths of them are Christians. The fact is, that about all the brain and the business genius is on the side of religion. Infidelity is incipient insanity. All infidels are cranks. Many of them talk brightly, but you soon find that in their mental machinery there is a screw loose. When they are not lecturing against Christianity they are sitting in bar-rooms squirting tobacco juice, and when they get mad swear till the place is sulphurous. They only talk to keep their courage up, and at best will feel like the infidel who begged to be buried with his Christian wife and daughter, and when asked why he wanted such burial replied: "If there be a resurrection of the good, as some folks say there will be, my Christian wife and daughter will somehow get me up and take me along with them."

Men may pretend to despise religion, but they are rank hypocrites. The sea captain was right when he came up to the village on the sea coast and insisted on paying $10 to the church, although he did not attend himself. When asked his reason, he said that he had been in the habit of carrying cargoes of oysters and clams from that place, and he found since that church was built the people were more honest than they used to be, for before the church was built he often found the load, when he came to count it, a thousand clams short. Yes, godliness is profitable for both worlds. Most of the great, honest, permanent worldly successes are by those who reverence God and the Bible. But what I do say is, that if a man have nothing but social position and financial resources, a woman who puts her happiness by marriage in his hand re-enacts the folly of Abigail when she accepted disagreeable Nabal, "whose possessions were in Carmel, and the man was very great, and he had three thousand sheep and a thousand goats."

The marriage day comes and goes. The wedding ring was costly enough and the orange blossoms fragrant enough and the benediction solemn enough and the wedding march stirring enough. And the audience shed tears of sympathetic gladness, supposing that the craft containing the two has sailed off on a placid lake, although God knows that they are launched on a Dead sea, its waters brackish with tears and ghastly with ghastly faces of despair floating to the surface and then going down. There they are, the newly-married pair in their new home. He turns out to be a tyrant. Her will is nothing, his will everything. Lavish of money for his own pleasure, he begrudges her the pennies he pinches out into her trembling palm. Instead of the kind words she left behind in her former home, now there are complaints and fault-findings and curses. He is the master and she the slave. The worst villain on earth is the man who, having, captured a woman from her father's house and after the oath of the marriage altar has been pronounced, says, by his manner if not in words: "I have you now in my power. What can you do? My arm is stronger than yours. My voice is louder than yours. My fortune is greater than yours. My name is mightier than yours. Now crouch before me like a dog. Now crawl away from me like a reptile. You are nothing but a woman, anyhow. Down, you miserable wretch!" Can halls of mosaic, can long lines of Etruscan bronze, or statuary by Palmers and Powers and Crawford and Chantry and Canova, can galleries rich from the pencil of Bierstadt and Church and Kenset and Cole and Cropsey, could flutes played on by an Ole Bull, or pianos fingered by a Gottschalk, or solos warbled by a Sonntag, could wardrobes like that of a Marie Antoinette, could jewels like those of a Eugenie make a wife in such a companionship happy?

Imprisoned in a castle! Her gold bracelets are the chains of a lifelong servitude. There is a sword over her every feast, not like that of Damocles, staying suspended, but dropping through her lacerated heart. Her wardrobe is full of shrouds for deaths which she dies daily, and she is buried alive though buried under gorgeous upholstery. There is one word that sounds under the arches and rolls along the corridors and weeps in the falling fountains and echoes in the shutting of every door and groans in every note of stringed and wind instrument: "Woe! Woe!" The oxen and sheep in olden times brought to the temple of Jupiter to be sacrificed used to be covered with ribbons and flowers—ribbons on the horns and flowers on the neck. But the floral and ribboned decorations did not make the stab of the butcher's knife less deathful, and all the chandeliers you hang over such a woman, and all the robes with which you envelop her, and all the ribbons with which you adorn her, and all the bewitching charms with which you embank her footsteps are the ribbons and flowers of a horrible butchery.

As if to show how wretched a good woman may be in splendid surroundings, we have two recent illustrations, two dual places in Great Britain. They are the focus of the best things that are possible in art, in literature, in architecture, the accumulation of other estates until their wealth is beyond calculation and their grandeur beyond description. One of the castles has a cabinet set with gems that cost $2,500,000, and the walls of it bloom with Rembrandts and Claudes and Poussins and Gudeons and Raphaels, and there are Southdown flocks in summer grazing on its lawns, and Arab steeds prancing at the doorways on the "first open day at the kennels." From the one castle the duchess has removed with her children because she can no longer endure the orgies of her husband, the duke, and in the other castle the duchess remains confronted by insults and abominations in the presence of which I do not think God or decent society requires a good woman to remain. Alas for those dual country seats! They on a large scale illustrate what on a smaller scale may be seen in many places—that without moral character in a husband all the accessories of wealth are to a wife's soul tantalization and mockery. When Abigail finds Nabal, her husband, beastly drunk, as she comes home from interceding for his fortune and life, it was no alleviation that the old brute had possessions in Carmel, and "was very great, and had three thousand sheep and a thousand goats," and he the worst goat among them. The animal in his nature seized the soul in its mouth and ran off with it.

Before things are right in this world genteel villains are to be expurgated. Instead of being welcomed into respectable society, because of the amount of stars and garters and medals and estates they represent, they ought to be fumigated two or three years before they are allowed, without peril to themselves, to put their hands on the door knob of a moral house. The time must come when a masculine estray will be as repugnant to good society as a feminine estray, and no coat of arms or family emblazonry or epaulet can pass a Lothario unchallenged among the sanctities of home life. By what law of God or common sense is an Absalom better than a Delilah, a Don Juan better than a Messalina? The brush that paints the one black must paint the other black. But what a spectacle it was when last summer much of "watering-place" society went wild with enthusiasm over an unclean foreign dignitary, whose name in both hemispheres is a synonym for profligacy, and princesses of American society from all parts of the land had him ride in their carriages and sit at their tables, though they knew him to be a portable lazaretto, a charnel house of moral putrefaction, his breath a typhoid, his foot that of a Satyr, and his touch death. Here is an evil that men cannot stop, but women may. Keep all such out of your parlors, have no recognition for them in the street, and no more think of allying your life and destiny with theirs than "gales from Araby" would consent to pass the honeymoon with an Egyptian plague. All that money or social position a bad man brings to a woman in marriage is a splendid despair, a gilded horror, a brilliant agony, a prolonged death, and the longer the marital union lasts, the more evident will be the fact that she might better never have been born. Yet you and I have been at brilliant weddings where, before the feast was over, the bridegroom's tongue was thick and his eye glassy and his step a stagger as he clicked glasses with jolly comrades, all going with lightning limited express train to the fatal crash over the embankment of a ruined life and a lost eternity.

Woman, join not your right hand with such a right hand. Accept from such an one no jewel for finger or ear, lest that sparkle of precious stone turn out to be the eye of a basilisk, and let not the ring come on the finger of your right hand lest that ring turn out to be one link in a chain that shall bind you in never ending captivity. In the name of God and Heaven and home, in the name of all time and all eternity I forbid the banns! Consent not to join one of the many regiments of women who have married for worldly success without regard to moral character.

If you are ambitious, oh woman, for noble affiancing, why not marry a king? And to that honor you are invited by the Monarch of Heaven and earth, and this day a voice from the skies sounds forth: "As the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride so shall thy God rejoice over thee." Let him put upon thee the ring of this royal marriage. Here is an honor worth reaching after. By repentance and faith you may come into a marriage with the Emperor of universal dominion, and you may be an empress unto God forever, and reign with Him in palaces that the centuries cannot crumble or cannonade or demolish.

High worldly marriage is not necessary for woman or marriage of any kind in order to your happiness. Celibacy has been honored by the best being that ever lived and his greatest apostle, Christ and Paul. What higher honor could single life on earth have? But what you need, oh woman, is to be affianced forever and forever, and the banns of that marriage I am this moment here, and now ready to publish. Let the angels of Heaven lend from their galleries of light to witness while I pronounce you one—a loving God and a forgiven soul. One of the most stirring passages in history with which I am acquainted tells us how Cleopatra, the exiled queen of Egypt, won the sympathies of Julius Caesar, the conqueror, until he became the bridegroom and she the bride. Driven from her throne, she sailed away on the Mediterranean Sea in a storm, and when the large ship anchored she put out with one womanly friend in a small boat until she arrived at Alexandria, where was Caesar, the great general. Knowing that she would not be permitted to land or pass the guards on the way to Caesar's palace, she laid upon the bottom of the boat some shawls and scarfs and richly-dyed upholstery, and then lay down upon them, and her friend wrapped her in them and she was admitted ashore in this wrapping of goods, which was announced as a present for Caesar. This bundle was permitted to pass the guards of the gates of the palace, and was put down at the feet of the Roman general. When the bundle was unrolled there rose before Caesar one whose courage and beauty and brilliancy are the astonishment of the ages. This exiled Queen of Egypt told the story of her sorrows, and he promised her that she should get back her throne in Egypt and take the throne of widely dominion in his own heart. Afterward they made a triumphal tour in a barge that the pictures of many art galleries have called "Cleopatra's Barge," and that barge was covered with silken awning, and its deck was soft with luxuriant carpets, and the oars were silver tipped, and the prow was gold mounted, and the air was redolent with the spicery of tropical gardens and resonant with the music that made the night glad as the day. You may rejoice, oh woman, that you are not a Cleopatra, and that the one to whom you may be affianced had none of the sins of Caesar, the conqueror. But it suggests to me how you, a soul exiled from happiness and peace, may find your way to the feet of the conqueror of earth and sky. Though it may be a dark night of spiritual agitation in which you put out into the harbor of peace you may sail, and when all the wrappings of fear and doubt and sin shall be removed you will be found at the feet of Him who will put you on a throne, to be acknowledged as His in the day when all the silver trumpets of the sky shall proclaim: "Behold the bridegroom cometh," and in barge of light you sail with Him the river whose source is the foot of the throne and whose mouth is at the sea of glass mingled with fire.

Vermont's Monument at Bennington.

For more than ten years the people of Vermont have been assiduously laboring to secure the erection of a monument to commemorate the victory of Gen. Stark, August 16, 1777, that should not only worthily symbolize the great importance of the event commemorated, but also the determined character of the men who achieved it and the gratitude of their descendants. It is also worthy of praise that in order to assure the speedy completion of the monument that the "Bennington Battle Monument Association" have secured the funds and deposited them in the Treasury of the State for the completion of the walls and are now erecting upon a foundation of solid rock a structure, plain and simple, 301 feet high, on one of the beautiful hills of the Green Mountain State, upon which were deposited the "Continental stores" which the attempt of Gen. Burgoyne to possess gave birth to the battle it commemorates.

PARADISE ON EARTH.

A Model Alabama City Without Debt, Drunkenness, and Other Vices.
(Cincinnati Enquirer.)

"There are more men at work—they are paid better wages, they have better homes—there is more cash invested in Anniston than in any other city of its size in America."

So says every man in this little city under the eaves of the Blue Ridge, and so the local statistics prove. There has been wonderful progress made in Alabama during the last five years, but at no one spot, with the possible exception of Birmingham, has it compared with Anniston. It is a place which has grown from a borough, or village, or one or two stores and two furnaces to a city of 9,000 people, and a mercantile center, with twelve or fourteen furnaces and some of the largest industries in the South, in about four years. Four years ago it was a mere dot in the valley, with its two furnaces, its one store, its one line of railroad, its handful of blacks and whites. To-day it will take you hours to traverse the streets and count up the business places and industries, and the population pushes and elbows you at every turn.

The agriculture of this valley would alone support a tidy little city and gradually improve the fortunes of all, and this fact is the basis upon which many a stranger has made an investment. Barren hillsides and unfruitful plains and valleys will fight the growth of a city as does the annual recurrence of an epidemic.

Imagine a city without debt; hundreds of homes without mortgage; dozens of industries which went into operation clear of creditors, thousands of workmen receiving their hard cash every Saturday night, and you have a picture of Anniston. With nearly $12,000,000 cash invested here in enterprises, not one company owes a dollar which it cannot draw its check to cancel. If there is anything owing here it is from the workmen who have purchased lots or homes and are paying for them in instalments, finding it a sure and easy way to get a roof of their own over the heads of wife and children.

A city which owes no man a dollar, industries which are clear of debt, may be plucked a little now and then by the stringency of the money market, but there can be no such thing as hard times.

Now add to this novel state of financial affairs the fact that Anniston is absolutely without drink or drunkards, her workmen never strike and her record of crimes and offences scarcely includes anything graver than assault and battery or petty thieving. Add, also, that the city government is in the hands of men who have the confidence of the people, and that never a penny is misapplied nor suspicion directed against an official. She has churches and schools for all, and if not aptly and justly called "The Model City," then there is nothing in a name. I speak of it as a novel state of affairs. It is unfortunate for the country that we have so few towns in which these novelties exist. Neither the saloon-keeper nor the demagogue can find rest for his foot here. The 6,500 laboring men save at least $5,000 per week which go into saloons in other localities. The consequence of all this is that the homes of the working class in Anniston have a distinctive feature of their own—have more comforts and refinement than are to be met with among a like class elsewhere. When a workman is getting ahead he is content. All the orators in the Knights of Labor party might come here and spout their eloquence for a week without making a convert or bringing on a strike. The laboring people are not only paid the best wages, but are paid promptly, and they have no grievances. What the saloons have taken from them—because there are no saloons—has given them bank accounts and many of the luxuries of life. It is not a week ago that six pianos were sold here in one day to workmen, paid for with the "beer money" which other mechanics throw to the dogs. Such being the case, it is plain that Anniston is, beyond almost all other new cities of the South, the place where the workman may safely, wisely, and happily "pitch his tent."

CURRENCY OF THE CANNIBAL ISLANDS.

Mr. Walter Coote has described some curious moneys of the New Hebrides and Solomon Islands. On one of the islands he noticed a neatly-kept house, which he was told was the money-house. Entering it, he found a number of maps hanging from the roof, beneath which a fire was constantly kept up, under the effect of which they become covered with a black, glistening coating and adorned with festoons of soot. It was a man's business to keep the fire always burning, and so low as not to scorch the maps. A well-colored map is worth about as much as a well-grown, vigorous boar. This is the strangest of all kinds of money, for it must never be taken from the money house, even when the title of it is transferred from one owner to another. The inhabitants of Santa Cruz Island use for money rope-ends, about an inch thick, and ornamented with scarlet feathers, which are worn about the waist. The traveler could not obtain new coins of this kind, but found them current everywhere. The specimens he bought were already old, and the feathers grown dingy. The money of the Solomon Islands consists of neatly-worked pieces of shell of about the size of our shirt-buttons. They are strung on strings about four yards long, and are distinguished under the names of red and white money. Dog teeth are of higher value, and comparable to our gold coins. They are usually worn on a string around the neck. Mr. Coote saw a necklace of this kind that was valued at about $100. Marble rings are also worn on the breast for ornaments, and as valuable money.

A FIENDISH PROPOSAL.

"Be mine, dearest Angelina," exclaimed Roland De Vere, the handsome young dry goods clerk, as he dropped on his knees at the feet of Angelina St. Clair; "be mine and make me the happiest man the world contains."

"Are you sure you love me?" murmured Angelina as she gently swayed her ninety-nine cent fan and glanced half bashfully, half coquettishly at the ardent youth prone at her feet.

"Love you, Angelina? I would do anything for you. Be mine and I will do your shopping for you, match your ribbons, your sewing silks—"

"Sir," exclaimed Angelina, drawing herself up haughtily and fixing upon him a stony glare, "this is the proof of your love, is it? This is what you would do for me? 'Ha! Do my shopping! match my ribbons, my sewing silk!' and she laughed a low, demoniacal laugh that made his flesh creep. "Do my shopping! Deprive me of one of the greatest pleasures of my life, nay, the greatest—the solace, the joy of a woman's existence! Fiend!" she hissed, looking majestic in her wrath, while the eyes erst brimful of tenderness emitted flashes of indignant flame. "Fiend, wretch, demon, begone!"

And Roland De Vere retired with such precipitation that he overturned a "what-not" and smashed to smithereens a crooked-neck bust of Shakespeare, the man who, it will be remembered, was so long supposed to be the author of the plays of Bacon.

Roland De Vere will in the future beware of arousing a woman's wrath by such a fiendish proposal as to do her shopping for her. —Boston Courier.

FIRST ASCENT OF MONT BLANC.

Horace Benche de Saussure was born in 1740; and at an early age he was the associate of such men as Pictet, the astronomer; Bonnet, the philosopher and mathematician, and Albrecht Haller, of Berne. At the age of 19, when still a student at the Geneva Academy, he wrote a work on the "Nature of Fire." Becoming acquainted with the investigations of J. Pitton de Tournefort and the great Linnaeus, the young professor of mathematics commenced the study of botany. In 1762 he became professor of philosophy. About the same time electricity began to engage the attention of scientists of the period. After studying the works of Franklin, Volta, and Nollet, Saussure invented, in 1784, a portable electrometer, which he used in his investigations of aerial electricity. Saussure was a great traveler, and in 1768 he visited France, Belgium, and England. The year 1772 found him in the scientific circles of Paris. Subsequently he traveled in Italy, visiting Tuscany, the Italian Islands, and Rome, where he was historian, antiquary, naturalist and artist at the same time. He then proceeded to Naples and Sicily, the craters of which supplied scientific work for him. Everywhere he carried with him his meteorological and hygrometrical instruments and the indispensable hammer, collecting whatever seemed interesting to him. On returning from his travels he collected his experiences and gave them to the world.

Saussure's great merit consists in his study of the Alps, in which branch of investigation he was the pioneer, taking observations on air pressure, temperature, light, and electricity on their heights, which are still used at the present day. At the opening of the eighteenth century a perfect travel fever seized upon savants and the latter gradually penetrated into the Alpine world. The Alps of Savoy were the least known. The fertile and beautiful valley of the Arve was visited from Geneva, but the valley of Chamouni, lying at the foot of Mont Blanc, remained almost a closed book. And yet this valley is one of the most wonderful of the Alps. It is far from any route of communication, almost isolated, tending in a direction from northeast to southwest; from twenty to twenty-five miles long and only about a mile wide. It is watered by the Arve, and bounded on the northeast by the Col de Balme, on the southwest by the Lacha and Vaudagne, on the north by the Brevant and the chain of the Aiguilles range and by Mont Blanc (15,732 feet.) The village of Chamouni, which at that time was inhabited by chamois hunters and shepherds, was poor and but little known. In the summer of 1841 two Englishmen (Pocock and Wyndham) penetrated into the obscure valley and made it known to the world. From that time the number of visitors increased. Twenty years later two Englishmen made the first attempt on Mont Blanc, but did not reach the region of snow. Saussure, in his eagerness to study the Alps, also paid a visit to the valley, and ascended, within a radius of about two hundred and fifty square miles of the Alpine world, a number of peaks of average height. On August 1 to 3, 1787, finally, he made, in company with his servant and eighteen experienced guides, the first successful ascent of Mont Blanc. —Chambers' Journal.

"Do you mean to tell me," she asked, "that you are deliberately going to shoot little birds and timid, inoffensive animals?" "No, ma'am," he replied, "I will not go as far as to say that. If I have my usual luck I shall shoot nothing but my gun." —Harper's Bazar.
